KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DONALD KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, MASS.,

Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor). He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston. Send postal card for book.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it. Read the label.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime. Sold by all Druggists.

HONOR TO JEFFERSON

DEMOCRATIC LEADERS MEET AT HIS TOMB.

Natal Day of the Dead Statesman Is Fittingly Celebrated—Life and Works of the Democratic Party's Founder Portrayed by Orators.

Democrats at Monticello.

The 153d anniversary of Thomas Jefferson's birth was fittingly observed at Monticello, Va., where he lived and died, by a gathering of a large number of prominent Democrats from all sections of the country. The distinguished guests included Vice-President Stevenson, Secretary Herbert, Postmaster General Wilson, Attorney General Harmon, ex-Gov. Russell of Massachusetts, Chauncey F. Black and Lawrence Gardner, president and secretary, respectively, of the National Association of Democratic Clubs, and nearly two score of Senators and Representatives, besides a number of national committeemen. The party left Washington in a special train, arriving in Charlottesville about noon and proceeded at once to Monticello, about two miles distant from the town, where they were welcomed by Mr. Jefferson M. Levy, the present owner of the estate.

THOMAS JEFFERSON.

The exercises commenced shortly after 2 o'clock, and upon the broad lawns were assembled several hundred people, who had come from the surrounding towns and farms. Three addresses were delivered—the first by Chauncey F. Black, the second by ex-Gov. Russell and the third by Senator Daniel of Virginia. The greatest interest attached to the speeches of the two latter, Mr. Russell standing on a "sound money" platform and Senator Daniel combating his position with a free silver argument. The party returned to Washington at night.

Ex-Gov. Russell concluded an eloquent address upon the career of Jefferson with the following reference to the money question:

"We are in the midst of earnest agitation over our monetary standard. The agitation crosses party lines and tends to geographical division. It involves the welfare of our country and demands explicit and courageous treatment. To Jefferson it could never be an issue between Colorado and Wall street, or between a debtor and a creditor class. His broad democracy abhorred geographical and class division. With true patriotism he would ask where lie the honor and credit of our common country, where rest the interests of our whole people? For one I believe that our country's honor demands scrupulous fidelity to her plighted word, honest payment of her obligations and that the people's interest is best served by strictly upholding here the monetary standard of the civilized world. The secret of Jefferson's power and leadership was his steadfastness to principle. With firm belief in popular government, he trusted the intelligence of the people to correct passing errors and to establish safe and sound policies. Well has it been said of him that he never in any stress deserted or even temporarily disavowed his principles. He never lost faith or courage. He did not trim his sails to every flaw on the political ocean, but waited through the longest unpromising days, with a noble patience, the powerful and steady gale which he was convinced would in time carry the nation upon her true course."

FILLED WITH LIES.

Police Characterization of H. H. Holmes' Confession.

Murderer H. H. Holmes' complete, copyrighted confession of twenty-seven murders which he thinks he committed, and stories of six intended victims who got away, has put thorns in the easy chairs that the Chicago police have been holding down so comfortably since the arch fiend's conviction of the horrible Pitzel murder in Philadelphia.

In Holmes' confession the murderer of the Pitzel family lays claim to the glory of being a wholesale murderer. He says that he has killed twenty-seven people in all, while he tried to kill six more, but they got away from him. He gives the names of nineteen and describes two more, though he claims to have forgotten their names. The remaining half dozen of the twenty-seven he claims to have killed he makes no further mention of, except to include them in the totals of his list. The list includes nine young women, eight men and four children.

Holmes describes most of his murders very briefly and incompletely. Only in the murders of the Williams girls and the Pitzel family does he go into details.

That Holmes did not tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth in his confession is generally believed by the police officials and the newspaper men of Chicago, who spent a month last summer investigating Holmes' career during his few years' residence in the city. It seems to be the generally accepted idea that Holmes has exaggerated the number of his crimes in his almost insane craving for notoriety, and his morbid desire to be talked about and looked upon for the few more brief weeks that remain to him on earth as a fiend incarnate.

The police are naturally wrought up over the confession, a correspondent says, for the reason that most of the murders which Holmes brags of he claims were committed in Chicago. The police do not care to have the impression spread broadcast that a fiend can come to Chicago and kill people by the score without getting caught. They do not want any more "Holmes castles" established.

The police point out that several of Holmes' self-claimed "victims" are still alive. Robert Latimer, the ex-janitor of the "castle," is doing business with a red flag and lantern at an Englewood railroad crossing daily. Warner, another of his alleged victims, is reported to be alive.

MASSACRE IN MEXICO.

Zimatlan Indians Slaughter All Officials in Juquela.

A telegram from Oaxaca City, Mexico, says that the rebel Indians at the town of Juquela killed all the town councilors, school teachers, local priest, chief of police and the telegraph operator—in fact, everyone holding a Government place. The people are in terror and troops have been sent for the relief of the town.

The Indians began their plotting in Holy week, instigated by Indian lawyers, who informed them that the new State taxes were unconstitutional, but the authorities paid no attention to the excitement among them, considering they were engaged in their usual drunken celebration of the season. But, procuring arms and matches, they made a rush for the town hall, and the prefect hastily closed the doors, which they soaked with petroleum and burned, thus effecting an entrance. They sacked the place, and, penetrating the private apartments of the prefect, grossly maltreated the women of his family, and then, turning attention to the officials and armed servants, killed and wounded several. The Indians were possessed with fury, and it was absolutely impossible for a respectable inhabitant to control them, as all were drunk and maddened.

The mob, after sacking the town hall, went to the Federal stamp office and assailed it, burning down the outside door with petroleum, which also communicated fire to the entire house, placing Collector Graciada, who was on the roof with his clerks, in a condition of the utmost peril. They managed to escape by the rear, jumping for their lives. Many shops were burned after being sacked, and the Indians decorated themselves with stolen finery. They all fled on the approach of the soldiers, and are now in the hills.

CANDIDATE FOR VICE PRESIDENT

Congressman Turner Mentioned for Second Place on Democratic Ticket.

Congressman Henry G. with the President. He represents the Eleventh district of Georgia. His home when in that State is in Quitman. He was not born in Georgia. He is a native of Franklin County, North Carolina, and is 57 years old. Mr. Turner's education was received at the University of Virginia, but he is not a graduate of that school. In 1857 he was compelled to leave college owing to the death of his father. One year later he removed to Georgia and adopted the profession of a teacher. When the war came he joined issues with the Confederacy and fought as officer and private. In 1865 he was admitted to the bar and soon became active in politics. He was presidential elector in 1872 and was three times elected to the Legislature of Georgia. He run for the Forty-seventh Congress and was elected. He has been elected to every Congress since he first took his seat. In the last election he had 3,000 more votes than his opponent.

ARMY HARDSHIPS.

None One but a Veteran Can Realize the Sufferings from Army Life.

It Often Makes Our Able-Bodied Men Helpless Invalids—The Story of One Who Suffered for Twenty Years.

From the Farmers' Voice, Chicago, Ill.

Edson A. Wood, who now lives at 930 Washington boulevard, Chicago, Ill., was born on a farm in Wyoming County, N. Y., fifty years ago. As a young man he suffered two sun strokes in the fields. When the war broke out, he joined the 97th Illinois Volunteers, with which he served two years, when sickness forced his discharge. The effects of the sun strokes and his army life undermined his health and he soon found his brain, heart and kidneys were affected. For eight years he was with the West Chicago Street Car Company; but was forced to seek lighter work, as the exposure increased his bronchial and asthmatic troubles. His constitution gradually but surely breaking down, strange dizzy spells becoming more frequent, he finally sought relief in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

He said to a reporter: "It was some time about a year ago when I was very poorly, that my head was giving me a great deal of trouble, dizzy spells, aches and queer feelings, and then I also had a strange feeling of uncertainty in the use of my lower limbs when walking.

"Physicians examined my condition closely and were of the opinion that I had all the first symptoms of locomotor ataxia, and I believe they were right, also last summer I had a very hard time with an attack of tonsilitis and neuralgia, from which I did not recover for some time. It was then that I commenced to take these Pink Pills, and had only taken a few boxes when I discovered a remarkable change for the better in every way. The pills seemed to relieve me of aches and pains, the symptoms of locomotor ataxia have left me entirely, and they have made me strong and feel like myself.

"I am going to continue with the use of the pills for the reason that having relieved me of the ailments I thought had come to stay, having been caused thirty years ago from hardships in the army, I am practically rid of them and will lose no efforts when I have the remedy at hand to keep them rid. I am only too glad to tell all my friends what experience I have had with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and when they see the good physical condition I am in now, although near sixty years of age, they will come to the same conclusion as myself.

"The above is a correct statement of facts concerning myself.

(Signed) EDSON A. WOOD."

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 22d day of January, 1896.

ROBERT ANSLEY, Notary Public.

A Cat Worth Having.

One of the greatest successes in the history of this country is that achieved by Boston's unique 5-cent magazine, The Black Cat. In seven months it has reached a sale of one quarter of a million copies per issue. The chief reason for this is that each number contains half a dozen of the most original and fascinating stories that brains and genius can produce and money can buy.

The Philadelphia Call aptly says: Its phenomenal success has already earned for it the title, "The Marvel of the Magazine World," and it would certainly be impossible to find in a single number of any other publication such captivating tales as are published monthly in The Black Cat. And the Boston Post pronounces it the most fascinating 5 cents' worth on earth.—Rochester Post Express.

This most fascinating of all the modern periodicals is issued by The Story Publishing Company, Boston, Mass., at 5 cents a copy, or 50 cents a year.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. RIPANS TABULES

Mr. H. F. Barbes, a reporter for the Sunday Herald, published at Canton, O., under date of May 27, 1895, writes to the Ripans Chemical Company that he knows a working man who has been benefited by Ripans Tabules after a severe attack of the Grippe, and he appends the following statement, with permission to publish: "Testimonial of Thos. J. Meals, of the city of Canton, Stark County, O.: I had an attack of the grippe four years ago this spring that left me in a bad way. My nervous system was broken down and my digestive apparatus in a condition that made me miserable for days. While able to work at my trade as shearman in a rolling mill, I suffered more or less all the time with my stomach. Bitters and tonics were literally taken by the gallon, and every variety of pills and potions that promised relief. I derived some benefit from the use of some of them if I continued taking them, but if I quit a few days my old trouble would return. Noticing the advertisement of the Ripans Tabules, for impaired and bad digestion, I concluded to invest in a few of them, which I am pleased to inform you have proven all or more than I expected of them. While I have taken but a few of them, they have done me more good than all the other remedies that I have tried. They relieve the belching and sour stomach almost at once, and I feel better in every way since I commenced taking them. The distressing headaches, which I always had preceding a fit of indigestion, have entirely left me. I will be glad to recommend the Tabules to anybody suffering from stomach troubles.

TIN WEDDING.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed Cutter, who live in McIntyre's addition, celebrated their tenth anniversary, or tin wedding, last night. A large number of invitations were sent out and nearly all who were the recipients were present at their elegant home last night. The evening was spent in a real old-fashioned social time. No one was present who did not enjoy themselves. Mr. and Mrs. Cutter were presented many useful and valuable presents, among which were a lovely upholstered parlor suit, parlor lamp, silver butter dish, water set, table cloths, towels, brooms and an abundance of tinware. Following the social amusements came a dainty luncheon which was served in two courses, tin cups and tin plates being used. The reporter on answering a midnight call at his door, was presented with an assortment of the luncheon, which consisted of biscuit and butter, cold ham, four different kinds of cake and oranges and bananas. We extend thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Cutter for this kind remembrance. We understand those present enjoyed the luncheon much. Hank Shull wishes us to state that all had an abundance of this elegant luncheon except Wils Thrush, who began early and closed late with a "failing appetite."

Those present were: Messrs. and Mesdames F. Wise, S. S. Potter, F. Avery, John Kruger, Geo. Link, D. N. Fitch, Harvey Crory, Wils Thrush, Wm. Phillips, Jas. Myers, John Maxwell, Frank Campbell and Mrs. Click, Mrs. Errick, Mrs. Katie Rittenhouse, Henry Shull and Mrs. Newton Lemon, of Francisville, Ind., and Mrs. George Howe, of Warsaw, Ind.

means the prevention of scores of cases of colds, coughs, bronchitis, pneumonia, and consumption. Wet feet do not directly make the germs of consumption appear in the lungs; but they do cause coughs and colds and inflammation of the throat and lungs; weaken the whole system. In this condition the germs of consumption find just the soil in which to work.

Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil, with Hypophosphites, is a most valuable remedy for restoring the system to health before these germs get the upper hand.

SCOTT'S EMULSION has been endorsed by the medical profession for twenty years. (Ask your doctor.) This is because it is always palatable—always uniform—always contains the purest Norwegian Cod-liver Oil and Hypophosphites.

Put up in 50 cent and $1.00 sizes. The small size may be enough to cure your cough or help your baby.

Doctors Disagree as to the Cause and Treatment of Catarrh

Nearly everyone has their head choked up, more or less, with catarrh in some form. Every physician has his own method of treating this disease. Dr. Strathmore says the profession is singularly unsuccessful in the treatment of catarrh. He claims camphor is one of the best remedies for inflammation, such as catarrah, cold in the head, etc., and says that he prescribes Pretzinger's Catarrh Balm as it is the only preparation that contain camphor in large quantities and he has found it singularly successful in the treatment of the disease. He long ago consigned his douches and other instruments to the attic as he considers their use injurious. Mrs. Alfred Arnold, of Startle, Jefferson Co., Ohio, writes that she had catarrh for eighteen years and tried many remedies "but nothing ever helped me like Pretzinger's Catarrh Balm. My head is clear and my catarrh is gone." A small sample may be obtained by sending 2ct. stamp to Pretzinger Bros., Chemists, Dayton, Ohio.

John D. Fisher.

All our business men know John Fisher, the genial traveling man, and at Waterloo where he was born and reared, everybody knows him. And all will be painfully surprised to hear that he and his accomplished wife have been divorced. But such is the case. The Ft. Wayne Sentinel of April 14 says:

Very quietly Judge O'Rourke granted a divorce last Saturday evening which has not yet found its way into the papers. John D Fisher was divorced from Celia M. Fisher. Mr. Fisher is the well known traveling man of this city, and Mrs. Fisher is also well known in this city. She spent three years in California studying music and returned here a few months ago after finishing her course. She sang in one or two public gatherings while here and proved herself a magnificent soprano. After remaining here a couple of weeks she left for New York, where she will continue her musical studies. The fact that she desired to adopt life on the operatic stage and insisted on doing so led to difficulty and the separation followed. Mr. Fisher is in this city but Mrs. Fisher is still in New York. John F. Rodabaugh was the attorney for Mr. Fisher.

Mrs. Fisher will be remembered as Celia Ward, daughter of Dr. Ward, who several years ago was a practicing physician in Waterloo. His brother Dr. Ward, about the same time located in Auburn remaining only a short time however. Both families had accomplished and talented girls who were very popular in young society. Mrs. Fisher's talents were largely in the line of vocal music and for several years she was the soprano singer in the Presbyterian choir at Waterloo. Her sister married Frank Long, who has resided a number of years in San Diego, Calif., and we suppose it was there that Mrs. Fisher pursued her musical studies. We are sorry to hear of their separation.

THE HABITS OF CHILDREN

Should be closely watched and regulated by mothers. Carelessness in childhood often leads to serious troubles in after life. The digestive organs and bowels should be kept in the best possible condition to insure good health, not only for the present, but for years to come. REGULATOR'S MEETING

James McClellan went up to Ligonier this morning to attend the meeting ing of the old "Regulators." It will be no doubt, a pleasant meeting for the old fellows who had the courage to clear the country of a lot of lawless characters that then infested it. Every one else seemed to be afraid of them, and even courts and juries could not be relied on, as they stood in more or less terror of the lawless element that they felt sure had a representative or two in every neighborhood. It was believed that the property, if not the lives, of those that opposed the criminal element would be in danger by such opposition. So horse thieves, counterfeiters and robbers went unpunished till these "regulators" took the matter in hand.

Tin Plate.

An exchang has an item about this industry that plainly refutes the oft repeated statement that the McKinley high duty built up the tin plate industry and that the low duties of the Wilson bill destroyed it. This is what a republican paper says:

The American Tinplate Factory at Ellwood, will be enlarged to meet the rapidly increasing demand for its product. From a four-mill plant in 1892, employing 300 men, it has grown, until now it is a sixteen-mill plant, twenty-one stacks, employing 1250 men with an output of 15,000 tinplates per week and a monthly pay roll of $35,000.

For Fast Driving.

Three Young Fellows From Garrett Before Squire Walters.

Three young fellows from Garrett, giving their names as, James Decker, John Raby and John Greenwalt, were arrested by Marshal West between seven and eight o'clock last night for fast driving. The three men were in a buggy to which were driven two horses. It appears that they were driving very fast on both Main and Seventh streets and when near the Lake Shore depot ran against a pole and we believe, broke some part of the buggy. The team belonged to Mr. Tonneson, of Garrett, and after they had taken the speedy ride then drove into Trout's livery stable and here the team was cared for and at about 11 o'clock, Mr. Tonneson came after it. The three fellows were locked in the calaboose and this afternoon were brought up before Squire Walter.

We saw this team wildly rushing westward about 7-30. The men were lashing and jerking the horses, which set them wild. As they passed the crossing north of the COURIER office, they narrowly missed running over a a number of persons on the crossing. An example should be made of such reckless fellows, or somebody will be killed by them. The trial continues as we go to press.

Rev. Meese Succeeding

Treasurer Fair called up to-day to report the progress of the series of meetings now being conducted at Butler Center, by Rev. W. L. Meese. He says they are having one of the best meetings he ever attended. The interest is great, and the best of order is maintained. There have been already, about twenty converted, and still the interest does not decline. They will continue this week, and possibly longer. This week they waited on him and made him a donation including some $10 in cash, and there was a regular love feast between the good minister and the grateful people. Mr. Meese has the confidence of all who know him, and it is the knowledge of his sterling qualities that help so greatly to make all his evangelist work successful. We are always pleased to record the progress of his efforts for good.

Editor Married.

Generally, newspaper men don't need to get married, for they are already provided with better halves that are the pick of the land. But before he became an editor, John W. Nusbaum, of the Shipshewana Tribune had the misfortune to lose by death, his estimable wife. Since then he has lived by and for himself and the young singers, his children known to lovers of music as the "Young Hoosier Glee Club." Now, these young people are about able to care for themselves, and he has taken to himself another wife to share his joys and sorrows, care for his household and family and help spend the subscriptions that come rolling into the Tribune Office. (We mean, that ought to come in.) The fortunate lady is Mrs. Minnie Haynes, of Goshen. The groom is a brother of Dr. Nusbaum, of Auburn. They were married in that city April 15. The next day, a reception was given them at their future home at Shipshewana. We think, that in deference to the bride, the authorities of that burg should hereafter call their town "Minnieapolis" and get rid once and forever, of the most ridiculous name in the great state of Indiana.

Epilepsy 20 Years.

Cured by Dr. Miles' Nervine.

A few years ago, Mr. L. W. Gallaher, was an extensive, successful expert manufacturer of lumber products. Attacked with epilepsy, he was obliged to give up his business. The attacks came upon him most inopportunely. One time falling from a carriage, at another down stairs, and often in the street. Once he fell down a shaft in the mill, his injuries nearly proving fatal. Mr. Gallaher writes from Milwaukee, Feb. 16, '95.

"There are none more miserable than epileptics. For 20 years I suffered with epileptic fits, having as high as five in one night. I tried any number of physicians, paying to one alone, a fee of $500.00 and have done little for years but search for something to help me, and have taken all the leading remedies, but received no benefit. A year ago my son, Chas. S. Gallaher, druggist at 111 Reed St., Milwaukee, gave me Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, and I tried it with gratifying results. Have had but two fits since I began taking it. I am better now in every way than I have been in 20 years."

GRAVEL ROAD LAW

Some of our people probably are not aware of the fact, that our legislature in 1895, passed a new turnpike or gravel road law, by which the question of construction is left to a vote of the people in the township or townships through which the road is to be completed. It is provided in that act that when a petition signed by fifty freeholders and citizens of any township or townships contiguous to each other including any incorporated town, shall be presented to the county commissioners, asking that any road or roads therein be graveled, said commissioners, shall have an estimate made of the cost of the same, which shall be published, and then they shall submit the question to a vote of the people of such townships and towns, and if a majority of the votes cast be in favor of graveling said road, said commissioners shall proceed to gravel the same, and for the purpose of paying therefore shall issue the bonds of said county payable in ten annual installments drawing 5 per cent interest and sell said bonds for the purpose of meeting the payment of said bonds when due, the commissioners shall then lay a tax on all the property, both real and personal of said township and towns each year to pay one of said installments of bonds and interest, until all are paid. After the road is completed it is the duty of the county commissioners to keep it in repair, and for that purpose shall appoint a superintendent whose duty it shall be to keep the same in repair forever thereafter, and all the expense thereof must be paid by the entire county, by a special tax levied for that purpose.

Under this statute the greatest benefit is the provision for keeping the road in repair at the expense of the county and thereby relieving the road districts from that labor entirely and enabling them to use the road fund to repair other roads leading to said gravel road.

A Financial Plan

Congress seems unable or unwilling to make a law that shall relieve the government of the difficulties arising from the need of keeping up a gold reserve of 100 millions, as well as making our financial system simpler and safer. While things continue as they are, our financial system becomes more confused and expensive. People have a right to demand that a general change shall be made in the way of the supplying money for the uses of the people and the government. The power to do this lies with congress. Why cannot this body stop wasting time on unimportant matters, and try some plan. Here is one way in which a reoranization of our monetary and financial management could be brought about. It may not be the best, but it will be a vast improvement on what we are now burdened with.

1. Let the Federal government issue a paper standard dollar, make it a legal tender for all debts, public and private; make these dollars redeemable at the pleasure of the holder in 30-year, two per cent bonds, payable in gold at maturity or payable on demand in legal tender dollars.

2. Redeem all outstanding greenbacks, treasury notes and national bank notes, and as fast as redeemed issue a like amount of said legal tender dollars.

3. Permit the unlimited coinage of gold and silver at present ratio of 16 to 1 and make both gold and silver a legal tender for all debts both public and private to the amount of $100.

4. Issue no legal tender money in denominations of less than $20.

5. Authorize government to issue certificates in the presen form, for gold and silver coin. Each redeemable in the coin designated.

6. With the legal tender notes issued to redeem national bank notes, purchase 4 per cent bonds and retire them.

7. There are now in circulation $191,277,000 national bank notes. And 4 per cent on that amount of bonds, would be $7,651,080 per annum all of which might be saved by this arrangement.

8. The legal tender notes would be the popular money, for the reason that they would be secured by the faith of the government, and no other money would be a legal tender for over $100 The 10,000 banks in the United States both public and private would use it for their reserves.

9. Gold and silver money would pass, each on its own merits, each with equal rights and privileges.

10. It will pay our people, as well as congress to be studying up some such plan, as it will be ruinous to go on much longer as we now are.

DROWNED!

Two Men Go Over The Dam At Leo.

PLEASURE RIDING

O. MAXFIELD AND G. ARNOLD ESCAPE

The Bodies of the Unfortunate Men Not Yet Found.

The little town of Leo located on the banks of the St. Joe River, about fourteen miles southeast of Auburn is greatly excited over the drowning of two men in the river at that place. The particulars concerning their terrible fate are as follows: Frank Dailey of St. Joe, Will Brevard, Orange Maxfield and George Arnold of Leo, were boat riding on the river above the dam. Mr. Brevard was rowing the boat and it seems was trying to see just how near the dam he could go without going over. But like many men, many times, he ventured just a little too far and their boat at once started over the dam. The men at once saw the dangerous position they were in and one of them, Orange Maxfield jumped out of the boat and caught on a tree top He managed to escape the dangerous ride over the dam, but the other men went plunging into the whirlpool below the dam. In some manner Geo. Arnold was thrown, it seems, farther from the dam and escaping the whirlpool of the water he swam to the shore The other two men Daily and Brevard were seen trying to grasp the boat but soon sank and their bodies have not as yet been recovered. The horrible sight was witnessed by several parties who were fishing along the bank below the dam. Some men were within twenty-five feet of the men where they were struggling with the water. But no man with common sense would venture into the whirlpool to assist those who were so unfortunate.

Mr. Brevard was at one time a resident of Garret. He married a daughter of Dr. Murphy of Leo, and since the death of Mrs. Murphy, Mr. Brevard and wife have resided in Leo, keeping house for the doctor. He leaves a wife and other relatives to mourn his departure. Mr. Daily is a resident of St. Joe. He conducts a blacksmith shop there. He and his wife and three children drove to Leo in the morning to visit during the day in the family of Mr. Brevard. The unfortunate accident is one that certainly will break the heart of the mother and children. It was certainly a trying scene for her to return to her home with her children while the father lay in the bottom of the St. Joe River, and probably may never be found. The unfortunate affair should be a lesson to our readers. People cannot be too careful when on the water. It is bad enough to be on the water below the dam and still worse to be above the dam and, as in this case, go over.

LATER:—Our special correspondent at St. Joe gives the facts exactly as they appear above, but came after our item was in type. In addition, we learn later that Maxfield was saved by clinging to a large stone till parties on shore rescued him. Arnold was unconscious when dragged from the water below the falls. Frank Dailey's body was recovered this forenoon, about five rods below the dam They are still dragging the river for Brevard. Several St. Joe people are over there helping.

ELECTRIC BITTERS

Electric Bitters is a medicine suited for any person, but perhaps more generally needed in the Spring, when the languid exhausted feeling prevails, when the liver is torpid and sluggish and the need of a tonic and alterative is felt. A prompt use of this medicine has often averted long and perhaps fatal bilious fevers. No medicine will act more surely in counteracting and freeing the system from the malarial poison. Headache, Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness yield to Electric Bitters. Only fifty cents per bottle at Robbins & McCord's Drug Store.

HAVE YOU A COLD?

If so, then, instead of taking so much quinine and other strong medicines, take a pleasant and stomach and bowel remedy, which will cleanse the system, and you will be surprised how quickly the cold will leave you. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will do this better than any other. Trial size 10c (10 doses 10c), larger size 50c and $1. Robbins and McCord's. 22

Clothes Found

Dave Smith who lives about one mile east of town found a suit of clothes in an old straw stack yesterday. Mr. Smith and son, Marion were hauling the straw and scattering it over the field and in tearing down the stack discovered the suit of clothes. The stack was probably ten years old and the clothes were nearly ruined. From a close examination they seemed to be of a good quality of cloth. The mystery is how did they get there. Someone probably stole them and stuck them in the old straw stack for safe keeping.

Prohibitionists Meet

And Nominate a County and Congressional Ticket.

The Prohibitionists met in county and congressional convention in the court house to-day. The meeting was called to order at 10:15 by the county chairman Chas. Eckhart, and on motion Mr. Eckhart was made chairman of the convention and John Baxter secretary. The selection of county chairman was next in order and Charles Eckhart was unanimously elected. The election of township committeemen was next in order and the convention proceeded to elect. After an able corps of committeemen was chosen, the nomination of county officers was had. The election resulted as follows:

Obituary.

Henry Ernest was born in Perry Co. Pa., July 12, 1820, and died at his home in Fairfield township, April 9, 1896. From Pennsylvania, he moved to Ohio in 1834, from there to DeKalb county Ind., in March 1846. He was married to Lydia Wells in 1847. To them were born 4 children; three sons and one daughter, who with his aged campanion survive him.

He was a member of the German Baptist church about 54 years. The faith by which he lived gave him triumph in death. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. Jeremiah Gump, April 12, and his remains were interred in Fairfield cemetery.

We wish to thank sincerely the kind friends and neighbors, who gave their assistance and sympathy during the sickness and death of our husband and father.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr King's New Discovery as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife While I was pastor of the Baptist church at Rices Junction she was brought down with pneumonia succeeding lagrippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interuption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in working and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottle free at Robbins & McCord's drug store Regular size 50c and $1:00.

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

The fac-simile signature of Chas. H. Fletcher is on every wrapper.

DOINGS OF THE DAY.

SUMMARY OF THE NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Eventful Happenings in Every Known Hemisphere—Fires, Accidents, Crimes, Politics, Religion, Commerce and Crops, Sandwiched with Minor Affairs.

Dygaert Released.

Secretary Olney has received a cable dispatch from Consul General Williams at Havana confirming the news that Walter Grant Dygert (or as his name reads when properly spelled "Dygaert") the young American in whose behalf the Illinois delegation in Congress had taken so much interest, had been released from his confinement in the prison of Guines, Cuba, where he had been incarcerated through a confusion of identity with a Cuban insurgent known as "El Inglectas" and had arrived in Havana. Both he and the brothers Diaz, concerning whom the Baptist Church South have been much exercised, will leave for the United States by the next steamer.

Blew Up a New Jewish Synagogue.

While Isaac Crottfield, the sexton, was hunting for a gas leak in the new Hebrew synagogue, at Lancaster, Pa., an explosion occurred which shattered the building, blew up a portion of the main flooring of the main auditorium and broke all the memorial windows. The building was also somewhat damaged by fire. Crottfield was struck by flying timbers and badly injured. The loss will be quite heavy. The synagogue was to have been dedicated the same evening.

Fatal Feast.

At Evansville, Ind., two children ate of an insect poison, and death relieved the sufferings of the little ones. They were Johnny Dickson, the 4-year-old son of B. F. Dickson, Superintendent of the L. and N. Railroad at Evansville, and Loretta Ricketts, the 6-year-old daughter of W. T. Ricketts. The children found the mixture in a can, and, with one of two others, ate of the stuff. Little Russell Dodge escaped because his mother came after him about the time the feast began.

A Murderous Farmer.

Edward Karleskind, a farmer, residing three and a half miles from Meadville, Pa., shot his wife three times in the head and then cut his own throat with a razor, dying instantly. The woman lived two hours after the tragedy. The only witness was a 3-year-old daughter. Karleskind was 41 years of age and his wife 25. The couple had frequently quarreled, the husband having an ungovernable temper. The murdered woman was his third wife

Killed By Electricity.

Springfield (Mass.) special: William Hayes, aged 22, dynamo engineer, was instantly killed at the station of the United States Electric company. He found that the current in the arc lamps was reversed, and attemped to locate the difficulty. In working at the switchboard he pulled out a plug and sent a current of 2,500 volts through his body. The employes used the regular methods to restore him, but without avail.

A Family Blotted Out.

About a month ago John Fleenor, while hauling logs near Whitesburg, Ky., was killed by a log falling on him. During the great onslaught of water, which devastated the whole of Eastern Kentucky and Southwest Virginia, the mother and only brother and sister of Fleenor were drowned. A few years since the father of the Fleenors met death in a terrible manner, thus the whole family have died from unnatural causes.

The Wall Collapsed.

The Tiffin, Ohio, Advertiser newspaper building was damaged to the extent of several thousand dollars by the east wall of the block falling, owing to excavations which were being made in the basement. More than a score of people were at work in the building at the time, but all escaped injury. Arrangements have been made to get out the newspaper at a neighboring office until the building can be repaired.

Only Spent a Dollar.

Columbus (Ohio) special: The first statement of campaign expenses made under the Garfield corrupt practice act was filed with Secretary of State Taylor by Hon. W. S. Kerr, Republican candidate for Congress in the Fourteenth District. Mr. Kerr's affidavit states that he expended but $1 in his campaign. Of this amount he says 50 cents was for railroad fare and 50 cents for hotel accommodations.

Fatal Wreck.

A special from Mount Vernon, Ind., says that a west-bound freight on the Louisville and Nashville Railroad ran into the rear end of a passenger train on the Evansville and Terre Haute Railroad, killing Brakemen W. E. Driscol and F. R. Thompson and seriously injuring Charles Finney, Jacob Laib, William Turner and Pat Maroney, all railroaders. No passengers were hurt.

For a Shorter Day.

In an interview at Pittsburg President Gompers, of the American Federation of Lobor, stated that over 500,000 men would make a demand for a shorter day on May 1st and that most of them would get it without a struggle.

Dropped Dead.

George Washington Black, one of the wealthiest men in Noble County, Ind., dropped dead at Albion. Apoplexy is supposed to have been the cause. He was 80 years old.

Greater New York.

The New York Assembly has passed the greater New York bill over the vetoes of Mayors Strong of New York, and Wurster of Brooklyn, by a vote of 73 to 69. The Senate has already passed the measure over the vetoes, and it now goes to Gov. Morton. The opinion is general that the Governor will sign the bill.

Three Men Drowned.

While leaving work at lock 9, near Charleston, W. Va., a skiff which contained nine men upset and three were drowned. The dead are: Henry [illegible], colored, Gallipolis, O.; Richard Dickinson, colored; John Jordan, white. The other [illegible] were saved.

DEATH AND DESTRUCTION.

A Hurricane Sweeps Over Northwestern Ohio.

Fremont (O.) special: Tuesday afternoon a terrific wind storm, accompanied by a heavy downpouring of rain was seen approaching this city from a southwesterly direction. Just as it appeard ready to strike the city, it swerved around to the west, then north in a semi-circular direction, carrying all before it. The path traversed was about one-half mile wide and about three miles northwest of this city. The tail end struck here but did no particular damage. But in the main path of the storm, disaster resulted. Shortly after the passage of the storm, news was brought to town of a terrible calamity by those who had been sent to gain aid and succor. When the party of physicians, reporters, and others reached the scene, a horrible view of ruin and injury was presented. Valuable timber lands were laid low; farm residence, buildings, etc., were demolished; fences scattered, live stock killed, and worst of all, dead and injured people were scattered about the strip of wasted land, giving to the whole a resemblance to a battlefield. The home of W. L. Greene, a well-to-do farmer, was crushed like an eggshell. Greene was found lying mangled and dead some distance from the house.

DEADY FROSTS.

The California Fruit District Severely Blighted.

San Francisco special: The frosts of the last ten days were uncommonly severe. From all parts of the fruit growing section have come reports that the crops were much hurt, partly ruined or wholly destroyed. The only crumb of encouragement to be picked up by the fruit men so far is the fact that predictions almost as bad have been made in previous years and when the harvest came in, proved to have been greatly exaggerated. The worst feature of this untimely visitation, however, exists in the belief on the part of the leading commission dealers that the reports from different parts of the State have been underrated rather than overdrown. All the early fruit will be almost a dead failure and peaches, apricots, prunes and grapes are sure to be less than a third of a crop. All sections suffered alike. The almond crop in all parts of the State is almost a total failure.

Pardons for Cuban Insurgents.

Havana special: Captain General Weyler has issued a proclamation which he expects will result in many of the rebels laying down their arms. The proclamation says in substance that the insurgents in the province of Pinar Del Rio have been demoralized by the obstacles which prevent their passing into the military line from Mariel to Majana and by their constant persecution by the troops. It being known that many of the insurgents are desirous of surrendering, but fear to do so, believing that they will be shot, he therefore orders that all the rebel leaders and followers who during the next twenty days shall present themselves with their arms to the military authorities in that province will be pardoned. Pardon will also be extended to those rebels and rebel sympathizers who surrender without arms. The military authorities reserve the right to decide where those who surrender shall reside.

Bound and Robbed by Masked Robbers.

Wooster (Ohio) special: Masked men, four in number, and armed with revolvers, burst open a door to the country residence of aged and wealthy Isaac Munson. Bert Cassidy, hired man, and Munson and wife were guarded by two of the gang. The others searched the house and secured $200 cash and a lot of notes and jewelry. The three persons were then bound hand and foot to prevent their escape, in which condition they remained for over two hours. Mrs. Munson is in a critical condition, as the result of the shock from fright.

Gas Explosion at Chicago.

An explosion of gas in the Lelande lodging house, No. 321 Clark street, Chicago, injured four men and damaged the front part of the building. The injured are: J. F. Worth, night clerk; A. Goddard, night clerk; John Muller, bed maker, and Charles Carter. Worth noticed an odor of gas and mentioned the fact to Goddard. Together they commenced a search and found a leak in a main in the baggage room on the second floor behind the office. Worth struck a match and instantly there was an explosion.

Children Burned.

The 3-year-old daughter of Octave Lipotte of St. Rocks, Ont., during the temporary absence of her mother, overturned a lamp, which exploded and set fire to the child's clothing and also to those of her 18-months-old sister. Both were burned to death.

Blinded By a Wire.

Carl Geis, a member of the Brookville, Ind., fire department, met with a painful accident while stretching a wire clothes line. It loosened and flew back, striking him in the eye, and destroying the sight.

Hurt in a Runaway.

Joseph A. Goddard, one of the wealthiest citizens of Muncie, Ind., and its biggest wholesale grocer, was probably fatally injured in a runaway.

An Iowa Blaze.

THE CAMPAIGN IN THE SOUDAN.

An Egyptian Camel Corps, Armed Men with Modern Breech-Loading Rifles, Patrolling the Hot Sands in Search of the Enemy.

The eyes of the world are now fixed on the Soudan, where the Anglo-Egyptian expedition is marching toward Dongola to crush the power of the Khalifa Abdullah, who succeeded the Mahdi, of Khartoum fame. The advance guard of the expedition has reached Aksheh, between the second and third cataracts of the Nile, without encountering any of the Khalifa's forces, which it is believed are concentrated at Donkola. The frontier march of the expedition is through the Nubian desert, where perils of many kinds are numerous. Dealing with the march of the expedition we print an illustration taken from the Illustrated London News, of an Egyptian camel corps patrolling the hot sands in search of the enemy.

OHIO HAS A CYCLONE.

Two Men Instantly Killed—Scores of Houses and Barns Demolished.

A cyclone which proved fatal to two persons and which did damage amounting to many thousands of dollars passed across Sandusky County, Ohio, Monday afternoon. It was just 3 o'clock when a big, black, whirling cloud was seen in the southwest approaching at a fearful speed and apparently headed for the heart of Fremont. People on the streets cried out to each other in fear and ran in search of a place of refuge. In five minutes the cloud had gone on its way, passing close to the city's western outskirts and disappearing in the distance. In its wake was a path of desolation, ruin and death.

William L. Greene, together with his son, James, and the latter's family, occupied a large frame residence on a farm directly in the path of the storm. The house was crushed, W. L. Greene was killed outright and his mangled remains carried some distance from the site of the building.

Mrs. James Greene was badly injured and will probably not recover. Her infant child was peacefully sleeping in a cradle when the house was struck. The cradle and its occupant were picked up like a feather and carried quite a distance in an adjoining field. When discovered the cradle was smashed, but the babe was unharmed.

At the farm of Amos Hetrick John Low and Hetrick were shearing sheep in a barn. The barn was leveled to the ground. Low was blown out of the barn across a forty-acre field against a tree and instantly killed. Hetrick escaped with light injuries. A young child of Charles Tucker's was badly injured by flying pieces of timber. Abraham Fought, a farmer, was struck and an arm and leg were broken. Ruins, scattered far and wide, are all that are now left of what were a few hours ago many ideal country houses and farms.

At Muscalong creek, where the Wheeling and Lake Erie Railroad lies in the path of the storm, fearful damage was done. A large tree was blown across a freight train, striking the caboose, crushing it like an egg shell. Several trainmen were in the caboose at the time, but they miraculously escaped injury. Booktown, the small hamlet, was laid waste. Not a building is left standing.

The roof of the Hatfield brick school house, three miles northwest of Fostoria, was blown off and the gable ends fell in, while school was in session, breaking the arm of the teacher, Miss Belle Norris. Several children were injured, one little boy named Hatfield being carried several hundred feet by the wind.

At New Castle, Pa., there were many narrow escapes from death. The front of Charles Earle's west side store was blown in. Three school buildings were completely unroofed, while the Catholic Church suffered a similar fate.

THOSE WORLD'S FAIR MEDALS.

Strange as It May Seem, Some of Them Have Been Distributed.

The long-expected distribution of Columbian World's Fair diplomas and medals has begun at last, and Monday about 3,000 diplomas and medals, covering all of the successful German exhibitors at the fair, were turned over to Baron Thielmann, the German ambassador, who will ship them immediately to his Government for distribution. Those awarded to American exhibitors will be ready for delivery within the next ten days or two weeks at the farthest, and the shipments to England, France, Russia, Spain, Italy and other foreign countries will be ready for delivery to their respective diplomatic representatives here within the next month.

THE WORLD'S GREATEST ZOO.

New York Is to Have One That Will Cover 300 Acres.

New York is to have a zoological garden that will surpass anything of the kind ever before known. Plans have nearly been completed by the New York Zoological Society, which is made up of some of the representative men of the metropolis, to give that city a zoo that will be in keeping with its importance.

The biggest existing zoological garden has sixty-six acres, but the one proposed will greatly exceed these figures. A site for the garden has not yet been selected, but 300 acres will be set aside somewhere in the city for the purpose. When a suitable place is found buildings, etc., will be erected and the society will make a call for popular subscriptions. It is hoped by this means to raise $250,000, which the Legislature will be asked to increase to $400,000.

A new principle will be carried out in regard to the wild animals, that of placing native and foreign animals of the tropical, temperate and colder regions as far as possible among their natural surroundings. It will be possible to do this, considering the large area that will be at the disposal of the society. The larger animals of North America will be shown in the free range of large inclosures, in which the rocks, forests and natural features of the landscape will give the people an impression of the life, habits and native surroundings of these different types.

It is proposed that the lion house shall open into a sandy inclosure in which palms and other tropical plants will give a perfect impression of the natural habitat of the lion. The first main feature will be the collection of native animals, many of which are rapidly becoming extinct. The value of exhibiting them under natural condition will be very great.

BIG RAILROAD BRIDGE.

New York Central's Steel Draw Over the Harlem River, New York.

The great engineering work of elevating the four tracks of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad over the Harlem river in New York city is completed and trains to and from the Grand Central station at Forty-second street now traverse the new steel structure and avoid the deep cut in the old roadway. The original cause of this change of grade was the construction of the Harlem ship canal.

To Walter Katte, chief engineer of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad, is due the chief credit of the design of the new steel viaduct and drawbridge. The draw span, which is the only four-track railway drawbridge in the world, measures 400 feet over all and weighs 2,500 tons. The drawbridge is 58 feet 6 inches wide from center to center of the outside trusses, and is carried by three trusses, of which the central one is the heaviest. Between the central and each of the two side trusses is a clear space of twenty-six feet, which permits the passage of two sets of double tracks. The floor is corrugated, like that of the viaduct, and the rails are bolted to it with only the intervention of steel tie plates.

END VIEW OF THE STEEL DRAWBRIDGE ACROSS HARLEM RIVER.

The weight of the draw span is carried by two huge steel drums, one inside the other. The diameter of the outer drum is 54 feet and of the inner 46 feet. These drums are coupled together by sixteen lattice braces. Underneath each of the drums are seventy-two cast steel rollers, with faces 10½ inches wide. The seventy-two wheels under the outer drum are each 24 inches in diameter, and those under the inner drum are 20 7-16 inches in diameter. The whole weight of the bridge rests on these rollers when the draw is open.

The select committee of the House of Commons on the rule of the road at sea, by a vote of 6 to 3, has adopted the chairman's report in favor of rule 3, suggested by the Washington conference dealing with sound fog signals. This was the rule upon which centered the main objection of British ship owners and navigators to the series of rules of the road recommended by the Washington conference.

A secret meeting of the steel rod manufacturers of the country was held at Cleveland for the purpose of effecting a general pooling of interests. The meeting adjourned after an all day session without having reached an agreement, and most of the manufacturers left for home.

WAR DAYS RECALLED.

Survivors of the First Troops Retrace the Old Line of March.

Thirty-five years ago last Thursday the first Union troops to respond to President Lincoln's proclamation asking for volunteers started on their way to the defense of the capital. One hundred and thirty five survivors of those Pennsylvania militia companies celebrated the anniversary by following the same line of march, but their reception in Baltimore in 1896 was somewhat different from that of 1861. They represent what is known as the First Defenders Association, the living remnants of five battalions of militia numbering nearly 700 men, as follows: The Washington artillery and national light infantry of Pottsville, the Ringgold light artillery of Reading, the Logan guard of Lewiston and the Allen infantry of Allentown.

President Lincoln issued his proclamation on the 15th of April. The same day the officers of these companies reported at Harrisburg with their men, and on Tuesday, April 16, having been mustered in, they boarded a train on the Northern Central Railway and started for Baltimore. There they were compelled to change cars and march through the city. Although a platoon of police furnished them an escort, they were followed by a mob of several hundred persons, who threw stones at them as they marched. But only one person was wounded, and that was a colored servant of the captain of the Pottsville artillery, who was cut on the face by a brick. On the 19th of April the Sixth Massachusetts regiment, which followed them, encountered an even more angry mob, and the riot which occurred on that day in Baltimore is a matter of history.

The survivors of the First Defenders Association met at Harrisburg to begin their historic pilgrimage, which covered the entire route over which they went in 1861. In Baltimore they were the guests of the city, and were entertained by the Grand Army of the Republic. They went to Washington Friday and remained until Saturday night.

RECORD OF THE WEEK.

INDIANA INCIDENTS TERSELY TOLD.

Miss Moberly at Last Gets Action on Her Traducer—Indianapolis Railway Employe in a Peck of Domestic Trouble—Sunday Observance.

Verdict for Miss Mary Moberly.

The case of Miss Mary Moberly vs. James R. Henry, cashier of the Indiana State Bank at Indianapolis, for $10,000 damages for slander, was decided in favor of the plaintiff at Brazil. After remaining out twenty-eight hours, the jury brought in a verdict allowing Miss Moberly $1,000. Henry was charged with slandering the plaintiff by publishing a protest before the School Board of Gosport, beseeching them not to employ her as a teacher, claiming that in his opinion her action and language in the school room was unbecoming a lady. The case was venued to Brazil from Owen County, where it has been in litigation for over seven years.

Olliver Leads a Dual Life.

Charles Olliver, of Terre Haute, an employe of the Vandalia Railway Company, who was thought to have been a victim of a blackmailing adventuress, seems to have been leading a dual life. Some time ago he made the acquaintance of a widow, and, it is said, represented to her that he was a single man. An engagement to marry was entered into, and Olliver, it is alleged, took Mrs. Grimes' child from the Orphans' asylum, saying he would find a home for it until they were married. He postponed the wedding day several times. A few days ago a neighbor of Mrs. Grimes saw the child playing in front of a house in another part of the city. It was not the locality where Olliver said he had placed it, and Mrs. Grimes went to the house. Then she learned that Olliver was married, and that he had taken the child to his own wife to be cared for. Olliver came home while the two women were talking and denied all that Mrs. Grimes said. He also denied it in the newspapers, and many persons believed him. He said he had adopted the child, and that he did not know Mrs. Grimes at the time. Then the woman swore out a warrant for his arrest and he pleaded guilty.

No Sunday Ball at Indianapolis.

For several weeks there has been considerable agitation of Sunday baseball by the ministers of Indianapolis, and communications have passed between them and Mayor Taggart and Sheriff Womack. The former did not think it his duty to interfere outside of the city and the latter declared that the police had jurisdiction within four miles of the city and should prevent ball playing if it was attempted. The Civic Federation then took the matter in hand, and Sheriff Womack notified the officers that there should be no ball playing on Sunday.

All Over the State.

Wright L. Kidder, a wealthy flour miller of Terre Haute, was robbed of $30 and a gold watch by burglars, who threatened him and his wife with death.

A United States mail bag, stolen recently from a crane that was up at Bourbon for west-bound train No. 7, was found by Newton Garrison near the railroad with the contents missing.

The Connersville Council was enjoined from buying a local electric light plant. A majority of the members of the Council pledged themselves to purchase it. The city already is in debt far in excess of the legal limit.

Harry Latham, while hunting on Kankakee marsh, accidentally shot himself in the knee. He rowed a boat seven miles to a doctor and died soon after from loss of blood. He was a prominent liquor merchant in Fort Wayne.

At Butler, while men were repairing an old frame house formerly occupied by Peter Goodrich, an old bachelor miser who died a short time ago, they found $60 in gold and $70 in bills. It is thought more will be found, as Goodrich was known to have considerable money and would not trust the banks.

The American Wire Nail Company of Anderson supposed to be representing the wire nail trust, closed a deal whereby they come into possession of the wire nail plant at Greenfield. It is a comparatively small plant and the consideration was but $17,000. It is understood that the plant will be moved to Anderson and become a part of the American wire nail works, now employing 800 hands. The trust controls the market, and at present is limiting the supply and advancing the price steadily.

About 9 o'clock Tuesday night, at Yorktown, Mrs. Jacob Skinner found the dead body of her 14-year-old son Charles dangling from a tree not ten feet from the door. He had tied a regulation hangman's noose in a rope used for a swing and, after adjusting it about his neck, kicked a step ladder from under him. The boy was addicted to cigarettes and was a reader of dime novels. In addition he was deeply in love with Clara Coppersmith, 14 years old, and had threatened to kill her because she would not consent to marry him at once. He had a razor in his pocket when found.

The meanest man has just left traces of his work at Arlington, and as a consequence Elder Sellers is going about in his old clothes. Tuesday the good man went to Arlington to baptize a half dozen converts in the Little Blue river. He went into Farmer Houston's barn and exchanged his best Sunday clothes for a less pretentious outfit. While he was in the water wrestling with the converts some unmitigated scamp took the minister's clothes from a fence post where they were hanging and escaped. In the clothes were a fine gold watch, a sum of money and other valuables. Elder Sellers believes there is a great field for evangelists in that section of the State, but suggests that they carry a portable wardrobe, secured by a time and burglar proof lock.

W. A. Glidewell, sheriff of Franklin County, is dead at Greensburg, from gangrene, caused by wearing tight shoes.

Arthur, son of Druggist George H. Andrews, of Muncie, was married ten days ago to Miss Myrtle Thomas at the bride's home in Findlay. The groom is but 18 years old and was too bashful to tell his parents until a Findlay newspaper arrived giving the information. In the meantime the bride, who was at the home of her parents, had been urging her husband to tell the parents and send for her. When the news came out she was soon on hand.

Fred Weaver, who lived near Hamilton, while fishing fell into the lake and was drowned. His body has not been recovered.

Dr. Henrotin, of Chicago, is going to Anderson with his X ray apparatus to perform a delicate surgical operation. Six weeks ago Otto Lever was shot in the head. The bullet entered above the eyes and passed through the brain, lodging in the base. Doctors gave him up, but he did not die, and after lying unconscious for three weeks began to recover. He is in full possession of his senses and muscles now and the surgeons have decided to remove the bullet, expecting a complete and unprecedented recovery

REVIEW OF THEIR WORK AT WASHINGTON.

Detailed Proceedings of Senate and House—Bills Passed or Introduced in Either Branch—Questions of Moment to the Country at Large.

The Legislative Grind.

The Senate continued debate of the bond bill Friday, and incidentally Mr. Allen called Mr. Gear a liar. He was compelled to subside, and his words were "taken down." The net result of five hours' work on the private calendar in the House was the passage of four pension bills, one to pension the widow of Rear Admiral Foote at $50 a month; the rejection of a bill to retire a hospital steward as a second lieutenant of cavalry and the passage of a war claim less than $600. The latter was the first war claim brought before the House for consideration and naturally provoked a general debate on the policy of paying war claims.

The Senate Committee on Military Affairs acted favorably Saturday upon the list of managers for the soldiers' homes, as agreed to by the House. The House paid tribute to the memory of the late Representative Cogswell of Massachusetts. Gen. Cogswell was one of the most popular members of the House. His career as a soldier and statesman and the nobility of his character were eloquently and warmly portrayed. Before the eulogies began Mr. Cannon reported the general deficiency, the last appropriation bill. Mr. Talbert (Dem.) of South Carolina objected to a pension bill presented by Mr. Cannon (Rep.) of Illinois. Mr. Cannon made a personal appeal to Mr. Talbert. He said it was the first time in twenty years that he had asked for unanimous consent. He reviewed the pathetic history of the soldier who was a constituent of his, shot to pieces and almost totally blind. Mr. Talbert withdrew his objection.

The Senate Monday discussed sectarian schools in debating the Indian appropriation bill, but no action was taken. The House was entertained by a hot tariff discussion. Several items in the general deficiency bill were finally settled.

The House Tuesday put in the time with several contested election cases, but only one was decided. Mr. Goodwin, of Alabama, was unseated, in favor of Mr. Cobb. In the Senate the bill was passed granting the abandoned Fort Marcy military reservation, New Mexico, to the American Invalid Society for the purpose of establishing a sanitarium for the treatment of pulmonary diseases. Mr. Cannon (Rep., Utah) was recognized for a speech supporting his resolution for a huge ground map covering 625 acres, located near Washington, showing the entire topography and geography of the United States. He explained that the map would give an object lesson of the extent of our country. The Indian bill was then taken up, and Mr. Pettigrew, in charge of the bill, said an immediate abandonment of the contract schools would leave a number of children without schools. Mr. Kyle (Pop., S. D.) spoke of the schools now in operation and the justice of allowing them to surrender their work gradually. Mr. Thurston (Rep., Neb.) expressed his respect for every church of Christianity, yet he regarded it as a fundamental principle that the public money of the people should be expended only for public purposes and only by public officers and instrumentalities. Mr. Gray said he never learned that the foundations of this Government were not broad enough for equal justice and toleration to all. Protestantism was not bigotry, he said, and Christianity was not fanaticism. Mr. Pettigrew asked that a time for a vote on the sectarian school amendment be fixed, but there was objection to fixing any time.

The Senate Wednesday disposed of the sectarian school question by adopting a compromise framed by Senator Cockrell of Missouri. The Indian bill, as it came from the Senate, provided that no money therein appropriated shall be paid for education in sectarian schools. This provision is struck out by the Cockrell amendment, as adopted, and it is declared to be the settled policy of the Government to make no appropriations for sectarian schools after July 1, 1898, thus giving two years for the abandonment of sectarian schools, instead of an immediate abandonment. The amendment was adopted by the decisive vote of 38 to 24. The Indian bill was not completed when the Senate adjourned. The House entered upon the consideration of the general pension bill, reported from the invalid pension committee. It amends the existing pension laws in some very important respects. It makes presumption of death of an enlisted man exist if no tidings have been heard from him for seven years. It provides that desertion or dishonorable discharge shall not be a bar to a pension under the act of 1890 if the enlisted man has served ninety days subsequent to such discharge. It provides that pensions allowed shall date from their first application. It fixes the maximum income of a widow entitled to a pension under the act of 1890 at $300 per annum. It provides that no pension shall be reduced or discontinued except for fraud or recovery from disability and that discontinued pensions when reconsidered and reallowed shall date from their discontinuance.

Several minor bills were passed at the opening of the Senate Thursday, including the bill authorizing a bridge across the Missouri river at Boonville, Mo. The Indian appropriation bill was freely discussed. The Platt amendment extending the services of the Dawes commission so as to terminate the tribal relations of the Indians, and dividing their lands in severalty, was ruled out of order as general legislation, after Senators Jones of Arkansas, Bate and Platt had denounced the prevalence of lawlessness in Indian territory. The bill was then passed, after the item of $1,000,000 for payment of the Cherokee outlet fund, stricken out by the committee, had been restored. It will now go to conference. Bills were passed for an additional circuit judge in the Sixth judicial circuit, and appropriating $500,000 for a public building at Salt Lake City. Consideration of the Pickler general pension bill was resumed in the House. Mr. Hepburn (Rep.) of Iowa gave notice of an amendment instructing the pension office to construe the pension laws liberally. Mr. Stewart (Rep.) of New Jersey closed the debate for the day and the House adjourned.

Corean Women.

Corean women, to the Western eye, are both hideous and ungainly, whereas the men and young boys are often handsome and picturesque. There is neither grace nor elegance in the female dress, which in some respects resembles that of the Chinese, and consists of a loose pair of trousers reaching to the ankle, and tied round the waist with a thick cord; on the top of this is worn a short petticoat reaching to the knees, and fitted to the shoulder is a yoke or shoulder-cape, to which are attached long loose sleeves. This costume is the ordinary dress of the working-woman.

CHAPTER X.

A few days after that mysterious letter had been thrown in at Lady Constance's bedroom window, Feveral presented himself at the door of the duke's house and sent in his card.

The duke was in his library, seated at a large writing desk. When the stranger was ushered in he looked up quickly and frowned.

"Sir," he said, haughtily, "I do not know you."

"Pardon me," returned the other, politely, "I see you have my card in your hand. My name is Feveral—Richard Feveral."

"Well, what do you want?"

"Money."

"A beggar?"

"Not at all—a friend—from Venezuela!"

The duke started and turned pale. He felt that the eyes of the man were fixed keenly upon him.

"From Venezuela?" he repeated, nervously.

"Precisely—from Venezuela," returned the other, "where your grace, five years ago, before you came into the title, was attache of the Spanish Embassy."

"I repeat, sir, I do not know you."

"Your grace has forgotten me," said Feveral, "but perhaps I may be able to refresh your memory. In the meantime I wish to enter your service. I am clever, and sufficiently unscrupulous."

"Sir, you entered this house by a fraud; be good enough to leave it, or I may be under the painful necessity of having you forcibly expelled."

"Hear me out," said Feveral, "and for your own sake do not insult me before your servants. Engage me, and I will serve you faithfully. I know well, my lord, that the Duke d'Azzeglio is a very different person from the young count who sowed his wild oats in South America."

Again the duke started, and turned deathly pale.

"What do you mean?" he asked nervously.

"I mean that at one period of my life I found myself in Venezuela, where your grace was amusing yourself. Every one was then talking of a merchant, Emilio Castelar, whose wife your grace admired. The husband remonstrated, he was thrown into a prison, where, I have heard, he died!"

"Sir, what is all this to me?"

"Much. If, for example, your former amusements were talked about here, it might affect your prospects as a marrying man."

"What! You threaten?"

"Not at all," answered Feveral, carelessly. I merely state the case as a matter of business. Employ me, and, as I have already informed you, you will find me useful. Decline my services, and I might offer them elsewhere—even to your rival, the cousin of Lady Constance Howarth, whom she loves devotedly."

"How did you learn this?"

"My lord," returned the other, lightly, "my familiar spirit tells me everything."

"I will think it over," said the duke; "perhaps you might be useful."

"I am a treasure, I assure you. I shall do myself the honor of calling upon your grace in a few days."

With a courteous bow he left the room. The moment the door closed upon him the duke became a changed man. His hand clinched, and a cruel, vicious look came into his eyes.

"A thorough vagabond," he said, "whom I should like to strangle. But I must not show my hand to him. I am in his power. He knows too much of my past life for me to make him an enemy and leave him at large. It may be well to utilize him! Such a fellow could be serviceable to me in many ways. He shall be. I will make him—my spy."

Three days later Feveral again presented himself before the duke and became an inmate of the house.

Once installed, his conduct was curious. For some mysterious reason, he kept a strict watch upon his grace's movements, and one day the duke noticed this, and said sharply:

"You examine me, sir! For why?"

"I was merely wondering, my lord, why you persistently woo the Lady Constance Howarth."

The duke smiled.

"I woo the Lady Constance because I am about to marry her."

"Take my advice, my lord, and refrain from so doing."

"What do you mean?"

"Merely that the lady does not love you."

"I am perfectly aware of it."

"And yet your grace persists in your wish to make her the Duchess d'Azzeglio?"

"I intend to do so."

If by this conversation Feveral had hoped to put off the contemplated marriage of the duke and Lady Constance, he failed.

CHAPTER XI.

Meanwhile things at the Castle had not been going well, and continued trouble was telling upon Lady Constance, and making her appear the ghost of what she once had been. Mrs. Meason, determined to carry her point, continued to point out to the girl the advantage of a marriage with the duke, while Constance, wearied with continual resistance, had learned to listen placidly and say nothing. Since she could not marry Frank, she said to herself, what did the rest matter? She had not answered his letter, and she knew it would be better if he never wrote again. Then Mrs. Meason became seriously ill. It seemed now that the old lady would die, and that Constance would be left alone.

"Constance," she said, quietly, one day, "my child, I think that I shall die."

"O, grandma!" cried the girl, "don't say so! I should be left here alone."

"Alone," repeated the old lady, feebly; "yes, I was thinking of that, my Constance. But why should you be alone when there is a good and honorable man who is willing to make you his wife?"

"Grandma, don't speak of it."

"Constance, promise me that if the Duke d'Azzeglio asks you again to become his wife you will not refuse him."

"Do you know what you are asking?"

"Perfectly, my child."

"Then may heaven forgive you!"

The next day the duke called at Avondale Castle. When Lady Constance came down she looked so pale and death-like that the duke asked in some alarm if she had been ill.

"Lady Constance," said he, growing very earnest as he spoke, "you know in what esteem I hold you. My one wish in life is to secure your happiness; may I do so? Will you be my wife?"

"Pray leave me," she cried, piteously.

"But I cannot leave you," replied the duke, who was becoming terribly in earnest; "Constance, I love you, be my wife!"

"My lord, I—I do not love you."

"Become my duchess."

She looked at him in dazed amazement.

"You ask me now, your grace?"

"I ask you now," he replied, passionately pressing her hand; "do not refuse what I ask, for I adore you. Constance, speak, say you will become my wife."

"Since you wish it, then, I will," she replied.

Scarcely had she uttered the words when the duke took her hand, and would have clasped her in his arms, but Constance uttered a wild cry and shrunk away. He frowned and would have spoken sharply, but the girl staggered, then with a low cry she fell fainting on the floor.

Just two months later, in a field hospital near a recent battlefield, a wounded officer, none other indeed than Frank Howarth, lay hovering between life and death. Just two days after he had posted that letter to Constance he had been shot down in an engagement with the enemy.

"Let me see my letters," was his first convalescent cry; "for heaven's sake don't keep them from me; you don't know all they mean to me."

Seeing that to cross him would do more harm than to obey him, the nurse placed a packet of letters and papers on Frank's bed. Eagerly and quickly Frank seized the letters, and scanned the envelopes one by one; when he came to the end of the packet tears stole from beneath the closed lids of his eyes and rolled slowly down his cheek. Presently he grew more composed, and proceeded with a heavy heart to open his letters. Here a fresh shock awaited him. The first letter which he opened was from his father's solicitor. It informed him that his father and elder brother were dead; they had both been killed in an accident to the Scotch express, and that as his brother had left no male issue, he himself was the Earl of Harrington.

For many weeks he lay hovering between life and death, but again careful nursing wooed him slowly back to life. Again he examined his letters, but there were none from Constance. After reading them all through he opened his papers, and almost the first thing that caught his eye was the following:

"FASHIONABLE MARRIAGE.

"On Tuesday morning, Jan. 9, at St. Luke's Church, was celebrated the marriage of His Grace the Duke d'Azzeglio and Lady Constance Howarth, only child of Arthur, the late Earl of Harrington."

CHAPTER XII.

After a short honeymoon spent in Paris, the Duke d'Azzeglio took his young duchess to Madrid, whither urgent business called him.

The duke was too busy a man to spend much time in paying court to his wife. Having married her, he concluded that his duty was done, and he turned his thoughts to other affairs. From the first day of her marriage Constance had suspected that he did not love her; on her marriage day this fact was made known to her as an absolute certainty.

The fortnight in Paris passed to Constance like a dull, monotonous dream. Mechanically she performed the duties which her husband demanded of her, and he was grimly satisfied. Her beauty made the stir which he had foreseen, while her diamonds and the dresses she wore were the talk of Paris. One morning the duke informed Constance that he wished her to accompany him on the following evening to a ball at the Tuileries, when he would present her to the empress. The next afternoon, however, he received a message from his wife. She was ill, would he excuse her from attending the ball?

He went at once to the apartments she occupied, and found her in intense grief.

"You must excuse me, my lord. I cannot go," she said. "My cousin is dead."

"Dead!" echoed the duke.

For answer Constance pushed toward him a paper; it contained an account of those officers who had fallen mortally wounded at Ulandi. Among the list of names was that of Captain Frank Howarth.

Constance made no reply. She shuddered, and her tears flowed faster, but more silently than before. She hardly expected sympathy from her husband, and he himself had taught her not to look for love. He took her hand in his and kissed her cheek coldly; then he went from the room.

"Well, ma chere," he said, coldly, "I suppose to-night I must go to the ball alone?"

She sat at the window and looked out upon the busy street, feeling very much as she had done years ago when she had sat at her window in Avondale Castle and looked out upon the park, and found herself wondering why people were born into this world, since it was so very dreary. Suddenly, as she sat there listening to the dull roar of the street, she seemed to hear a voice—the voice of her friend, Alice Greybrook—whisper in her ear:

"Constance, promise me that if you are ever in trouble you will summon me instantly to your side."

With a cry Constance rose to her feet and rang the bell.

"Order my carriage instantly," she said to her astonished maid. "I am going out."

That evening while the Duke d'Azzeglio was bending low over the hand of the empress, and making profuse apologies for the absence of his wife, Constance was standing in a room in the convent waiting for her friend.

She remained there several hours. When at length she came forth, she was much changed. Her face was pale and composed as that of her friend, and that terrible look of dull despair had in a measure passed from her eyes. On arriving at the hotel she asked for the duke, and was informed that he had not yet returned.

"Let me know the moment the duke returns," she said to her maid. When the clock struck one Constance rose, and, without sending any formal message, went at once to her husband's rooms.

The duke, who was amazed to see her, was not in the best of tempers.

"You are not in bed?" he said; "yet it is late, and after your grief you should be exhausted."

"I have been to the convent this evening," she began, when the duke interrupted her—

"To the convent!" he said; "so you could go there, but you could not come with me to the ball?"

"No," replied Constance quietly, "that was different. I sought consolation and found it in the holy place. I returned several hours ago, but I would not go to bed. I wished to wait up for you."

"Ah, that was amiable, but quite unnecessary. Late hours and weary watching will spoil your good looks, and that would not please me, because I choose to have my duchess surpass all other women. Do you understand?"

Constance moved toward the door; there she paused and looked at her husband. She took a few steps toward him and breathed his name.

He raised his eyes.

"Still lingering? Yes? You have something to say?"

"Yes," she answered quietly. "I came to this room intending to speak seriously to you. I cannot go until I have done so. In the first place, I have to ask your pardon."

"My pardon? For what, pray?"

"For taking your name and neglecting to fulfill the duties of a wife."

"Pardon me. You do yourself an injustice. Until to-day you have fulfilled those duties admirably."

"And are you satisfied?"

"Perfectly satisfied. I craved for a peerless wife, for a beautiful duchess," he returned, "and possess one. Take my advice and preserve your beauty. It is indeed a most precious jewel. Good night!"

The next morning a telegram was received from Mrs. Meason. The news of Frank's death had evidently alarmed the old lady, who telegraphed for permission to join her grandchild at Madrid at this most trying time.

The ducal residence was a magnificent place, fit to be the abode of a king; and not until she entered this palace, half dazed by the magnificence of the reception accorded to her, did Constance realize the enormous wealth of the man she had married. Here, in one of the corridors she met a gentleman, who at sight of her removed his hat and bowed low. Constance stopped and looked at him. She seemed to have seen him before.

"You are staying at the Castle, monsieur?" she asked.

"I am one of his grace's secretaries," replied the man, with another profound bow.

He made way for her to pass; and Constance walked on, thinking no more about him.

Meanwhile Feveral, for it was he, watched her retreating figure with eyes full of compassion.

"Poor lady!" he said, "I pity her, but I cannot spare her. I warned her, and, despite my warning, she rushed upon her doom. How pale she looks, yet how beautiful! Ah, but I remember one who was just as fair, and who is sleeping in her grave through him—yes, through him! That thought never leaves me; night and day it is ever with me, urging me on to my revenge."

Cattaraugus Nomenclature and Unique Area in Allegheny Valley.

The southern portions of the counties of Cattaraugus, Allegheny and Steuben, and the northern portions of the Pennsylvania counties bordering on these three, may be called aptly the leek belt of the country. In that part of the Allegheny valley wild leeks grow in profusion. They were there when the first settlers came, a century and more ago, and they are there yet. It was a good thing, too, that they were there in the pioneer days, for until the newcomers had been there long enough to gather their first crops from the virgin soil, the leeks kept hunger away from many a clearing. It is in the diary of one pioneer that "the main sustenance of the family for a long time was wild leeks." All efforts by the descendants of the pioneers to exterminate them have been entirely unvailing. Cultivation of the ground, in fact, has tended to increase them.

The favorite growing places of the leeks are in the meadows. The leeks come up tender and odorous in the spring along with the new pasturage. The cows would be compelled to crop them even if they did not like them, as they do, and as a consequence the new milk and new butter of the leek belt are impregnated so strongly with the wild onion flavor that they do not find favor in market. The dwellers within the leek belt are compelled to consume the entire product of their dairies at that time of year, when milk and butter elsewhere are best. But the owners of the leek farms and their near-by neighbors like the flavor of their milk and butter, and now and then outsiders affect to prefer them to the ordinary everyday product of the non-leeky meadows, and buy them, but such are few. The air of spring in that particular stretch of the Allegheny valley is so strongly redolent of the leek that when the season is at its height it reaches even to the outlying settlements.

This diminutive wild onion has a flavor somewhere between that of garlic and the cultivated onion, and if one is unmindful of the effects upon his breath—and no one cares for that in the leek belt—it is better raw than a new cultivated onion, and boiled, root and all, the natives declare it knocks boiled onions clear out of the pot. The leek is only in evidence a fortnight or so. Then it goes to seed and quickly rots down to the root, which is a tiny pear-shaped bulb. People outside of the leek belt declare that the farmers within it, whenever they take their walks abroad, wear an implement fastened to their boots which they call a leek hook, and with this they scoop leeks from the ground as they walk, but this is probably not true.

If ever leeks become a marketable commodity the fickle maid Fortune will sit down among the leek belt farmers and, holding her nose, perhaps, be their long-time guest.—New York Sun.

The timidity of fish afforded one of many interesting discussions at a recent reunion of the Boston Piscatorial Society. It was remarked that big gun practice on the sea coast, while it would cause lobsters out of sheer fright to cast one of their claws, would drive millions of fish into other waters.

A MONSTER GLOBE.

A Fac-Simile of the Earth to Be Erected.

One of the most remarkable monuments the world has ever seen is that projected by Elysee Reclus, the eminent French geographer. His idea is to construct a gigantic spheroid, in exact imitation of the earth, as to its relative proportions and form, to be erected either in London, Paris or New York. This, he says, will be an imposing and permanent object lesson as to the topographical and geodetic features of the planet on which we live. In dimensions it will be one-hundred-thousandth as large as the earth proper. The equatorial diameter of the monumental spheroid will be approximately 418 feet and its circumference 1,312 feet.

As to the general construction of the monument and the choice of its site, M. Reclus insists that an artistic ideal must be kept in view, and that the envelope of the globe shall be visible from a great distance. The globe is to be mounted upon an axis, which will permit of its being revolved at will. To guard the surface against climate and weather there is to be an envelope for the whole, non-revolvable, painted on the outside to simulate the face of the earth. The available interior of this envelope or "exterior blouse," as M. Reclus calls it, that is, the space between it and the globe proper, will be devoted to various galleries and spiral ascents, stairways and scaffoldings to facilitate the minute study of the geographical surface. The cells of the great spiral will be about twenty feet apart, one above another, and will be twenty-four in number. The floor of the spiral will be inclined toward the globe, so as to afford vantage points for photographing from various distances.

The principal dimensions are as follows:

	Globe proper. Feet.	Env. Feet.
Equatorial diameter....	418	523
Length of the axis.....	521	521
Equatorial circumference..	1,312	1,640
Area of the surface (square feet)	548,474	856,891

Total height of the structure, 636 feet.

Width of space between globe and envelope, fifty-one feet.

The total weight of the globe and its envelope, to be supported upon foundations of masonry, is estimated at 27,000 tons. The cost of the whole structure will be about $4,000,000.

STRANGE GLOBE TROTTERS.

The Remarkable Journey Two Young Men Will Make with Dogs.

A remarkable journey has recently been commenced by two young men in North Dakota. They propose to travel around the world with a team of dogs. Eight big, well-trained Newfoundlands are to draw them every step of the way—except, of course, where it is necessary to cross the ocean. The dogs have already been procured and six of them are shown in the accompanying picture. Only six will be put in harness at one time; the other two will run behind as a reserve force, to take the places of any that become lame or exhausted. Six months have been spent in training these fine fellows; and they are as obedient as horses and almost as strong. The lightest weighs 130 pounds, the heaviest 170; and on an ordinary road they can easily make twenty or thirty miles a day, drawing their burden. Horses could hardly do better; and this team may very possibly prove much more useful than horses in unexpected ways. If the boys, in any of the half-civilized regions through which they must pass, should happen to be threatened with rough usage, these eight huge dogs would be formidable allies.

The two young men, Kenworthy and Whitwall by name, started from Grand Forks, N. D. From Chicago the boys proceeded to New York; thence, by steamer, they go to Liverpool. After a drive through England they will cross the channel to France, and visit the principal European cities. Then will come a long drive through Asia—probably the most hazardous part of the whole expedition. From some port in China or Japan they will embark for San Francisco. It is then intended to visit every city in the United States and Canada having a population of 20,000 or more.

FEEDING THE ANIMALS

An Interesting Sight at Central Park at 2 O'Clock Each Day.

Raw beef is the daily meal which Father Knickerbocker provides for his animal guests in the Central Park menagerie. There is always a crowd on hand when the butcher serves dinner at 2 o'clock every afternoon. It is an interesting sight to watch the animals as they receive their great hunks of meat.

The leopards growl at the sight of human eyes riveted on their food. The lion enjoys the company, and the little laughing hyena "Whiskers" gets a grin on his face that compels those who see it to join in his wonderful and fearful smile. The little ones take to the baby hyena, and "Whiskers" entertains them even when he is eating.

"We feed the animals once in every twenty-four hours," said the director of the menagerie to a reporter the other day, as the meat carver arrived at the house and the animals began to pace ferociously up and down their cages. "We only give them a small meal, for if we allowed them to fill up they would all be dead in a year or so. They're just as hungry as can be when 2 p. m. comes around, and it would not take long for that tiger there to make mince-meat out of those who are watching him if he had a chance just before meal-time. They get about a quarter of what they were used to before they became captives.

"They live long in captivity when they are fed sparingly. No, there is no cruelty about it, for, while they are hungry, they are a long way off from the starvation point. If we gave them a good dinner they would need exercise to digest it. They can't get exercise in a 5x5 cage compared with roaming the prairies, the forests and the jungles.

"It is interesting to see how they know when it is 2 o'clock. That big lion there keeps the time for them. Every day, fifteen minutes before mealtime, he starts pacing up and down with his head almost touching the bars. As soon as the other animals see him they are on their feet in a second and pacing their cages for all they are worth. No matter what they are doing, whether sleeping or laughing at the baby hyena, they know the mealtime and travel about four miles in pacing before they eat. Their eyes are always on the door at that side, for it is from that direction that the butcher comes with their meat.

"We always give them meat with a bone in it. They have no table manners, and if they did not have to scrape the meat from the bone they would swallow their meal whole, and then there would be several dead lions and tigers in a few days. The hyena family prefer bone to meat. They don't leave anything around after their meal."—New York Press.

OHIO'S NEW CAPITOL.

Alterations in the Old Structure that Will Practically Make It New.

Drawings for the Ohio State capitol, prepared in accordance with the provisions of the bill introduced by Representative Dodge, have been completed. Mr. Dodge's plan is really to remodel the present capitol. He proposes the addition of another story and an extension of the east and west centers so as to form two large additional rooms on each floor. There would be a corridor entirely around the interior of the building, thus affording access from a room in a given corner of the building to the one opposite without retracting one's steps through the rotunda, as is the case now. The first floor would be devoted exclusively to State offices. The second floor would be given over to the Supreme Court, law and State libraries, while the third floor would be occupied by the Senate chamber, hall of the House and committee rooms. There would be four elevators. Dodge's bill provides that the adjutant general shall invite plans from the architects, and after their work is ready to be submitted the Governor, judges of the Supreme Court, Speaker of the House and President of the Senate will select the best plan. The Governor would then appoint a commission of four to have charge of the work of construction. The plan is to levy an assessment of one-fifth of a mill per year for three years, which would yield about $1,000,000, but the Auditor of State would not be permitted to make this levy until after the Governor had appointed the commission.

There is, after all, but one reliable way to increase your income, and that is to reduce your expenses.

Of a binder light and strong,
With its bolt holes square and right
So you can bolt 'em all up tight;
And no extra wrench wi'l use
To tighten bolts or screws.

It has a spring balanced reel
Which makes it nice to work;
And it is balanced up so nice
It cuts without a jerk.
It has a nice spring seat
Which makes it nice to ride.

This binder has a great drive wheel 10x34 inches, which makes it run very light. The drver thinks he is on a buggy, but when he sees the bundles roll, and all bound so nice and tight, he sees his mistake. It is the Osborne Columbia Binder. Town Debt.

We are asked to publish for the benefit of both political parties, a statement of the town debt as reported by the town treasurer beginning with 1890. Here it is:

1891	10,599 80
1892	11,967 56
1893	10,861 94
1894	9,596 69
1896	3,942 43

To each of these balances should be added, such interest as has accrued on outstanding orders. For example, it appears there is about $143 interest due on the last balance reported by the treasurer. It will appear in his next year's report.

SCHOOL CORPORATION.

The Auburn School Board is a corporation separate from the municipal or town corporation and often has the largest debt. In building the new school house a debt of $10,000 was made, for which bonds were issued, but not yet due. It is however, one of the debts of the people of the town, as all have to help pay it. Of the six old bonds we owed in 1890, one had to be paid each year, the last one in June last year, and interest on same. Since last June we have had to stand interest on only the new bonds. When the $10,000 in bonds was issued in 1893, there were probably $3,000 of old bonds unpaid, or at that date a school debt of over $13,000. That added to the municipal or town debt proper at that time would make about $25,000 total debt on the town.

It will be seen that our total debt was probably the largest in 1893, and that since then it has been gradually lessened. The Dispatch last week speaks of the debt being $25,000 two years ago. This was caused by the addition of the $10,000 debt for the new school house, which we presume could not have been built without some expense, even by a republican board. A special levy had been made to pay off bonds. And of course any board would be compelled to use this fund to pay them. So there is no merit in this. Again the funds raised by taxation have been continually increased, our total receipts by years being as follows:

1891	7,072 14
1892	7,500 23
1893	9,651 61
1894	9,772 83
1896	10,993 46

This shows that we are raising twice as much money now as we did in 1890, and that makes it easy to pay off more debt. Besides, up till about two years ago, the town board paid out large sums in needed improvements. The present board has paid out little or nothing, and the town is now suffering for it. With the receipts doubled, and the expenses reduced, what merit is there in making an unusual reduction in the debt? What else could they have done with the money? As to reducing their own salaries from $80 to $50. The boards that took $85 did double the work done by the board that took $50. A board that had to keep trotting over town to see to improvements, put in more time than a board that has done little else than meet evenings. The board did well to pay off some debts. But any board would have done it under the same condition.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WATERLOO.

The musical Tuesday evening given by Mrs. W. Shull in the Presbyterian church was enjoyed and appreciated by a full house. Mrs. Shull was assisted by Mrs. R. Shull and Dr. Buchtel, of Auburn, and Miss Longbaugh, of Angola.

The D. of R. of Waterloo were invited to Auburn Wednesday evening by the same order of that place. They were delightfully entertained.

Mesdames Francis, Plum, Huber, Imhoof and Miss Smith drove over to Hudson Tuesday morning of last week, where they spent the day, billing the town and Ashley, and making the necessary arrangements for an entertainment to be given Saturday evening in Hudson by the D. of R. Faith Lodge Waterloo. The entertainment as advertised was given, adding $15.00 to their funds.

Jerry Boyer has sold the lot on which their store stood to D. Leas who will at once build a store building on it, two stories and a basement.

George Huber has returned from his trip through Indiana and Ohio, combining both business and pleasure. He has determined to remain in Waterloo.

Quite an extensive sewer is being dug below the railroad, i. e. on the north side. It is eight feet deep.

J. Beck has built a new barn in the south part of town, in place of the one burned, supposed to have been set on fire by tramps.

Wm. Bassett having bought the stock of goods owned by John Keeran and added largely to his watch, clock and jewelry department, is prepared to supply customers with any thing in his line, and invites his many acquaintances and the community in general to call upon him. He will continue to do business in the corner Winslow store. Mr. Keeran will return with his family to Auburn.

The Tack Fiend.

Goshen Times.

Some time ago the Times called attention to the operation of the tack fiend. Some person with malice aforethought and premeditated evil scattered carpet tacks on the brick pavement and on paths where bicycle riders are apt to run their wheels. The result was many punctured tires. The operation was repeated again last evening and now a wail is again heard among the riders of the bike. Some wheels picked up as many as a half dozen tacks.

There'll be Merry Doings

Among the CARPETS and DRAPERIES during the next few days. It's housecleaning time now and your mind is on these matters. There are styles and values here that will make "County talk" when the news get out. We make a strong bid for your business in these important items, and are prepared to serve you with the largest stock ever shown in DeKalb county.

The New Carpets.

Dray loads of worthy weaves have been received during the past few weeks. We've laid our lines to do the Carpet business of the county, and with the equipment we've got we ought to do it.

INGRAIN CARPETS

All wool and a yard wide. The best extra supers—not an old, or side tracked pattern among them. All clean, quiet, neutral tints that won't show dust—and they turn well.

Your pick from 40 to 60 cents the yard.

NEW BRUSSELS

The best kind, of course. No better medium priced Carpets made. Got lots of handsome patterns. They've got the looks and wear in them. Come and get the prices.

MOQUETTE CARPETS

Always beautiful—more so this season than ever before; soft as a mossy bank, bright as a meadow in June. Pay you to give them careful inspection.

THE NEW MATTINGS

Some jointless, some cord-warp, some plain, some fancy, and all good. They're made of good live straws; they're flexible and don't scuff out out like the poorer, dried-out sorts. What a cool, cleanly, comfortable floor covering they make, to be sure—and so cheap, too, as we sell them.

A Lace Curtain Event.

That's what we name it—that's what it is. It's an event of money-saving importance to you. It's the one time in the round year when we put our Lace Curtain Stock on a very narrow margin of profit and give you a benefit. We don't make much money, but we sell more Curtains, and it's a good advertisement for the department. The choicest things will go first, of course—they always do in a sale of this kind.

—There is on the docket of court work for next term, a case against 'Squire Van Fleit of Garrett for taking illegal fees in a case tried before him. As nearly as we can get at the case, his fees, properly charged, would have been $4, but his charges foot up $5.45. In other words he has charged $1.45 too much. And for this little sum, the county must stand the expense and delay in court work, of a hard fought lawsuit for it will be fought inch by inch, for the reason that if he is found guilty, it is a misdemeanor that has a jail punishment attachment. And a citizen of hitherto good character will not go to jail without a fight. Whether he charged this $1.45 extra on purpose, or by a mistake or through ignorance, it would seem as if he ought to have a chance to make it right without so much expense to the taxpayers. If the law is looking for a victim it could perhaps have found a case bigger than this.

—Did you see the picture of Gov. Matthews on the inside of the Weekly of April 23? It is a very good likeness though it does not flatter him any. It will pay to keep it. He may be a candidate for president.

Many of our people will remember his speeches, and the soul-stirring story of "Wet the Ropes," that he usually put in to close his speeches with. He was not a grate statesman, though he was from 1881 to 1885 our representative, or "charge de affairs" in wugug and Paraguay in South America.

Mr. Smith's people were from Germany, and he still has an old book they brought over from the old country. It was printed about 1785, and is a book of sermons, one for each Sunday in the year. This must have been a very convenient book, for if a settlement was not able to have a preacher, one of the farmers could read a sermon for them each Sunday, and in this way, they could have regular worship.

England seems to be inclined to apprentice somebody to her laureateship.

The man who never worries generally has friends and relatives who have to worry for him.

Cincinnati capitalists have invested $50,000 in a cat farm. This is indeed a new way to "put money in thy purs."

Now how could it ever have occurred to the young Duke of Marlborough that the American people suspected him of being a fortune hunter?

Earthquakes in Mexico amount to something. As the result of a little shock in that country the other day several miles of ground dropped 500 feet.

Gen. Martinez Campos deserves sincere admiration for his manly and statesmanlike course in Cuba. He has probably ruined his own career, but he has done his duty.

New York City can entertain only one grand enthusiasm at a time. It has dropped the subject of coast defense and is now profoundly wrought up over the Olga Nethersole kiss.

A Western man has invented a thing which he is pleased to call a "saluting device." The fortunate wearer of this new invention can, by merely pressing a button, be sure that his hat will be raised six inches from his head, twisted from side to side, and restored to the head again.

It was in the year 1777 that John Paul Jones, commanding a ship of eighteen guns, appeared on the British coast and made a raid on the town of Whitehaven. The Declaration of Independence was then but little more than a year old. If England is counting on immunity from attack at her own doors in case of war with this country she has forgotten the grit and enterprise of American sailors.

The Pabst Brewing Company, of Milwaukee, has decided to abandon the use of hand-bills as an advertising medium. The company has been sued for damages caused by the stoppage of a city sewer in which were found twelve thousand of its booklets, which had been intrusted to a distributing concern. It will be seen that from this system of advertising the "returns were large."

The two New Yorkers who fought a duel with real pistols are not hide-whole now, but their respective honors have been healed of wounds, which is said to be an important thing. Yet how they managed to hit each other must ever remain a mystery. More likely than not close investigation would show that in his tremulous agitation each man shot himself, but as honor would bleed anew at this discovery investigation should be discouraged.

Dr. Dover, the man for whom Dover's powders were named, was the finder of Alexander Selkirk on his lonely isle. He was a physician, but his practice not proving lucrative, early in the eighteenth century he took to privateering, not to say piracy, and retired in a few years with a profit of about two hundred thousand dollars, a much larger sum one hundred and fifty years ago than it is to-day. He subsequently practiced his profession—of medicine—in London for many years.

It has been found by the Philadelphia Society for the Prevention of Tuberculosis that the hospitals of that city provide room for only about 125 consumptive patients, the policy being to refuse admission to all except this limited number. The society asserts positively that without contagion consumption would disappear from the list of diseases, and it asks for the establishment of a hospital large enough to accommodate all sufferers from the malady. They point to the fact that since the idea that consumption is contagious became prevalent in Philadelphia the mortality there from the disease has decreased 30 per cent.

Now will be a grand chance for Russia to cross over into Armenia and end the Turkish atrocities. This would be a harder blow to England than it would be to Turkey, for England is the backer of Turkey, and her cowardice and treachery to the cause of Christianity and humanity are responsible for the outrages in Armenia. The blood of the 100,000 murdered Christians in that province is on England's hands. England's petty jealousy of other nations and criminal selfishness have bolstered up a twelfth century Asiatic despotism in Eastern Europe, and she sits idly and stolidly while this despotism perpetrates atrocities which recall the savagery of Genghis Khan.

The razing of a chimney-stack is an interesting operation, and was seen to great advantage the other day at Salford, England, where a Lancashire steeple-jack took down a chimney two hundred and seventy feet high, with a circumference at the bottom of ninety-two feet, and estimated to weigh four thousand tons. The chimney wall was cleared for about eight feet from the ground, on the southern side, and "uprights" of timber were driven in until the greater part of the weight of the superstructure rested on the timber, which was set on fire. Fed by petroleum, the fire in a few minutes did its work. Leaning for a moment, the whole chimney suddenly fell zigzag to the ground, exactly in the place intended. There was little noise, but the force of the fall was sufficient to sunder the jointed bricks as cleanly as though they had been detached by hand.

Of a class of madmen, against whom, only too often, no precautions are taken for the public safety, James Payn says: "If a person has property and shows signs of aberration, his friends are very willing not only to put him into a lunatic asylum, but to keep him there; whereas, if he is a poor man, there is a great readiness to let him out of confinement in order to save the money of the rate-payers. He accordingly emerges before he is perfectly cured, and at once proceeds to commit a murder, for which, however, he cannot be punished. It is true that from convenience he generally selects a member of his own family, but he may turn his attention to more important victims."

Accident insurance companies are contemplating putting an extra charge for policies on those who are bicycle-riders, but the necessity for such action is not apparent, in view of the statistics on this point gathered by the Wheel, which has examined a list of 2,000 claims allowed by one of the largest companies, and finds that the cause was falls on pavements in 531 cases; carriage and wagon accidents number 243; there were 117 cut with tools and glass; in 96 cases a weight of some sort fell on the person injured; the bicycle accidents are 76. Thus it seems that a person is seven times as liable to hurts while walking on the sidewalk as when riding a bicycle on the street, more than three times as likely to be hurt in a wagon, and almost twice as likely to be cut by glass or tools.

The Iowa Legislature enacted a law laying a tax of 5 per cent. on all inheritances over $1,000 other than those for the use of near relatives of the testator or for charitable, educational or religious purposes. This is after the example of New York, which some years ago laid a tax on legacies. There is no serious objection to such a tax. The objection to the income tax that it is inquisitorial does not here apply, because estates are probated, and the tax discloses nothing that would not be known in the absence of a tax. This tax has the merit of getting at last and for once for purposes of taxation at the estate of men who shirk their fair share of the public burdens all through life. It might not be a bad thing to put heavier taxes on the estates of men when the probate proceedings demonstrate that they have been chronic tax dodgers.

The bicycle-brake problem seems to have been solved by an invention shown at a recent cycle show. The objections of weight, incumbrance and wear on tires are said to be overcome by it, and it does not apply to the front wheel, but behind it, on the crank axle, where the weight and power are. It consists of a steel coil that goes spirally about the crank axle, inside the bottom bracket. One end of the coil is fastened inside the crank hanger and the free end is caught by a light steel chain which runs up through the lower tube, through the head tube and the handle-bar to the grip. Inside the grip is a steel jacket, provided with a groove worm, and by slightly twisting the handle the wheel may be checked as gradually as desired. When brought to a full stop a 200-pound man can stand on the pedals without being able to budge it. Nothing of the device can be seen on the wheel, and only its effect is apparent.

It would be interesting to learn what proportion of public sentiment among both clergy and laymen is reflected by Dr. Thomas' vigorous sermon at Chicago on the Cuban question. It may be taken as significant of the extent of the awakening interest in the question of Cuba's liberty that it should lend to so earnest an expression from a minister who is usually so thoughtful and free from bias as Dr. Thomas. In the course of his remarks the speaker said: "The time has come for America to say that this oppression of Cuba must come to an end, and that very soon. All our memories are on the side of freedom. When we struggled France held out a helping hand and Russia sent her warships to cruise off New York. Can we supinely stand still and let Spain crush the life out of these struggling patriots? I don't call them rebels. They are patriots, as brave as men ever were, and are struggling for the rights of men as we once struggled. Those men have not been accorded belligerent rights. They must fight as Washington did at Valley Forge, but I tell you in the name of liberty and God they will win!" Coming from the pulpit and not from the mouthpiece of any political interest, these words have a weight of their own. Dr. Thomas was wise enough to add that "annexation can wait." That is a question to be considered later and with the exercise of foresight and caution. But the speaker's prayer for the freedom of Cuba involves no political controversy. That, indeed, seems to be entirely a matter of disinterested patriotism, and if present indications are worth anything the majority of the public of this country would gladly see the island dependency freed from the Spanish yoke. In speaking for the emancipation of Cuba Dr. Thomas was doubtless echoing a sentiment which is but natural and inevitable in the foremost of the world's republics.

The Oldest Family in the World.

The question as to which is the oldest family in the world seems to be settled in favor of that of the Mikado of Japan. About a dozen of the 400 barons in the British House of Lords date back to 1400, the earliest being 1464. The oldest family in the British Isles is the Mar family of Scotland, 1093. The Campbells, of Argyle, began in 1190. Talleyrand dates from 1199, Bismarck from 1270, the Grosvenor family, the Dukes of Westminster, 1066; the Austrian House of Hapsburg goes back to 952, and the House of Bourbon to 864. The descendants of Mohammed, born 570, are all registered carefully and authoritatively in a book kept in Mecca by the chief of the family. Little or no doubt exists of the absolute authenticity of the long line of Mohammed's descendants. In China there are many old families, also among the Jews, "but," says a recent writer, "when it comes to pedigrees, there is one gentleman to whom the world must take off its hat, not as facile princeps or primus inter pares, but as a great and only nonesuch. This is the Mikado of Japan." His place has been filled by members of his family for more than 2,500 years. The present Mikado is the 122d of the line. The first one was contemporary with Nebuchadnezzar 666 before Christ.

Money to Boom McKinley.

Mark Hanna's fat frying for the benefit of McKinley's campaign fund is not confined to the manufacturers nor to the rich and powerful. The evidence is at hand that he has extended the squeezing and frying process to the humble rank and file of the party, including the ambitious people in every community who desire to stand in with the administration. Able lieutenants have been assigned to perform this latter work which has been brought to a perfect system.

Col. George P. Waldorf, the man who had been selected by ex-Gov. McKinley for chairman of the State Executive Committee, but who was turned down by the Central Committee, has charge of the work of raising funds in Northwestern Ohio. His territory embraces twenty-two counties, just one-fourth of the State, and he is making a personal visit to each county.

Col. Waldorf visited Findlay, and through one of those whom he "held up" the secret of his visit and operations leaked out. Upon his arrival he visited H. P. Crouse, chairman of the Republican State Central Committee, and from him secured a list of twenty-five prominent Republicans who are supposed to be in line for positions of various kinds. Col. Waldorf then called upon each of these persons upon his list and demanded $50 as a contribution to McKinley's campaign fund. Ten men were anxious enough to be considered "in line" to give $50 apiece. In each instance it was required that the sum be paid by checks, and the checks were all made payable to the order of M. A. Hanna. The remaining fifteen upon the list got off with contributions of from $25 down to $10 each, the entire sum raised in this county being $800.

This county, a correspondent says, is but an average one as the State goes, and if the other counties do as well and average $800 each it will make a total of $70,400 which M. A. Hanna will wring out of the little politicians of Ohio for use in the "legitimate expense" of the McKinley campaign. The fact of this canvass is known to but a few persons and was only revealed through the unguarded remarks of one of the chief contributors. Three other agents have the remainder of the State not covered by Col. Waldorf, the State being divided into four sections.

The Monster Iron Combine.

The announcement is made as if it were a piece of great news that the Iron and steel industry of the United States "is now in the absolute control of a few men who are banded together by the strongest bonds of common interest and who have at a conservative estimate not less than $300,000,000 at their disposal." It seems that the parties concerned make no secret of this combination, but profess to regard it as a perfectly innocent affair and not to entertain a suspicion that it is in any respect unlawful or even objectionable.

The men in the combination, we are told, "are in a position now to say how much iron ore shall be converted into iron and steel and at what prices it shall be sold." Not only are they in a position to say this, but they have already begun to say it. The "ore pool" which seems to include all northern producers east of the Missouri, recently fixed the ore output for the present year at 10,500,000 tons. At the instance of the monster combine this figure has been reduced to 8,500,000 tons. The combine also puts the price of steel billets at Pittsburg up to $20 per ton, an advance of $3.

It is in order, by the way, in view of the formation of this monster iron and steel combination, to remind Senator Sherman of what he said in debate when the McKinley bill was pending before Congress. He said in substance that combinations to suppress competition and wrench exorbitant prices from the people were public enemies. He further said that if the men engaged in any of the tariff-fostered industries entered into such a combination he would vote to withdraw from that industry the benefit of tariff protection.

Does the public now hear Mr. Sherman addressing the President of the Senate and moving to take up the House tariff bill and incorporate therein an amendment placing all iron and steel on the free list?

The ear of the public is at the telephone.—Chicago Chronicle.

Bringing Ridicule on McKinley.

There is something immensely funny about the McKinley canvass for the St. Louis nomination. The style in which he is being secluded by his managers, isolated, surrounded with mystery, hemmed in by barriers, made as inaccessible as the grand llama of Thibet, and as inscrutable as the oracle of Dodona—all this is thoroughly ridiculous. Here is William McKinley, hitherto a plain American citizen, all of a sudden, transformed by his managers into a sort of veiled prophet, immersed in sacred silences, hid in a dim, religious twilight, guarded from invasion by his fellow man, shrined and hidden like some double-distilled fetich, and generally saturated with the mysterious and the supernatural. How very silly it all would seem if it were not so stupid and offensive.—Washington Post.

A Scheme to Injure the Farmers.

Senator Elkins, of West Virginia, is a typical Republican protectionist who makes great pretenses of love for the American farmer. His sincerity is shown by his action in introducing a tariff bill which imposes additional duties of 10 per cent. on all goods imported in foreign vessels. This, he claims, would stimulate our shipping industry, and restore our position in the world's carrying trade, which we lost under protection.

If Congress is foolish enough to pass the Elkins bill, it is easy to see that the principal result will be a fall in the prices of farm products. If our vessels cannot carry freight as cheaply as those of other countries, a discrimination of 10 per cent. would force foreign ships to charge 10 per cent. more on all goods, or else would give American shipping a monopoly of the import trade. In either case it is certain that all the foreign products which we now take in exchange for our surplus crops and other exports, would cost more than they do now.

The greatest injury to the farmers, however, would come from the fact that if the foreign vessels which now carry our farm products to Europe were compelled to return empty to this country, they would have to charge higher rates for carrying our exports. This would mean that our ability to sell abroad, which depends largely upon the cheapness of our products as compared with those of competing nations, would be considerably lessened. In order to pay the increased freight charges the price of all our products—exports of wheat, corn, meats, etc.—would have to be cut down or we should lose the markets.

Do the farmers want anything of that kind? If not, they should send to Congress Democrats who are opposed to protection and all kinds of discriminating duties.

Not Reciprocity's Champion.

It would be highly instructive to know upon what it is that the Republicans of Wisconsin base that plank of their State platform which "recognizes in the Hon. William McKinley, of Ohio, the most distinguished champion of the Republican policy of protection and reciprocity."

It is notorious that the McKinley tariff bill as originally reported made no provision whatever for reciprocity arrangements. It was this fact which caused the late Secretary Blaine to exclaim that the measure as it stood would not open a foreign market for a single bushel of wheat or barrel of pork. Mr. McKinley at that time evidently had no faith in the reciprocity project, for his bill went to the Senate without a reciprocity amendment. In that body such a mendment was adopted, and when the measure was referred to a conference committee Mr. McKinley accepted this amendment. It is a flagrant perversion of history, therefore, to speak of the Ohio leader as the "most distinguished champion of the Republican policy of reciprocity."

Credit to whom it is due. The real author of the reciprocity features of the Republican tariff of 1890 was the Hon. James Gillespie Blaine.—New York Advertiser (Rep.).

Another Billion Dollar Congress.

It would have been easy enough for the House of Representatives, when it found itself unable to increase the revenues owing to Senate disagreements, to take the opposite tack and cut down appropriations to the measure of existing revenue. Instead of that, the appropriations made by this Congress will equal the record of the Billion Dollar Congress of flagrant memory. Between the creation of a deficit through light taxation and the creation of a deficit through extravagant expenditure the taxpayer will not have much difficulty in apportioning the blame.—Philadelphia Record.

How Congress Can Please the Public.

The prospect is reported from Washington that the House will wind up its business soon, and make a claim on the gratitude of the country by an early adjournment. It is a somewhat remarkable evidence of a frank recognition of the public estimate of Congress, when its members consider that they will best earn the public approval by effacing themselves in their collective character.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Business Men Against McKinley.

The business men are against McKinley, the Chicago Tribune (Rep.) says. They want "industrial peace. They dread the enactment of an ultra-protective tariff, followed by the inevitable revulsion and the enactment of one which will have altogether too little protection."

Never Called Upon to Pay.

Congress has done nothing to lower the Pullman rates. The Congressman may belong to that section of the public which does not know what the Pullman rates are.—St. Louis Republic.

WASHINGTON GHOSTS

SHADES OF GREAT MEN HAUNT THE CAPITOL.

A Correspondent Says Among Them Are the Spirits of President John Quincy Adams, Vice President Henry Wilson and Black Jack Logan.

Spooks in High Life.

Washington correspondence:

Do you believe in ghosts? Do you wish to collect a rich and rare stock of flesh-creeping spook stories? If so, come to Washington, hie yourself to that great white building on the hill known as the Capitol, give one of the blue-coated guides an extra tip and he will take you amid the mazes of that wonderful building and regale you with enough dark tales to last you a lifetime. Or, if they do not satisfy you, pick acquaintance with one of the seedy, hungry looking individuals you will find at the foot of the grand staircase, who ten to one is a professional guide also, and ask him to point out to you all the haunted houses in the city and tell you their weird histories. And either of these gentlemen will tell you what they believe to be the plain, unvarnished truth. The Capitol police have strange things to tell about the uncanny doings in the vaulted corridors after nightfall. The ghosts they tell about are not simple, everyday visitors from the land of the unseen, but the shades of distinguished men in the nation's history. The majestic spiritual ego of John Quincy Adams, once President of the United States; of Vice-President Henry Wilson, a Massachusetts statesman, and of Gen. John A. Logan, famous in field and forum, are said to haunt by night the echoing halls where legislators tread by day.

When the redoubtable Andrew Jackson was inaugurated, March 4, 1829, Adams retired for a short while to private life. It was not until Feb. 21, 1848, that he died. He was at that time a representative, and his passing away was tragic. During a session of the House he suddenly slipped from his seat to the floor. Apoplexy, the doctors said. He was borne to a room near by, where not many hours later he died, with but a few murmured words.

It was not long after the unhappy event that there was whispering among the officials who took care of the Capitol Building after dark that someone like unto the dead Adams was seen nightly to pass out of the speaker's room, in which the ex-President had died, into the House chamber, which is now statuary hall, and wander about among the seats. It would pause beside the chair occupied by Adams, then gradually fade away into nothingness. After the seats were removed and statues places in the hall the change apparently disconcerted the distinguished ghost, for, according to the best authorities, those who claimed to have seen the whole proceeding, the shade of the statesman wandered around and around the chamber, and finally passed out without apparently having found his former place of daily occupation. But later a small bronze tablet was inserted in the floor, through the good offices of somebody who felt sorry for the ghost, upon the spot where John Quincy Adams' chair used to stand, and then it is said the ghost walked as before, with every evidence of being once again at peace. This particular shade was seen on Feb. 21 last, and is not expected again until that date.

What purported to be the ghost of the beloved Vice-President is said to move and have its ethereal being in the Vice-President's room, the marble room, where the Senators receive their callers, and in the corridors thereabouts. It was while in the first named apartment that Mr. Wilson was also suddenly visited by the angel of death, Nov. 10, 1875, who remained with him until Nov. 22, when he died, after three severe shocks of apoplexy.

The apparition supposed to represent this poor man is occasionally declared to manifest itself suddenly, as if evoluted out of the thin air, and as quickly vanish upon the approach of a mortal.

The spirit of Black Jack Logan is said to make its appearance at exactly twenty minutes after 12 o'clock midnight. The general was at one time chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and out of this committee room he emerges, taking care to close the door after him, and glides swiftly down the corridor, to disappear without trace or sound. This is perhaps the most substantial of all the Capitol ghosts, for there are numbers of persons ready to attest having witnessed his mysterious passage through the gloomy halls.

But it does not take the actual appearance of these shades to make the Capitol a place of grewsomeness and awe at night. In the stillness that pervades a door shutting at one end of the long building may be faintly heard at the other, and a step in the rotunda will come back from all sides with startling echoing. It is one of the stories that every night there is a sound in the portico of the Senate wing as of some one scrubbing the marble floor and the noise of water being thrown down on it is plainly audible. Capitol officials tell of an aged negro who used to be one of the sweeps, and who died a number of years ago, and who, they say, performs his early morning duties of washing up just a few hours before daybreak each day. This ghostly individual is the unseen terror of all the negro laborers who clean up around the Capitol, and they will not work without plenty of light on the subject.

It would give a timid person the fright of his life to walk across statuary hall at midnight and in the dark. In no place in the vast building are the echoes so strange or so ghostly. There are a number of what are called echo stones, by stepping upon which and speaking one is astounded to hear his voice coming up apparently beneath his feet. It is a trick the guides have of startling their customers by stepping up behind some pillar and, just at the moment when the unwary tourist stands on a certain stone, giving voice to a harsh and sepulchral whisper that will reverberate in ghostly accent close in his ear.

Upper Mississippi log owners at Minneapolis, Minn., canvassed the pine timber cut of the winter, finding it 585,000,000 feet, 150,000,000 feet less than a year ago. They voted that only 75 per cent of logs to come down the river shall be sawed, reducing the cut of lumber to about 400,000,000 and directly affecting 10,000 laboring men.

IOWA POPULISTS.

The State Convention in Des Moines Was the Largest in Several Years.

The Iowa Populist State convention held in Des Moines was the largest in several years. All but seven counties were represented and about 600 delegates were present. In addition to the State leaders, National Chairman H. E. Taubeneck and Gen. J. S. Coxey of Ohio were present and made speeches. The temper of the convention was conciliatory and radical action was avoided, the convention falling in line with the wishes of Gen. J. B. Weaver. There was a considerable undercurrent of Boies talk among the delegates, and the hope was freely expressed that the Democratic convention at Chicago would split on the silver question and both wings nominate candidates. If this is done the Iowa Populist delegation at St. Louis will undoubtedly seek to have the silver Democratic nominee for President indorsed, especially if Boies should be the man. Gen. Weaver, who acted as temporary chairman, said:

"If we lose the fight this fall it will be death to our cause this side of revolution. If the gold men win they will refund $500,000,000 of treasury notes into interest-bearing bonds. That is the issue. We are in the crisis and must win."

After his address at the opening of the afternoon session Gen. Weaver, chairman of the committee on resolutions, submitted the following majority report:

Resolved, That the delegates to the St. Louis convention be instructed to do all in their power to secure a union of all the reform forces on a common ticket and a platform embodying the fundamental principles of the Omaha platform, with a further resolution favoring the initiative and referendum.

The minority report was:

We recommend the adoption of the Omaha platform in full, with initiative and referendum added.

After a brief but exciting discussion the majority report was adopted by an overwhelming vote.

The following delegates to the St. Louis convention were selected by the districts named:

First district, G. W. Davis of Louisa and J. M. Holland of Henry; second, Dr. C. W. Wirth of Jackson and T. A. J. Gray of Muscatine; third, Justin Wells of Hardin and C. G. Colvin of Blackhawk; fourth, L. H. Weller of Chickasaw and M. H. Daly of Floyd; fifth, W. H. Calhoun of Marshall and L. S. Wood of Linn; sixth, S. W. Brunt of Keokuk and John R. Clarke of Monroe; seventh, Klem Wheeler of Warren and P. F. Rogers of Dallas; eighth, J. N. McClanahan of Wayne and E. S. Willets of Page; ninth, A. M. Hutchinson of Pottawattamie and L. H. Hull of Guthrie; tenth, J. C. Baker of Palo Alto and Benjamin Spear of Green; eleventh, John Bevins of Woodbury and M. D. Bauner of O'Brien.

Gen. Weaver was chosen to head the list of delegates at large to St. Louis by acclamation.

BROAD GAUGE PLATFORM.

Ohio Prohibitionists Abandon Their Fight on the Single Issue.

At the Ohio Prohibition State convention at Sandusky there was a spirited contest over the money plank, the majority of the committee favoring the free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, and the minority advocating free coinage at a ratio to be fixed by law. The majority report was adopted. The platform declares in brief:

Favors woman suffrage; opposes alien ownership of land; favors government control of railroads and telegraphs; advocates the raising of revenues by taxation on property and incomes, import duties to be levied only as a means of securing equitable commercial relations; declares for Sunday rest; opposes public appropriations for sectarian purposes; favors the election of President, Vice-President and Senators by direct vote; favors liberal pensions; asks for a revision of the immigration laws; favors letting aliens vote after one year from the time of full naturalization; favors the initiative and referendum, and declares for free coinage at 16 to 1.

After the platform had been adopted the following State ticket was nominated:

For Secretary of State, Alvin Crabtree, of Springfield; for Supreme Judge, M. B. Chase, of Marion; for Dairy and Food Commissioner, Joseph Love, of Coshocton; for member Board of Public Works, Charles E. Ileff, of Cincinnati; for electors-at-large, Rev. J. W. Ball, of Mount Vernon, and J. W. Benfield, of Dayton.

Nine delegates to the national convention were chosen, as follows:

G. P. Macklin, Dayton; H. A. Thompson, Springfield; Henrietta G. Monroe, Springfield; R. S. Thompson, Springfield; L. B. Logan, Alliance; G. T. Stewart, Norwalk; Seth H. Ellis, Springboro; F. H. Jones, Wellsville; Florence Richards, Ottawa.

ALABAMA DEMOCRATS.

Indorse President Cleveland and the Free Coinage of Silver.

The Alabama Democratic State convention nominated a full ticket, headed by J. T. Johnston for Governor. The resolutions adopted advocate free coinage of silver at 16 to 1, instruct the twenty-two delegates from the State to vote as a unit on all questions at the Chicago convention, advocate the repeal of the 10 per cent State bank tax, favor honest elections and the legalizing of primary elections. The convention enthusiastically applauded the mention of President Cleveland's name and adopted a resolution indorsing his foreign policy and the appointment of Southern men to cabinet positions, but disapproving his financial policy. The votes in the various stages of the convention's proceedings showed the relative strength of the two factions to be about 033 to 101 in favor of Captain Johnston and the free silver men and against the Democrats who, under the leadership of Congressman Clark, hold to the financial policy of the national administration.

Political Pot.

Populists of Nebraska will meet in Grand Island July 15 to select State delegates. A nominating convention will be held in Hastings at some date in August, to be fixed by the executive committee.

The Connecticut Republican State convention met in New Haven and selected delegates to the national convention. The platform opens with a declaration in favor of a protective tariff and the reciprocity plan advocated by the late James G. Blaine. Upon the currency question the convention says: "We are unalterably opposed to the issue of unsecured paper money, either by the Government or the banks; the free coinage of silver at any ratio, and favor a single standard of value, and that standard gold."

Senator Tillman addressed 5,000 people at Owensboro, Ky., attacking the financial policy of the national administration.

In a caucus at Brattleboro, Vt., to select delegates to the Republican State and district conventions an informal ballot to get the sense of the meeting resulted: McKinley, 90; Reed, 22; Allison, 1. McKinley delegates were chosen.

Chairman Charles C. Maffitt, of the Missouri Democratic State Committee, has resigned his position, but will remain a member of the committee. The refusal of the Sedalia convention to ratify his nomination as a district delegate to the Chicago convention is said to be the reason.

CROP PROSPECTS EXCELLENT.

Timely Rains and Warm Weather Encourage the Farmers.

The Government reports as to the condition of the crops throughout the country, and the general effect of the weather upon the cultivation, growth and harvest of the same, show that the unusually warm weather throughout the central, eastern and southern portions of the country has rapidly advanced the season, which has been unusually backward, and has been very favorable for farming operations and growth of vegetation, which has been remarkably rapid. Winter wheat has shown marked improvement generally and is reported as doing well in Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas and in portions of Missouri, and, while an improvement has been noted in Kentucky and West Virginia, the condition of the crop in these States is poor, some having been plowed up. In sections of Missouri and Texas, winter wheat seeding is well advanced in Southern Minnesota and is about finished in portions of Eastern South Dakota, where some of the early sown is up. In North Dakota no seeding has yet been done. Preparations for corn planting have been pushed rapidly during the week, and in the more southerly sections planting has continued with much activity. Some corn has been planted in Illinois and Nebraska, and planting will be begun in Iowa this week. Cotton planting has continued under favorable conditions, and in the central and southern portions of the cotton region is coming up generally to a good stand. Germination, however, has been slow, owing to the drought in some sections of the western portion of the cotton region. General rainfall would prove of much benefit from the Ohio Valley southward, and also in Texas, where rain is needed to insure a stand of cotton. The report by States follows:

Illinois—A hot week, with showers at the beginning and ending, has caused a remarkable advance in all vegetation. Winter wheat, rye and grasses are greatly improved and are doing finely; grasses afford pasturage. Oats are coming up; gardens and potatoes are planted; also some corn, but preparation of corn land is general. Fruits are laden with blossoms.

Wisconsin—Warm weather and abundant rainfall has been very favorable for the rapid advancement of all crops. Wheat is greatly improved, especially in localities where it was thought to have been entirely winter-killed. Oats are all sown, and work well advanced in southern section. Little plowing has been done in the central and northern sections.

South Dakota—Seeding is about finished in southeastern counties, with some wheat above ground; elsewhere seeding has been retarded by heavy precipitation and cool weather. No winter wheat sown. In the central and northern portions the soil is too wet, and warmer and bright weather is needed.

Nebraska—A good growing week, but rain and wet ground have retarded farm work. The seeding of small grain is about completed, except in the northwest section. Plowing for corn is progressing; very little planted, and this only in southern counties. Fruit trees are blooming profusely, and generally uninjured by frost of Saturday.

Kansas—A warm, rainy week, which greatly improved all crop conditions. Wheat much improved and growing rapidly. Corn coming up in central and southern counties, and is a good stand. Fruit promised a full crop, but was injured some by frost of Saturday. Grass is supporting stock in south counties.

Missouri—The unusually warm weather forced vegetation forward very rapidly. Wheat is suffering for rain in some central and southwestern counties, but elsewhere is generally doing well. Corn planting is progressing favorably and cotton has begun. Pasturage good. Fruit prospects are excellent.

Iowa—High temperature and abundant moisture have pushed vegetation rapidly, and the season is now as early as usual. Grass and small grains are making a fine stand; winter wheat generally promising. Plowing for corn well advanced and planting will soon begin.

Indiana—Warm weather has rapidly improved all growing crops. But few showers fell and rain is much needed. Wheat, barley, rye, clover and grass have advanced rapidly. Oats nearly all sown. Tobacco plants coming on well in Switzerland County. Fruit is in bloom. Plowing for corn continues.

Ohio—Excessively warm, sunshiny, windy and dry week, except in northern portion, where rainfall was about normal. Conditions were very favorable for plowing and planting. All vegetation is improved. Apples, apricots, cherries, pears, peaches and plums are blooming.

Michigan—Abnormally high temperature and plentiful showers have rapidly advanced all vegetation and farm work. Winter wheat, rye and grass are doing finely. Plowing and oat and grass seeding in progress. Early potato planting has just begun.

WOMAN TO WOMAN.

Women are being taught by bitter experience that many physicians cannot successfully handle their peculiar ailments known as female diseases.

Doctors are willing and anxious to help them, but they are the wrong sex to work understandingly.

When the woman of to-day experiences such symptoms as backache, nervousness, lassitude, whites, irregular or painful menstruation, pains in groins, bearing-down sensation, palpitation, "all gone" feeling and blues, she at once takes Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, feeling sure of obtaining immediate relief.

Should her symptoms be new to her, she writes to a woman, Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., who promptly explains her case, and tells her free how to get well.

Indeed, so many women are now appealing to Mrs. Pinkham for advice, that a score of lady secretaries are kept constantly at work answering the great volume of correspondence which comes in every day. Each letter is answered carefully and accurately, as Mrs. Pinkham fully realizes that a life may depend upon her reply, and into many and many a home has she shed the rays of happiness.

THE FARM AND HOME.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO FARMER AND HOUSEWIFE.

Economics to Be Practiced in Erecting and Maintaining a Hot House—Caustic Potash the Best Chemical Dehorner—How to Test Butter.

Concerning a Hothouse.

A hothouse need not be an expensive affair to be useful. It is economy to make it so tight by battening cracks and a layer of building paper that no wind can get through. I find that a building simply wide enough to accommodate a seven-foot sash does very well, says Howard B. Cannon, in the Grange Visitor. Such a building may be heated inexpensively by a stove, sunk well down and delivering its smoke into a flue made of sewer-pipes. The stove should be placed at the end where you enter, and the chimney should rise from the far end. A hot bed to start onion or tomato plants can be constructed for perhaps 12½ cents a square foot of glass area, by one doing his own work. When your spring crop of plants is out, if you are a small farmer, you may find your house useful to store some flats, etc., under the benches. I should advise putting on a temporary roof, that the sash be not warped by the heat of summer. When fall comes one finds a hothouse handy for curing seed corn, onion sets, etc. I used mine to ripen tomatoes in after frosts came, and followed these by bushels of seed corn. The last use of the year for the sash, however, will please many who perhaps have not seen such. We built rough sheds into which our henhouses open, and left an opening at the south end in each shed seven by six feet. Across these openings "chicken wire" was stretched. On the approach of blustering weather two sashes were slipped into each opening, one above the other, and secured in place. This gives a sheltered and warm place for the hens to scratch. I hope we will find our scratching sheds to be egg-factories during the cold weather.

How Long Cows Shall Be Kept.

Unless a cow has a remarkable individual value as a milk and butter producer, and has shown ability to perpetuate these qualities in her progeny, ten to twelve years old is long enough to keep her, says an exchange. A good many cows condemn themselves long before that time. We have known cows to breed up to eighteen or nineteen years old, but they had to be fed ground grain and bran, mixed with moistened cut hay. There was no profit in milk and butter made this way, for the old cow gradually lessened her yield. The object was to produce calves from this cow to be used for breeding. But as the cow decreased in value, so also did her calves. Those last born were feeble and not very good milkers, either. A cow whose milk production has been artificially forced for two or three years is apt never thereafter to come up to the standards she had before, as the production of an excessive amount of milk impairs the animal's constitutional vigor.

To Test Butter.

A possible way to test butter is to get a clean piece of white paper, smear it with the suspected article, then roll it up and set it on fire. If the butter is good, the smell of burning will be decidedly pleasant, but if there is artificial animal fat in the composition, there is no mistake about the tallowy odor.

About Plowing.

Plowing is hard work for the team, but it is comparatively easy work for the plowman, except on rocky or stumpy land, where the plow has frequently to be pulled back and lifted up to avoid some obstruction. For these reasons a strong, active team that will walk right along with a good furrow behind it should always be secured if possible. It is not easy to make good work with a poor team, and if it is not equal to its task there is much unnecessary waiting at the end of the furrow and resting. The work of holding the plow is so easy on level land free from stone, that even a child can do it, while holding the handles makes it easier work to walk in the furrow than to follow the same team with a drag over plowed ground. That is hard, dragging work for both man and teams, and it needs an able-bodied man instead of the young boy who is usually put at this job, while the man takes as his part the far easier task of holding the plow, which on level, clean land is no task at all.

Ashes with Stable Manure.

Whoever has ever mixed fresh caustic ashes with manure from the stable knows how quickly a strong odor of ammonia is given off. It is wasteful of the fertilizer to do this while the manure is exposed to the air, but when it is to be plowed under very soon the loss is not great. In the soil the ashes will not only make the manure ferment more rapidly, but they will themselves become a much more valuable fertilizer through absorption of the ammonia. This will quickly convert caustic potash into the nitrate of potash, which is the most powerful fertilizer known, and is good for any kind of crop. We have sometimes applied hen manure in hills for melons and cucumbers, mixing it with the earth, and after mixing sprinkling a few hard-wood ashes in the bed and covering with earth before planting the seeds. Vines thus treated did better than with any other kind of manure we ever used.

Feeding Value of Manure.

Concerning the feeding value of raw potatoes for milch cows, John Gould, the well-known Western dairyman, says: "Compared with ordinary foods at present prices they are worth from 6 to 7 cents per bushel. When fed raw to a cow the potato influences her milk. The milk will not cream so well, and the butter will lack in grain and texture. I would not feed more than a peck per day to a cow. A creamery in Clinton County lost their entire trade because the patrons fed an excess of raw potatoes to their cows. Some of them fed a bushel or more per day to a cow. The New York expert butter men who handled the butter wrote the patrons, telling them they were feeding potatoes in too large quantities, and if their trade was recovered potatoes must be abandoned. When cooked and mixed with some nitrogenous grains they are a good ration, if not fed in too large quantities. They are best as a fattening ration for pigs or other fattening animals.

Pruning Trees Before Transplanting.

In ordering trees from a nursery it should be remembered that the pruning is never completed as it should be when the trees are put into the ground. There is usually a quantity of top with perhaps 50 to 100 buds, each of which if left to grow will produce a feeble shoot. Cut the top back to three or four buds and leave these to grow into the future branches of the tree. Thus started the tree will begin to make its top the first season after setting out. The roots also will need to be cut back as well as the tops. In most cases, if the trees have been sent far and have been long on their journey, the small feeding roots will be dried up and of no use. Cut the large roots with a knife that will make a clean cut, and the new roots will spring from these.

Feeding Pigs for Growth, Not Fat.

Except for the pigs that are to be kept for breeding purposes, liberal feeding, so as to keep the animals constantly in a thrifty condition, should be the rule. As an old farmer used to say, he could go to his pen at any time and find most, if not all, its occupants fit to make good, marketable pork. Care should be taken not to overfeed, and especially with corn, which is too fattening and does not promote growth as do milk and other grains. If oats and peas are ground together, they will make with water an excellent substitute for milk. The breeding sow should have milk if possible, and little other feed except in winter some roots, and in summer what they can get at pasture or in orchard.

The Expensiveness of Pasturing.

Wherever land is dear the pasture provides for stock that, considering its nutritive value, is much dearer than that grown by cultivation. In the first place, the grass, even if undisturbed, does not yield as heavy a crop as will most of the grains and corn drilled for fodder. In the pasture the constant trampling of stock lessens the yield still further. What the stock waste in a clover field will in most places pay for the labor of cutting and carrying the clover to them, provided the field is near where the stock is kept, and the cutting of the clover can be done by horse power. Yet there are many places where cultivation is impossible, and using these as permanent pastures is the only way to make the land useful and profitable.

Selling Ability Necessary.

The American Dairyman remarks that selling ability is just now more desirable to farmers than producing ability, and that the place to display it is in packing. The farmer must lead the consumer into temptation, which may be contrary to Scripture, but is necessary to sell goods. Even a cabbage is trimmed up by the skillful salesman to attract the customer. The Dairyman illustrates by the sale of a large consignment of California fresh fruit which was beautifully packed, and brought prices to delight the owner's soul, while other fruit, not opening up well, went for a song.

Best Chemical Dehorner.

The best chemical dehorner, according to Hoard's Dairyman, is caustic potash, to be had in sticks for a few cents at any druggist's. When the calf is a few days old, clip off the hair over the horn button, moisten one end of the caustic (hold the other end wrapped in paper) and rub it on the button until the skin is very red and highly inflamed. When the scab comes off, if the least trace of the horn nut remains, repeat the application. Put the caustic only on the nut button, as it burns intensely.

Wheat Bran for Cows.

No kind of feed is so handy for feeding milch cows as wheat bran; it is light and bulky in proportion to its nutrition, and it has the elements needed to make a large milk flow. But it does not make rich milk, and needs to be supplemented with grain meal, or the cow will give so much from her own fat that she will become thin in flesh, and be of little use for butter-making the following season.

Testing a Thermometer.

Before purchasing a thermometer invert the instrument; the mercury should fall to the end in a solid "stick." If it separates into several small columns, the tube contains air, and will not register accurately. Nine persons out of ten think the mercurial column is round, but this is not the case; it is flat, and the opening in the tube is as small as the finest thread.

Farm Notes.

The way that hogs have been going in the face of the low rates for cattle, sheep and horses has been very cheering to swine producers. The price compared with the price of grain is one of profitable production.

Never be satisfied with what the farm does, but endeavor to still further improve it. The farmer who concludes that he has reached the best that can be obtained from his farm will find himself going backward. Successful farmers are those who are striving to obtain more.

Farm, Stock and Home holds that under present conditions the sum paid for hired help must be the smallest possible, and only concentrated products—butter, beef, pork, wool, poultry, etc.—should be shipped by rail. Along these lines lay large doses of agricultural salvation.

It is much easier to feed whole grain than to grind it, but it is better to put the labor to it than to lose in the feed. Ground grain can be more intimately mixed with coarse food, and in that respect it not only serves to balance the ration, but the combination of foods cheapens the whole and more perfect digestion results.

Here is a point on asparagus. A great many persons who grow it do so with flat culture. The proper mode for the best results is to hill up the rows. Apply fertilizer on the rows now while they are flat, and then turn a furrow on the row from each side. If the row is hilled up two feet it is all the better. Cut the stalks just as they are peeping out of the ground. They will then be tender from the tips to the butts, and as white as celery. If allowed to grow out of the ground the tips will be tender and the butts tough.

THE YOUNG FOLKS.

THE RIVER OF ROCKABYE.

Oh, river fair, with your rippling flow,
That lieth afar in a land of dreams
Where the stainless lilies of morning blow,
And the grace of eternal glory beams;
Thy lilting croon is the mother song
That hushes an infant's wailing cry—
Oh, the way is dark and the years are long
From the beautiful river of Rockabye.

While the jaded spirit but longs for sleep
In this wearying wretched race for gold,
How fair the glories of morning seem
When the night is upon us! and would that I Might drift away in a sinless dream
On the beautiful river of Rockabye.

—[Albert Bigelow Paine.

AN ARCTIC BABY.

The Arctic ocean doesn't seem to be the most delectable place for a birthplace But a baby was born there not long ago on Herschel island. This was nearer to the north pole than any baby was ever born before. Of course, there are Eskimo babies in the arctic region, but not so far north as this and besides, this was a white baby.

Herschel island is off the north coast of Alaska, 1,500 miles farther north than Sitka. There are a few white people on the island, families of the whalers who cruise in these waters. There was great excitement over the arrival of the little stranger, and the wives of the four whaling captains who were there, were ready to almost idolize her; an Episcopal minister was in the camp at the time, having been sent there as a missionary. With all the ceremony possible in such a place, the little girl was christened Helen Herschel Sherman, her father being Captain Sherman. The baby came at the season of the year which has continuous daylight, and seemed very much pleased with such a sunny world. She may be lost in wonder when the long night come.

REMARKABLE INSTINCT IN A DOG.

A remarkable illustration of a dog's intelligence has occurred in Sutton. A married lady there has a small pet, and on her removal to a London hospital, owing to ill-health, the animal became greatly distressed, running hither and thither in search of his mistress, to whom he was greatly attached. A week afterwards the dog disappeared, and two days later returned to its home footsore and weary.

It subsequently transpired that the faithful terrier had found his way to the hospital where his mistress lay. No one guided him and he traveled the whole way alone. He waited about for hours trying to gain admission, and finally, after many rebuffs, succeeded in running into the hospital and finding the bed where the lady lay. With great delight he hailed her, and after satisfying himself that she was safe he trotted back to Sutton about fourteen miles distant.

FEATHERED GARDENERS.

Fancy encountering in an unexplored land, in the recesses of a primeval forest far away from human habitations a tiny cabin set in miniature pleasure grounds studded with brilliant flowers.

That such a piece of workmanship, more lovely than the ingenuity of any mere animal has ever before been known to construct is in reality built with beaks or claws is probably an idea less likely to enter the mind of the discoverer, than that fairies, after all, do exist and flying from civilized lands have found refuge here and that the little house and mossy meadow is one of their places of abode.

The architect, however, is in reality a bird which, though allied to the magnificent birds of paradise, that also inhabit the great island of New Guinea, is neither remarkable for color nor size, being of a plain uniform reddish brown and about the size of our common American robin.

As described by its discoverer, the garden bird, for so he calls it, when it sets out to build one of its remarkable structures first selects a woody plant with a stem about the height and girth of the handle of a lady's parasol. This plant must be surrounded by a flat piece of land on a level with the ground about it. Around the trunk of the shrub which it uses as a center pole, the little feathered workman proceeds to build up from the prettiest mosses it can find, a cone about as large across its base as a dinner plate. This is not done alone to beautify the cabin, but to strengthen its central support, which is to sustain the entire weight of the construction. It selects for its rafters the long, straight, slender, stems of a kind of orchid (Dendrobium) that grows in large, dense tufts on the mossy boughs of lofty forest trees sending out upright branches about twenty inches in length. One reason the wise birds have for selecting these stems is that the plant to which they belong is an apiphite or air plant, and requires only air and moisture to live and grow. The small and pretty leaves so closely packed together will continue alive and fresh after the stems upon which they grow are built into the walls of the cabin that would otherwise soon become unsightly and fall into decay.

All about the top of the center pole and slanting outward from it, regularly, laid with their upper ends resting upon the central support and their lower ones on the ground are the long stems placed, all around except immediately in front, where an opening is left for a doorway, so that when finished the cabin is quite regular in form and conical in shape. Many other stems are also used and so compactly interwoven that the whole structure is strong and impervious to the rain. Around the central cone of moss runs a horseshoe-shaped apartment or gallery. The cabin is about twenty inches high and twice that in diameter.

"But," says their discoverer, "the aesthetic tastes of our gardeners are not restricted to the construction of a cabin" Their fondness for flowers and gardens is still more remarkable. Directly in front of the door of their cabin is a level space occupying at least as much ground as the structure itself. This is the garden of fresh, green, growing moss brought here by the birds and kept with the utmost care smooth and clean, entirely free from dirt or litter of any kind; all stones, sticks, falling from the trees above or brought by the wind being at once removed The verdant and velvety surface exhibited by the miniature meadow does not entirely satisfy its owners, however. Something is yet wanting, and they proceed to scatter over it the most brilliantly colored flowers and fruits they can gather about the forest. Wings of butterflies, lightly painted shades of beetles and showy fungus growths. The greater number of these ornaments are collected together near the entrance of the cabin. The variety of objects thus exhibited is very great, and they are always of the most brilliant colors. As soon as any have been so long exposed as to lose their freshness they are taken from the garden, thrown away, and replaced by new ones

It remains to be said that these little cabins are not used by the garden birds as nests. Their real homes are in the tops of the tallest forest trees; it is there they lay their eggs and rear their young. These little dainty summer houses and flower gardens are, if you please, their playhouses, where it is probable they invite their lady and gentlemen friends for a frolic.

The Aged Pontiff.

The Pope celebrated his 87th birthday on the 2d of March, which was also the nineteenth anniversary of his accession to the pontifical chair. In the long list of popes only nine have worn the tiara over twenty years, the longest reign being that of immediate predecessor of the present Pontiff, Pius IX., which extended to thirty-two years, exceeding that of Peter, thus breaking an old tradition in the church and overturned its most venerable precedent. Only three popes have reached a greater age than the present one, the oldest having been Gregory IX., who reached his 100th birthday and died in 1241. The holy father is a little in advance of Gladstone and Bismarck, and, unlike them, can neither resign nor be turned out, so that he is still in the active exercise of his functions and is the oldest sovereign and statesman in Europe.

Now It's Fireproof Paper.

An inhabitant of Berlin is responsible for the invention of fireproof paper. A considerable quantity of asbestos fiber of the best quality, with several other ingredients, is mixed with the ordinary wood pulp, and then the entire mass is placed in the box, with the addition of some line water and borax. Paper thus produced will resist the direct influence of a flame, and can be placed even in a white heat with impunity.

A new departure has been inaugurated at the Chicago passenger station of the Northwestern Line (Chicago and North-Western Railway) which will be found a great convenience to the traveling public. A corps of uniformed attendants has been provided to render both incoming and outgoing passengers all necessary attention, directing them to carriages, omnibuses and street cars, carrying hand baggage, assisting persons in feeble health, and making themselves useful in every way in their power. The attendants wear blue uniforms and bright red caps, and the service is entirely free. The North-Western Line is the through-car route between Chicago and St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth, Ashland, Council Bluffs, Omaha, Sioux City, Denver, Salt Lake, San Francisco, Portland and many other important cities of the West and Northwest.

House Plants.

Saturate the earth around house plants every day with the coffee left over from breakfast. It stimulates them. Plants that have a red or purple blossom will be rendered extremely brilliant in color by covering the earth in their pots with about half an inch of pulverized charcoal. A yellow flower will not be affected in any way by the use of charcoal.

Old Southern "Clark."

The Speaker of the South Carolina House of Representatives and the President of the Senate call the clerk "clark." This excites surprise in strangers, but it is good old English ortheoepy of the Elizabethan era. This pronunciation is not often heard in cities nowadays, even in the South, where more of the old forms of speech linger than in the North, but it is frequent enough in the Tennessee, Virginia, and Carolina mountain districts.

Garrett-Houser.

Roy C. Garrett and Miss Edna Houser of Indianapolis married at Ft. Wayne this afernoon.

Our young friend Roy C. Garrett thinks he sprung a joke on us by riding to Fort Wayne this morning in a carriage with Lou Harding. We have, however, been watching for his departure, as we heard a few days ago that when he returned he would bring with him a handsome young bride. Our expectations have proven true. He was married at Fort Wayne this afternoon to Miss Edna Houser of Indianapolis.

Mr. and Mrs. Garrett are both worthy young people. They are well known in Auburn. Roy has been a clerk for M. E. Garrett for several years and Mrs. Garrett has lived here all her life time up to a little over a year ago when they moved to Indianapolis. They will make their home in Auburn and we believe will occupy a part of the Dr. Casebeer property.

Sold To England.

Auburn sends her products everywhere and we have often said that with our inventive genius our natural productions and no laws to hamper us, the United States can beat the world. This is coming true almost every day. To-day a small box was sent from the Auburn express office, marked to "John Wilson, 33 Market St., White Horse Inn, Aylesbury, Bucks, England." It was but a small affair, but the great distance made the express charge $2.50. It is a mole trap, one of the kind made here in Auburn.

In Memoriam.

In Otis, Berkshire county, Massachusetts, on Monday, March 30, 1896, James Wolcott Case yielded up his spirit to God who gave it. Born June 13, 1822, in Depauville, Jefferson county, N. Y., he had almost completed his 74th year.

In 1847 he entered Allegheny College, Meadville, Penn. In order to obtain the means to meet his expenses there, he cleared off the timber from a piece of land in Ohio belonging to a Mr. Hitchcock. Men who are willing to do hard manual labor for an education are not so frequently found now as they were fifty years ago. In these days when the opportunities of culture are so multiplied, we find too many who will not use them. We prize that for which we are willing to labor, and Mr. Case enjoyed and appreciated his college studies. In the spring of 1849, before he had completed his sophomore year, he went south, to Mississippi, where he taught, probably in a school, for in those days the south looked almost exclusively to the north for her educators.

Whether Mr. Case was an abolitionist before he went to Mississippi, the writer is not informed. He was one most certainly after his return. For some months in 1850 he taught school in Freedom, Portage county, Ohio. During the same time he met, wooed and won Miss Eliza Ann Strickland, a native of Otis, Mass. They were married in Trumbull county, Ohio, October 23, 1850, and twelve days later, Nov. 4, they reached Auburn. Here they lived for many years. The writer remembers that Mr. Case taught school in Auburn either the first or second winter after his arrival here perhaps both, in the little, old school house which stood at the corner of Jackson and Fourth streets. The Mehodist church held its meetings and Sunday school there, not having yet erected a building for worship. Mr. and Mrs. Case united with them. For years he was teacher and superintendent in the Sunday School. Their home they built on the east side of Main street directly opposite Dr. Ford's house. Here came to them, after some years, their first born son, and hence while still an infant, they carried him with aching hearts to his last resting place under the blue sky. Here in the spring of 1859 their hearts were again gladdened by a little child, James Albert, whom God in mercy spared to bless their declining years.

During the years he lived in Auburn Mr. Case engaged in various occupations, but whether he called himself farmer, merchant, postmaster, mill owner or manufacturer, he was by natural inclination a student, rather than a man of affairs. During the first twenty years of Mr. Case's residence in Auburn, no railroads passed through here. News came slowly and there were intervals for digestion and assimilation. Ideas took deeper root, were held with more tenacity, and became fixed principles. The writer well remembers the long talks on religious or political topics between her father and Mr. Case. His slow, deliberate tones still sound in her ears. In November, 1882, Mr. and Mrs. Case removed to Ann Arbor, Michigan, where their only son was pursuing his studies. He completed his University course in June 1884, and in August went to Washington, D. C. Two years later Mrs. Case died, May, 1886, and in 1887, Mr. Case followed his son to Washington. During the later years of his life, Mr. Case's readings and studies, which in earlier life had been as general as his opportunities afforded, were confined in a great degree to the Bible, its doctrines and its prophecies, in which he took intense interest. Failing health occasioned his removal to Ocean Grove, N. J., in October, 1894, but the change was not beneficial. It was thought possible that the bracing air of Massachusetts might invigorate him and he went to Otis, his wife's birth place, August 15, 1895. Here the weary pilgrim tarried for a few months before the inevitable summons came. He often expressed his faith in God and his readiness to go to rest, but it was pneumonia, that scourge of youth and age alike, which, impatient of slower dissolution, abruptly severed the spirit from its body.

Rev. E. L. Ford officiated at funeral services held in Otis April 1. Thence his son brought his remains to Ann Arbor, Michigan, where on April 2, in the presence of friends, Rev. C. M. Coburn, pastor of the M. E. church, officiating, they were interred by his wife in Forest Hill cemetery to await the resurrection.

It would not be right to omit in this connection a hearty tribute of appreciation for her who was a member of Mr. Case's family from the beginning until she left Auburn in 1878 to make a home for her nephew in Ann Arbor. All that she could do to further the interests of her sister and her family, she did with ungrudging generosity. It is not to day that the people of Auburn need to learn to esteem Miss Cornelia Strickland. Her virtues all know, who know her and we trust and believe her declining years will be made happy by the unstinted gratitude of him who is left.

My daughter Mattie, aged 14, was afflicted last spring with St. Vitus dance and nervousness, her entire right side was numb and nearly paralyzed. The Coinage Question

Albany Times-Union.

In Great Britain, Canada and Australia the single gold standard has been adopted, but this is not so in all the British possessions. In India, 60 years ago, England demonetized gold. Twenty years after she had made gold her own sole standard, she conceded the silver standard to India. Deeming bimetallism impracticable, gold was denied admission to the British-India mints, and the silver rupee alone was coined. England continued to maintain silver coinage in India until 1893, when the fall of the siver rupee was believed to be producing ruinous effects which could be withstood only by limiting its coinage, in the same way as France ceased the coinage of the silver five franc piece in order to prevent its falling to the figure of its intrinsic value. Thirty years ago some persons in India tried to bring about the remonetization of gold, but England prevented it, deeming silver monometalism at that time better suited to the Indian people. In the British Straits Settlements, the currency now consists of silver dollars struck at the British-Hong Kong mint.

Board of Education

Pursuant to law, the County Board of Education met at the County Superintendent's office Saturday. All of the twenty members were present. The forenoon was devoted to inspecting, comparing, correcting and filing Enumeration Reports. A number of subjects were discussed at the afternoon session —The purchase of school supplies, Hiring Teachers, School Levies, Time for Schools to Begin, etc.

The general opinion was that Trustees should begin to hire their teachers for next year at once. It was decided by a vote of the Board that schools should begin in the townships Monday, Sept. 14. The town schools will most probably begin one week earlier, Sept. 7th. "The Common School Graduating Exercises" was discussed, but the dates of these commencements will be determined later. There will be exercises in all the townships except Newville, also Auburn, Butler and Ashley will have common school graduation.

Bridge Letting.

Thursday's Daily.

We yesterdae spoke of the bridge letting by the commissioners. There were a number of bidders and it was thought at one time that they would not be able to get satisfactory terms. But after looking over the matter, the awards were finally made.

HOISINGTON BRIDGE.

This is across the River northeast of St. Joe, and was let to the Massillon Bridge Co., for $3,800 for the entire thing including abutments. The bridge itself is to be iron and the abutments are to be what is called "tubular." They are large iron tubes which are to be filled with cement, making, as the bidders claim, a substantial foundation, and much cheaper in cost, than stone.

THE FISH CREEK BRIDGE.

This bridge is across Fish creek near B. F. Cornelin's in Troy township and the bridge which is to be of iron, was let to the Lafayette Bridge Co. at $1,123. In this case the abutments will be a separate job, and will be of stone This part of the contract is not let, though appears likely that the work will be done by Mr. Ruple, who has done so much satisfactory work of this kind in the county.

THE SMITHFIELD BRIDGE.

This is across Cedar Creek northeast of Waterloo, and was let to G. W. Werntz for $475. It is to be what is called a "leg bridge." The bridge is made of iron and is supported on iron "legs" and these legs are supported, we believe, on a large "mud sill" below the ground. As to all the bridges the Board think they have made the best bargain they could at this time.

Queer Operation.

A strange disease, or rather a strange occurrence is noted in a recent number of this Goshen Times. The item reads:

Landlord Tase, of Hotel Neufer, who had a stone cut from his mouth, the other day, is improving and thinks he will be all right again in a few days. The stone is about the size of a pea and had laid imbedded in the membrane under the tongue for about 25 year. The gentleman thought it was a cancer and was operated upon by Dr, Dreese. Mr. Tase says he first noticed the presence of the tormentor about a quarter of a century ago while eating. It at that time became quite painful and grew very sore, involving the glands on the right side of his face. The swelling was so great that it was feared he would choke to death. He has the specimen in a bottle and will preserve it.

Struck by Lightning

As the hard thunder storm was coming up to-day about noon, just before the storm opened, there was a terrific crash, and everybody thought it had struck them or close by them. The immediate downpour of a deluge of rain kept people indoors, and it was not till later, that the real point of the stroke was found. It had hit the north end of Wm. McIntyre's residence on west Seventh street. It appears that the bolt had come down in such a way as to miss the tall trees there, but struck one of the little wooden pinnacles on the roof, the part that projects over the hall door at the north side. It made a few splinters, and knocked off a few shingles, but did no other damage. Fortunately no one was in the building, as Mr. McIntyre and his family are still in Little Rock. They have been in the South all the winter. Though there was much heavy thunder, and at one time a considerable fall of hail, we have not heard of any other damage in town.

AN UNUSUAL CASE

Married Again By Decree of Court.

(Columbia City Post.)

Judge Adair gave loose divorce proceedings a black eye in the Circuit Court this morning, by annulling and vacating the decree of divorce entered at the September term in the case of Sarah Gooder. It seems that upon the petition of Sarah, she was granted a divorce, having presented the necessary proof, and her husband appearing to let the case go by default. But when he found that he was a divorced man, the defendant bestirred himself, and commenced suit to set aside the decree, which was the case heard this morning. The proof was that the couple continued to live in the same house and eat at the same table and act otherwise as a married couple, up until the day of granting divorce, and that this fact was concealed from the court at the time of granting the former decree. Judge Adair held that such conduct was a scandal upon courts and a mockery of the divorce laws and promptly annulled the former decree, and so George and Sarah are again husband and wife without the intervention of a preacher.

Once a Fisherman Usually a Liar

When a man doth wish to angle,
A hook like this he loves to dangle:

J

His line is both good and strong,
And he catches a fish about so long:

Before he gets home the fish doth grow (?)
And he tells his friends it measured so:

But his friends who have a fishing been,
Know that the man hath lied like sin,
And they simply sit and smile and grin,
And say, while refusing to "take it in."

FORCED TO DIG THEIR GRAVES

Before Being Fired On and Killed By Spaniards.

Tapa (Fla.) special: The horrors of Armenia are duplicated in Cuba, according to Rev. Alberto Diaz, the missionary of the Southern Baptist Church who was recently expelled from the island by order of Captain-General Weyler. "The outside world," says the minister, "has no adequate conception of the bloody work that is being done by Gen. Weyler and his subordinates. In two weeks prior to my deportation over a hundred peaceable Cubans were shot to death in the rural districts of Havana province. Among the killed were many women and little children, who receive no more mercy from the Spaniards than the men. I know these butcheries are being perpetrated, for in several cases I have seen the corpses of the victims and aided in their burial. The principal atrocities have occurred in the districts of Miguel de Padrone and Minas, where Col. Fondeville, who is a favorite of Gen. Weyler, is in command of the Spanish troops. In the Miguel de Padrone District a peculiarly atrocious affair occurred a few days ago. Col Fondeville's troops came upon eleven Cubans while they were at work. The Spaniards forced the Cubans to take spades and dig their own graves. When the graves were finished the Cubans were forced to get in them, and then, at a signal from Col. Fondeville the troops fired, killing the unfortunates. A little earth was thrown over the victims and the Spaniards marched on to commit fresh atrocities.

BUSINESS BULLETIN.

The Weekly Review of Trade by R. G. Dun & Co.

R. G. Dun & Co., in their Weekly Review of Trade says:

"As the season advances there is more business, but advices indicate that on the whole the prevalent feeling is that the gain is less than there was reason to expect while retail trade has been active enough to materially lessen stocks and obligations and thus to prevent a great many threatened embarrassments.

"The general range of prices of commodities, farm and mine, as well as manufactured products is nearly 1 per cent lower than it was April 1, and the lowest ever known, the declines since October, 1892, being 16.7 per cent. This cannot be attributed to scarcity of money, which is easier and more abundant, as the liquidation of many dealers lessens outstanding obligations. Stocks have remained practically without change.

"Wheat has declined 4⅝c for cash. With only two months of the crop year remaining there is little to encourage higher prices. Wool is weak, the wool year closing with the greatest quantity of wool on hand ever carried at this season.

SHAH ASSASSINATED.

Shot Down by a Man from Sayyed.

Teheran (Persia) special: While the Shah was entering the inner court of the Shrine of Shah Abdul Azim, six miles south of this city, for devotion, he was shot and wounded. Immediately after the Shah was shot he was carried to his carriage and in it conveyed to the palace in this city. There he was attended by Dr. Thologian, his chief physician, and other physicians who were hastily sent for. But in spite of their combined efforts his Majesty expired soon after his arrival at the palace. The assassin, who was promptly arrested, is said to be a Sayyed from Kerman, or from the province of that name. It is believed that the murderer has accomplices.

TANNER AT THE TOP.

HEADS THE ILLINOIS REPUBLICAN TICKET.

Clay County Man Gets a Unanimous Vote—Northcott Is Selected for the Second Place—Convention Declares for Protection and "Sound" Money.

Illinois Republicans.

John Riley Tanner was nominated for Governor of Illinois by the Republican State convention at Springfield. William Allen Northcott of Bond County was nominated for Lieutenant Governor.

It was a few minutes past high noon when Dr. T. N. Jamieson, chairman of the State Central Committee, called the convention to order. Every delegate was in his seat and the galleries and aisles outside the space reserved for the delegates and alternates were thronged and visitors outside the hall were struggling to get in. Ald. Martin B. Madden of Chicago was named temporary chairman.

Long before the hour for calling the convention to order the vast auditorium of the building which attracted so much attention at the World's Fair was full. Every seat was occupied. Never in the history of Illinois politics has there been such a crowd at a State convention. The attendance, owing to the size of the hall, was larger than that at many a national convention. There was a wild scramble among the laymen for tickets of admission, but notwithstanding the big-domed building will comfortably house nearly 15,000 people, tickets of admission were hard to get and hard to hold. A large contingent of ladies occupied seats on the platform back of the speaker's table, and another crowd had seats reserved for them outside the space reserved for the delegates.

There was not much excitement at the beginning, only a sort of somber hush. Occasionally some enthusiast would break out with a shout for his favorite, but the shouting was not contagious. The vast throng seemed to be in a serious mood. It seemed to consider that there was serious business to be transacted. It was not a trivial thing. Illinois was to decide as to whether it would support William McKinley of Ohio for President of the United States, or whether its delegates should be instructed for Shelby M. Cullom. While the gubernatorial candidate was being nominated, the committee on resolutions framed a platform for the consideration of the convention. Two of the most important planks, covering the currency and the tariff are given. The money plank is as follows:

The Republicans of Illinois are unyielding and emphatic in their demand for honest money. We are opposed, as we ever have been, to any and every scheme that will give to this country a currency in any way depreciated or debased or in any respect inferior to the money of the most advanced and intelligent nations of the earth. We favor the use of silver as currency, but to the extent only and under such restrictions that parity with gold can be maintained.

This is what the tariff plank says:

The Republican party from the time of Lincoln has been devoted irrevocably to the doctrine of protection of home industries, and we hereby renew and reaffirm our faith in this fundamental principle. We believe in a tariff that will produce revenue sufficient to meet the wants of the government honestly and economically administered, and high enough to insure to home labor regular and remunerative employment. We advocate the unrestricted exchange of noncompetitive articles. We believe in reciprocity, the reciprocity of James G. Blaine, re-enforced by experience and an earnest wish to extend our foreign commerce to the fullest extent consistent with the control of our own market in the sale of articles that can be profitably produced at home.

A BICYCLE TRUST.

A Strong Combination to Keep the Prices Up.

A bicycle trust is being formed in Toledo, O., to keep up the price of wheels and to control the market in the United States. The multiplication of factories has gone on much faster than the demand in the near future promises and unless there is a combination in another year there will be no profit to the manufacturers. A Worcester (Mass.) factoryman and three of Toledo's biggest concerns for making wheels are behind the project. The capitalization of the trust will be $10,000,000.

RUIN BY ROBBERS.

Cripple Creek Is Again Fired and Completely Wiped Out.

Would-be bank robbers have completed the destruction of Cripple Creek, Colo., by fire. What was left unravaged by the terrible conflagration of Saturday was consumed Wednesday. The fire broke out in four places in the Portland Hotel about 1 o'clock, and in a few hours smoking and smoldering ruins were all that was left of the tinder box known as Cripple Creek.

The incendiaries, however, so far as now known, had their labor for their pains. Though the wind again carried the flames to the bank, its destruction followed so quickly that a raid could not successfully be made on its treasure boxes. Besides, a strong guard patrolled the vicinity of the structure until the fire made their further presence unnecessary, and thus human and natural agencies baffled the ruinous plot of the incendiaries.

But deplorable and fatal events accompanied in thrilling fashion this latter lurid and criminal visitation. As in the Saturday fire, dynamite was used to stay the progress of the leaping flames, but the utter recklessness with which the deadly explosive was handled resulted in shocking loss of life. Flying debris or the sudden collapse of buildings, the inmates, of which had not been warned of impending crashes have furnished grewsome work for the coroner and have added to the wretchedness and misery of the scores rendered homeless by the Saturday fire.

The terrible boom of dynamite began at the very first alarm, owing to the stern lesson of Saturday that taught the miners not to hesitate upon the order of getting rid of the buildings in the path of the fiery cyclone. Three special trains of flat cars were ordered over from Victor, and they came loaded to the guards with miners and with dynamite. There was no puerile playing of water on the fire, but the men at once applied the fuse, and used the fearful explosive with the utmost recklessness.

Observing the progress of the fire in their direction as they reached the outskirts of the city, the miners immediately started to the attack with a diligence that caused a loss of life that can only be known after the excitement subsides. All the books of the hotels are burned, and there is no way of checking up systematically. The miners inserted charges of giant powder and then without asking about the condition of affairs they accepted the statement that the Palace Hotel had been emptied during the first craze. The walls responded to the explosive with a crash that could be heard above the roar of the flames. One shriek could be heard above the din, and then a series of awful, nerve-destroying groans sounded on the air.

Many of the victims were asleep, having been engaged on the night shifts in the mines as superintendents and underbosses, and they were forgotten in the excitement. Several of the bodies that had been taken out were beyond human relief. They were dead.

The insurance will be fully three times as much as Saturday's losses. One agent estimates it at five times as much, and says every agency in town was loaded with risks. On million dollars seems a large amount to ascribe to a loss in a hurriedly and cheaply built mining camp, but there can be no question that the loss will more than reach these figures. The insurance loss of $156,000 on Saturday must now be fully $450,000. Every insurance office in town is burned and figures cannot be obtained.

The postoffice is involved again, and probably 10,000 letters will supplement the 50,000 pile that went up Saturday. The fire was evidently the work of incendiaries, and there is not a doubt in the minds of the cooler people that the miscreants were determined to capture the bullion held by the First National for the pay rolls of the camp.

It seems that the fire broke out in four places at the same time. The wind was in the direction of the bank, the same as before, and the plot was carefully laid to arouse the city to a panicky condition and then raid the banks. Again it is said that many of the boomers of the camp, realizing that the business had been overdone, were eager to cash in their stock to the insurance companies for what they carried and vacate the district.

The big gas pumping station near Frankton is now nearing completion and will be ready for use within ten days, when it will begin the sapping of the very life of the gas field in that vicinity. The station is a big concern fitted with massive machinery, a battery of thirteen boilers and two 1200-horse power engines. The station is the property of the Indianapolis Manufacturers' Fuel Supply Company. They have several thousands of acres of the finest gas lands in Madison County under lease, covering Anderson, Frankton, and Alexandria territory. Already fifty wells have been drilled and are ready to turn into the line of the company leading into Indianapolis. It is said that this is the largest and most expensive gas pumping station in the country.

The Executive Committee of the Centennial Commission met in the Governor's parlors, in the State House, Indianapolis. An idea that has been suggested to the Commission by several different persons is that in Indianapolis a large stretch of ground be laid out, its form being exactly that of the State of Indiana. It is proposed that this park be divided off into counties, as the State is, and that each county put up a county building. It is suggested that the free gravel roads, the railroads, and the rivers and the lakes be shown in the park. It is suggested also that in the center of this park a high tower be erected, from which visitors could get a bird's-eye view of what will be a reproduction in miniature of the State. One suggestion is that, in addition to the gas exhibit at the Centennial, a display of coal should be made in the form of a coal palace, inside of which can be shown the improved machinery used in mining.

The body of Mrs. Joseph Grusenmeyer, aged 70, was found in the middle of the Wabash River, at Logansport, by a gang of railroad men. All that can be learned regarding the manner of her death is that she was drowned, but whether caused by an accident or foul play, or with suicidal intent, has not been decided by the physicians. There are rumors of foul play, but this theory is not upheld by the condition of the body, which shows no bruises. The physicians say death was caused by drowning, and that there are no evidences of violence. They incline to believe that it is a case of suicide. She was the widow of Joseph Grusenmeyer, a prominent citizen, who died some six months since and left considerable property for his heirs to fight over. There is a bitter contest in the courts over the will disposing of the property, and it is thought worry over this trouble had something to do with the death of Mrs. Grusenmeyer.

Dr. Trowbridge, aged 91, of Asherville, Clay County, is perhaps the oldest practicing physician in Indiana. He looks to be but 65 and is hale and active.

Willard Simmons of Peoria, Howard County, has been bound over for murderous assault on the affidavit of George A. Miller, who claimed that Simmons rushed at him with an ax, sinking the blade into his shoulder. The trouble originated at Miller's wedding a short time ago.

At Evansville, in an opinion, Judge Foster of the Superior Court, gave an important decision. Laborers had sued the First-avenue Coal Company for wages amounting to over $2,000. The company agreed to accept a verdict against it for the amount, less $500 for powder, smithing, etc. The court gave judgment for the full amount, basing his decision on Section 2059 of the statutes, which provides that miners "shall be paid in full for work at least once a week, and all contracts to the contrary shall be void." This is the first miners' suit in the State under the mechanics' lien law, and if Judge Foster's decision stands it will affect every operator and miner in the State, as all are forced to purchase powder of the company.

It would be difficult to overestimate the sensation which has been caused in England by the publication of the substance of the telegrams and documents which have come into the possession of the authorities of the South African republic. The weight of evidence which they furnish against persons to whom they were addressed and by whom they were signed, of being engaged in a conspiracy to overthrow the Transvaal, is admitted to be crushing. generally condemns them. But strenuous efforts are being made to prevent a sweeping condemnation of the authorities of Cape Colony and of the British Chartered South Africa Company, other than individuals whose names are included in the documentary evidence.

The London Times in an editorial on the subject says: "It is impossible to ignore the gravity of the conclusion to which the published telegrams point. They establish beyond the possibility of a doubt that Hon. Cecil Rhodes, the then premier of Cape Colony; Mr. Alfred Beit, a director in the British South Africa Company, and Mr. Rutherford Harris, secretary of the British South Africa Company, were privy to the movement against Johannesburg, and that the leaders of the movement counted upon their help and countenance to insure its success.

"These telegrams must be taken to prove that Mr. Rhodes approved the revolution which was desired in Johannesburg, but nothing in the correspondence goes to show that the actual crossing of the frontier by Dr. Jameson, under the circumstances under which it eventually occurred, was known to Mr. Rhodes or carried out with his approval. A Pretoria dispatch gives the substance of an interview with President Kruger, in which he said that he had scratched the death sentence at once, to show that after the law had been vindicated there was no vindictive personal feeling on the part of himself or the Government. It is rumored also that President Kruger has received a personal cable dispatch from President Cleveland in reference to John Hays Hamilton.

The Mississippi Democratic convention indorsed free silver and Cleveland.

The Georgia Republican convention selected three McKinley delegates. The fourth is understood to favor Reed. They are not instructed. Sound money was indorsed.

The Michigan Democratic convention indorsed Cleveland and sound money. The free silver men made a brave fight and were defeated by a small majority. Resolutions were adopted denouncing the A. P. A.

The Tennessee Prohibition convention defeated a resolution to indorse the free coinage of silver. The platform declares against the liquor power, for national prohibition organizations, for woman suffrage, more money for schools, a graduated income tax, local option for cities, and a State constitutional convention.

SHARPSHOOTERS AT ST. LOUIS.

National Tourney in June Equipped with a Fine Programme.

Arrangements have been made for the grand national sharpshooters' tournament to be held in St. Louis on June 13, 14 and 15. It will be held under the auspices of the Central Association at their park at Bobringville. The program is a long and interesting one. The shoot will be open to all comers. Every shooter that competes will be obliged to purchase a festival ticket, which will cost him $1, and will be good for entrance during the tournament. The principal target will be the Point and King. The prize medal for the target is worth $100. Fifty prizes in money ranging from $25 to $1 will be added. The prizes attaching to the other targets are all valuable, and will bring out some of the best shots in the country. Sportsmen say the tournament will have a very large attendance.

SENATE AND HOUSE.

WORK OF OUR NATIONAL LAWMAKERS.

A Week's Proceedings in the Halls of Congress—Important Measures Discussed and Acted Upon—An Impartial Resume of the Business.

The National Solons.

The Senate gave Friday to the sundry civil appropriation bill without completing it. Mr. Sherman sought to take up the bill proposing a repeal of the law giving a rebate on the tax on alcohol used in the arts, but the measure went over. A proposal by Mr. Bacon (Dem.) of Georgia giving the Cotton States Exposition Company $13,000 balance of the former appropriation unexpended was adopted. The bill then went over. The joint resolution giving to Senators Mantle of Montana and Clark of Wyoming the salary from March 4, 1894, instead of from the date of election, was adopted. The House decided to proceed with the Pickler pension bill and the whole day was consumed in the discussion of that measure. The House non-concurred in the Senate amendments to the Indian bill and agreed to a conference. The evening session was devoted to private pension bills.

In the Senate Saturday the sundry civil appropriation bill was completed and passed during the day. As it passed the House it carried about $30,000,000; as reported to the Senate it reached $35,000,000, and with amendments added the total was raised to $37,000,000. Most of the time in the House was occupied with the general pension bill. The debate was generally formal in character. At half-past 2 o'clock, without concluding debate on the bill, the House entered upon the special order—the delivery of eulogies on the late Representative William H. Crane of Texas. Then the House, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, adjourned until 8 o'clock.

The debate on the adoption of a rule brought in by the Rules Committee in the House Monday for a vote on the Pickler general pension bill was rather sensational, though nothing was accomplished. The minority report on the Pacific Railroad bill was submitted to the House by Representative Hubbard of Missouri. It deals exhaustively with the financial conditions of the companies concerned in the proposed funding plan. It argues that the majority bill should not be adopted. The Senate did nothing of importance.

The Senate was plunged into an exciting financial debate Tuesday, after several weeks of serene and formal procedure on appropriation bills. The naval appropriation bill was under consideration, and the item of four battle ships, to cost an aggregate of $15,000,000, served as a text for a speech by Mr. Gorman pointing out that the revenues of the Government are less than the receipts. Mr. Gorman's statements brought on an animated controversy, in which Mr. Sherman, Mr. Hale and Mr. Chandler joined issues with the Maryland Senator as to the responsibility for the failure of tariff legislation in the present Congress. The House passed the Pickler general pension bill by a vote of 187 to 54. The section to which the bulk of the opposition was directed provides that persons otherwise entitled to pensions shall not be disqualified on account of prior service in the Confederate army, provided they joined the Union forces ninety days before Lee's surrender.

Both House and Senate spent Wednesday in debate of various measures. Absolutely nothing of importance was done.

The general debate on the bankruptcy bill was continued and concluded in the House Thursday. Mr. Bailey of Texas gave notice that he would offer as a substitute his voluntary bankruptcy bill. The Senate spent another day on the naval appropriation bill without completing it. Mr. Gorman further opposed the item of four battle ships and expressed the opinion that the appropriations already made would consume the balance in the treasury. A determination of the number of battle ships has not yet been reached. Mr. Chandler has proposed substituting thirty large and fast torpedo gunboats for two of the battle ships. The bill was passed increasing the pension of Brigadier General William Gross of the volunteer forces to $75 per month.

CHAPTER XIII.

On receipt of a telegram, Mrs. Meason, despite the very delicate state of her health, started at once for Spain, and one day arrived, quite unexpectedly, at the Castle when the duke and duchess were to dinner.

At the sight of her grandmother Constance was quite overcome. She cried bitterly, and passionately kissed the old lady's face and hands, greatly to the annoyance of the duke.

"My dear Constance," said Mrs. Meason, "how pale you look! Why has the sun of Spain brought no roses to your cheeks?"

"Your grandchild, madam, infinitely prefers the fogs of England," said the duke, grimly.

"Well, is it not natural? It is her home; she is an English woman." The duke shrugged his shoulders.

It was a great consolation to Constance to have her grandmother with her, and during the days which followed the old lady's arrival she seemed more contented than she had been since her marriage. The duke soon noticed this, and did not seem well pleased. He was of that morbidly jealous disposition which grudges enjoyment even while not coveting it.

Besides all this, the duke had an irritating conviction that when the two women were alone they were always extolling the virtues of the young officer who had died. The duke's displeasure at all this was very soon made manifest. One day Mrs. Meason informed Constance of that fact that she was about to return home. Constance was amazed.

"Return home, grandma?" she said. "Why should you do that? Surely my home is your home."

"You are right, my child—it should be so; but your husband does not wish it." Constance started angrily.

"My husband!" she said, "the duke, has he dared to send you away?"

"Hush, my child; remember that he is your husband."

"Do not ask me to visit you again, Constance," she said, in leaving. "Your husband has said things to me which will prevent my ever again living beneath his roof."

Burning with indignation, Constance went instantly in search of her husband. She found him in his library.

"I wish to speak to you," she said, quickly.

"Let your communication be brief, for I am busy," he said. "What is it?"

"My communication is of as much importance as your business to-day," she replied, haughtily. "You have insulted my grandmother. I wish to know the reason."

"I have insulted her, you say? Pray, who is your informant?"

"My grandmother is my informant. Is it your wish, monsieur, to exile me from the one person in the world who cares for me?"

"By this you mean your grandmother, I presume? Well, if she cares for you she has had a most peculiar way of showing it—that is all!"

"What do you mean?" asked Constance quickly.

The duke shrugged his shoulders.

"If I explain," he said, "pray bear in mind that I was not the first to broach the subject. While in this house Mrs. Meason took upon herself the task of questioning my conduct toward my wife. Now, I dislike unpleasant scenes. I therefore intimated to Mrs. Meason that as the Duchess d'Azzeglio occupies too exalted a position to be permitted to present the world with food for scandal by dying of a broken heart away from her husband's roof, I must request her not to commence in my house the process which she had found so efficacious in the house of your father. When I first wooed you," continued he, "I knew I had the good wishes of your guardian. I thought at the time that she was influenced by some friendly feeling toward me; yet I discovered afterward that her sole object was to marry her grandchild in order that, as the Duchess d'Azzeglio, she might pass by with pride the man whom, above all others, Mrs. Meason disliked. Well, her ruse has not succeeded; the man is dead—and so far as Mrs. Meason is concerned, your marriage has accomplished nothing."

He paused, but Constance said nothing. A vague feeling of dread was upon her; for something in her husband's tone rather than in his words struck terror to her heart.

"If your grandmother had been more open with me at first, instead of allowing me to discover all her secrets for myself, it might have been better for me; it certainly would have been better for her," continued the duke. "After I had offered to marry you she determined at all hazards to break off your engagement to your cousin. Now, as Mrs. Meason is a lady who generally accomplishes what she has set herself to do, she succeeded in accomplishing this—by a falsehood!"

"A falsehood?"

"Precisely. The reason she gave you for breaking off your engagement was the death of your mother under the persecution of Captain Howarth's family—and particularly of his father—is it not so?"

"Yes," murmured Constance; "I could not marry him; my mother's spirit stood between us."

"My dear Constance, allow me to inform you that the little story which separated you from your lover was a fabrication; it was an outrage, as I took care to discover. The Earl of Harrington—Captain Howarth's father—was the very soul of honor; but he had one great fault—he disliked Mrs. Meason. They quarreled, and no one was to blame but—the lady. Her tyranny finally separated husband and wife, and hastened the death of the latter."

"Do you mean to say," said Constance, hoarsely, "that this which you have told me is true; that the whole story of my poor mother's sorrow was a fabrication?"

"Not at all; the story of the poor lady's sorrowful death was true—it was altered in the telling, that was all. The blame of the whole thing was, for your benefit, laid at the door of the Harrington family; whereas the sole cause of it was Mrs. Meason herself; and your mother was a gentle, loving girl, and was received by your father's family with open arms. All would have gone well but for Mrs. Meason, who a few weeks after the marriage entered the house of the young married couple and put an end to anything like peace. She had always been an ambitious woman, and she looked forward to the marriage of her daughter as a means of gaining for herself an entrance into society. When she was forbidden to enter her daughter's house her plans were shattered, and she resolved to have revenge. When Captain Howarth wooed you, her time came; 'I will break his heart,' she said; 'I will avenge myself on the father by means of the son.' To accomplish this it was necessary to invent a falsehood; she invented that falsehood, and her plan succeeded. Your engagement to your cousin was broken, and you were married to me."

Again he paused, but this time Constance said nothing. She staggered from the library to her own room. Once there, in a wild fit of despairing pain, she fell upon her knees, calling upon the name of the man whom she had loved so ardently, but who, alas! was dead.

Her first coherent thought was, how she could best get to her grandmother and demand from her the truth or falsehood of the terrible story she had heard.

She made her arrangements quickly and in a manner to excite no suspicion. First of all she sat down to write to the duke.

"I am going to London," she wrote. "Until I have seen my grandmother and heard her version of this story, I cannot rest. CONSTANCE."

She placed this letter on her dressing table in a position where it would be easily found by her husband, then she ordered her carriage.

Weary with long travel, heart-sick with over-much grief, she stood in the drawing room at Portland place, gazing upon her grandmother with large, wistful eyes, two days later.

"Grandma," spoke the girl, with strange earnestness, "the duke has told me a terrible story, and I have come to ask you if it is true. I could not rest until I had seen you. He says you have been cruel to me; that by means of a falsehood you separated me from Frank; but I do not believe it; it is he who has been deceiving me. You would not do so, you love me too well."

The old lady did not speak. Her face was agonized. There was no need for words; Constance looked into her eyes and read the truth.

"Don't touch me!" she cried; "don't come near me; I cannot bear it! Oh, may heaven forgive you!"

"Oh, my child, I have wronged you bitterly; I see it now, but it is too late," cried the old lady. "Years ago Frank Howarth's father wounded me deeply, and I swore that his son and one of my blood should never come together, and I kept my word. I married you to the duke, believing that, once a wife, your childish passion for your cousin would soon fade away, but I was wrong. When I met you in Spain and looked in your eyes I knew that I had ruined your life, and I repented when it was too late."

"Yes," said the girl, "too late. My love is dead! He does not know what I have done; he will never know, and I can love him and mourn for him all my life. Oh, Frank, my darling, sleep peacefully; henceforth I will be true to you, and some day perhaps we may meet again."

"Constance, my child, remember you are a wife!"

"A wife! I am no wife, for I do not love my husband. At your intercession I married the duke; I stood before the altar with him like one in a dream—a terrible dream. I realize it now; I have awakened to misery and death."

CHAPTER XIV.

A week after the day when Constance, standing before her grandmother, heard the story of the cruel wrong which had been done her, and in her heart thanked heaven that her lover was dead, a troopship from the seat of war was entering Portsmouth harbor, bearing the disabled soldiers home.

From the earliest hours of dawn the streets had been gayly decorated with flags, and crowds had begun to gather. When the great ship approached a cheer went up from every throat, and many eyes grew dim. On the deck the soldiers gathered, straining their eyes shoreward, their pale faces brightened with the glow of expectation. For all knew that amidst that dense crowd stood a wife, a mother, or a sister, waiting to receive them with open arms. All? No; there was one man standing apart from the rest who regarded the crowd with a look of blank misery. He wore his left arm in a sling, and listened to the joyful shouts like one in a dream. It was Frank Howarth.

He went to his cabin, for somehow he shrunk from watching the greeting between the soldiers and their friends; so he sat there and thought bitterly of the past; recalled the day when he had asked Constance to become his wife, and she had consented. Yet, she had loved him then, he felt sure of it; but how soon her love had changed.

"She was false as perdition!" he cried, "and yet I go to London because I wish to breathe the same air with her, to be near her, although the very thought of it almost drives me mad."

He waited till most of his comrades had gone ashore, then he too landed, drove to the station, and was just in time to catch the train to London.

Arriving, Frank called a hansom, and giving his servant the name of the hotel at which he meant to stop, ordered him to follow with the baggage.

He dined, then he strolled out into the streets. How desolate everything seemed; and yet things were going on much in the same old way. The Strand was thronged, and people hurried along, hardly giving a glance at the pale young fellow carrying his arm in a sling. He walked on, strolling up Regent street. Suddenly he heard a voice calling his name; he stopped, looked around and beheld a face he knew.

A neat little brougham, drawn by a handsome pair of bays, had stopped near the curbstone, and from it protruded the head of Lady Seafield.

"Good heavens, Captain Howarth," exclaimed the little lady as Frank went up to her; "then it is really you. When I first saw you I thought it was your ghost! A ghost."

"Why should you think it was my ghost, Lady Seafield?"

"Why? My dear sir, everybody believes you to be dead. It was reported that you were killed in action, and the report was never contradicted."

"I have been wounded," said Frank, glancing at his injured arm.

"Ah! poor fellow!" exclaimed the countess, sympathetically, "and now you have come home to be petted and made much of. Well, the Earl of Harrington will find his friends melting to give him a glorious welcome. Have you seen Constance?"

Frank started, bit his lip and was amazed to feel that his face was flushing painfully.

"I have seen no one," he said.

"Ah! the poor child will go crazy when she hears you are alive. Ever since that report came she has been in terrible grief, wore the deepest mourning and positively refused to go anywhere; but of course that will be all changed now. Every one expects her to be the sensation of the season, and I have no doubt she will be; she is more beautiful than ever she was in her life."

Frank said nothing, but as he listened a cold sneer curled his lip. The countess saw and fancied she had told enough.

"Well, au revoir," she said, "now that you are here and not dead, I hope you will come and see us."

Mechanically Frank raised his hat, and the brougham moved away. When it had gone a few yards the countess gave the order:

"Go to No. 104 Park lane."

It was the temporary residence of the d'Azzeglio; for the duke had speedily followed Constance to London.

At 4 o'clock in the afternoon it was Constance's custom to take tea in her boudoir. In the ordinary course of things it would have been her hour for receiving her friends, but Constance, being in the deepest mourning, would go nowhere and receive no one.

That afternoon the door of her boudoir opened, and to her amazement the duke came in.

"Constance," he said coldly, "to-morrow night I attend a state concert; I wish you to accompany me."

"I cannot go," she said; "it is impossible," and pointed to her black dress.

"Pardon me," said the duke gravely; "it matters very much to me. It is now some time since you became my wife; when you accepted that honor I flattered myself that you would appreciate it at its worth. I have been disappointed; your mourning looks distress me, and make me think you are not happy."

"What do you wish me to do?"

"Smile, laugh, be cheerful, look your best. It is not much I ask. When one possesses a diamond and sets it as a jewel on his heart its business is to shine. My diamond is my duchess. Do you understand?"

Constance was about to reply when the door of her boudoir was opened again, and the servant quietly announced the Countess of Seafield, who chatted on until the duke, weary with waiting for her departure, took his leave.

The moment he was gone the countess rushed at Constance, and, with many kisses and tears, told her of the miraculous resurrection of her cousin.

That same night the duke received a message from his wife. It was to the effect that she was ready to accompany him on the following evening to the concert. (To be continued.)

WHERE THE ARK LANDED.

Tourists Climb to the Summit of Mount Ararat, Where the Ark Rested.

Although the summit of Great Ararat, which has an elevation of 17,916 feet, yields in height to the peaks of the Caucasus in the north and to Demavend (19,400 feet) in the east, nearly 500 miles away, yet, as Brice in his admirable book has observed, there can be but few other places in the world where a mountain so lofty rises from a plain so low. The summit of Great Ararat has the form of a dome and is covered with perpetual snow; this dome crowns an oval figure, the length of which is from northwest to southeast, and it is therefore the long side of this dome which you see from the valley of the Araxes. On the southeast, as you follow the outline farther, the slope falls at a more rapid gradient of from 30 to 35 degrees and ends in the saddle between the two mountains at a height of nearly 9,000 feet. From that point it is in the shape the Little Ararat, which continues the outline toward the east; it rises in the shape of a graceful pyramid to the height of 12,840 feet, and its summit is distant from that of Great Ararat a space of nearly seven miles. The southeastern slope of the lesser Ararat corresponds to the northwestern slope of the greater mountain and descends to the floor of the river valley in a long and regular train. The u y of the whole fabric, the intimate correspondence of the parts between themselves—in a word, the architectural qualities of this natural work at once impress the eye and continue to provide an inexhaustible fund of study, however long may be the period of your stay.

At last we stood upon the summit of Ararat—but the sun no longer pierced the white vapor; a fierce gale drove across the forbidden region and whipped the eye, straining to distinguish the limits of snow and cloud. Vague forms hurried past on the wings of the whirlwind; in place of the landscape of the land of promise we searched dense banks of fog. We were standing on the spot where the ark of Gopher rested, where first the patriarch alighted on the face of an earth renewed. Before him lay the valleys of 600 years of sorrow; the airiest pinnacle supported him, a boundless hope filled his eyes. The pulse of life beat strong and fresh around him; the busy swarms thrilled with sweet freedom, elect of living things. In the settling exhalations stood the bow of many colors, eternal token of God's covenant with man.

The peaks which rose on the distant borderland where silence had first faltered into speech were wrapped about with the wreaths of fancy, a palpable world of cloud. Did we fix our foot upon these solid landmarks to wish the vague away, to see the hard summits stark and naked and all the floating realm of mystery flown? The truth is firm and it is well to touch and feel it and know where the legend begins; but the legend itself is truth transfigured as the snow distils into cloud. The reality of life speaks in every syllable of that solemn, stately tale; divine hope bursting the bounds of matter to compromise with despair. And the ancient mountain summons the spirits about him and veils a futile frown as the rising sun illumines the valleys of Asia and the life of man lies bare.—Scribner's.

BEAUTIFUL SPRING.

A SEASON FULL OF POETRY TO ALL BUT THE FARMER.

There Is No Romance in Grubbing, Brush Burning, Plowing or Cleaning Fence Corners—A Dreary Round of Often Ill-Requited Toil.

Work, Not Sentiment.

Youth of the year! Celestial spring!
Again descend thy silent showers;
New loves, new pleasures, thou dost bring,
And earth again looks gay with flowers.
—Peacock.

It is altogether probable that hundreds of poems have been written on the beauties of spring, and barrels of ink and reams of paper have been shed and wasted in the effort to show forth the glories of the season when all nature wakes to new life and vigor, but of all the poets who have celebrated the season of the opening leaves and budding flowers, it is likely that not more than 1 per cent. lived in the country or had to take any active part in the rural duties inseparable from the youth of the year.

The city resident may poetize and moralize over the coming of the beautiful spring, but the man who makes his living in the country has no time for either poetry or philosophy, for to him the advent of spring means nothing but a great deal of hard work. No matter how florid the poets may become about the new birth of the flowers and trees, to the farmer this event is of significance merely as indicating that the plowing and sowing must begin. He has no time for sentiment, for the spring is altogether too short for the amount of work he is obliged to squeeze into it, and summer treads so closely on its heels that before he is ready the heated term begins. It is not likely that more than once in ten years the farmer sees summer come on when he is fully prepared for it. Not that he is dilatory, or that the season is short, but that there is so much to be done. Someone defines a farmer as "a man who works as hard as he can all the year round for his board and clothes, and not very good board nor very fine clothes." The definition seems extravagant, but that fact is due to the circumstance that it is full of truth, for the farmer's work, like woman's, is never done, as by the time it reaches a certain stage, it begins again and goes the same dreary round.

The farmer regards springtime therefore, not from a poetical, but from a purely practical, point of view, for it is the season when he begins all over again. It is a common saying that you never know how much you have until you begin to move, and in the same sense the farmer never realizes how much trash can accumulate about a place until he starts to clean up in the spring. Then dead weeds and brush and branches and all the odds and ends of plant life seem to breed before his eyes, and the places which during the previous summer and autumn appeared reasonably free from nature's debris seem to have served as trash factories during the winter. The corners of the old style stake and rider fences are the worst. There is a superstition that this particular brand of fence was invented by the enemy of all mankind, who, finding thorns and thistles and other weeds did not grow with sufficient luxuriance in the open field to suit his diabolical purpose, went to work and persuaded men to build worm fences, whose triangular corners, which could not be cultivated at all, and were with difficulty reached by the hoe, afforded harboring places where all sorts of weeds could spread themselves like a green bay tree and flourish to their hearts' content. The superstition may have as little foundation as superstitions generally have, but considering the facilities afforded by the rail fence for weed growing, it is not remarkable that some such idea should have come into being, for of all the jobs that the farmer and the farmer's wife and the hired man do not enjoy doing, cleaning the fence corners is the least highly appreciated. It is, so to speak, purely a labor of love, or, rather, of cleanliness, and for the looks of the farm, for nothing can be planted in a fence corner, no matter how clean it is kept, and if it could, nothing will grow there but weeds. As Mark Twain said about screening tailings at an ore mill, it is a constant job always waiting to be done, and when a farmer has nothing else on hand he can go and weed the fence corners.

There is another odd job that is reasonably certain to turn up sometime in the course of every spring, and that is brush burning. Only the hottest days of spring or early summer will do for brush burning, for if it were done on the cool days those engaged at it would not sweat enough, and so could not persuade themselves that they were really working. But when the thermometer gets up toward 90 in the shade and everybody still has his winter clothes on so that he feels three times as hot as he ought to feel, the farmer announces that a piece of land must be cleared, and everybody falls to with all his might. The trees are cut down, the trunks and larger limbs rolled to one side and the undergrowth and smaller branches piled into heaps for burning. A brush fire enjoys the reputation, deserved or not, of being the hottest fire this side of that other fire, which, according to the statement of Holy Writ, is not quenched, and anybody who has burned brush under a blazing sun in May, with the thermometer 114 degrees Fahrenheit in the open field, will readily believe that at a pitchfork's length from the flames the heat will attain 1014 and not exert itself in the least.

Tree-falling and brush-burning are the preliminaries to the more serious operation of grubbing. In point of general unpleasantness grubbing ranks about midway between cleaning the fence corners and brush burning, being a little more troublesome than the former and not quite so hot as the latter. It is, however, troublesome enough to meet all ordinary demands on the patience of a Job, and hot enough to create a lively impression that the back has been exposed to a specially heated draught from a blast furnace. It is a labor full of disappointments. After toilsomely working your way through a wilderness of hazel brush stumps you insert your grubbing hoe into a patch of sod in the confident expectation that for a few yards at least your burden will be light. At the first stroke, however, you hit a root, and in the conviction that it ought to be short, you take hold and begin to pull, when, to your amazement, the root keeps coming until you have dragged six or eight feet of it up through the sod, then it breaks, and you wonder whether anybody ever did get to the end of a hazel root. It is a singular fact about a patch of ground that needs grubbing that it always has more roots in it than any other patch of ground you ever saw. Why this should be so is a mystery, but then, farming is full of mysteries, and this is perhaps no greater than a hundred others, it being more observable because more troublesome than some of the others.

The mention of mysteries invites attention to the fact that by some curious freak of nature the spring time is the most favorable season for all sorts, kinds and conditions of breakages in farm implements, harness and appliances generally. Philosophical persons, who are always prying into the reasons of things and finding explanations that no one else can discover, pretend to say that the spring epidemic of breakage in harness, wagons, plows, hoes and other tools is due to the fact that these articles are not properly cared for in the winter; that, if after using them in the autumn they had been oiled and put away in a dry house during the cold season, then oiled and cleaned in the spring before using them, most of the breakage could be avoided. But this view of the case, which, to the philosopher, seems so plausible, is regarded by the farmer with distrust, not to say with incredulity. The friskiness of the mules when first led forth from the stable and placed in front of a plow which they are expected to persuade through more or less rooty and cloddy earth for the next sixty days is not difficult to explain. They have been doing nothing but eat their heads off during the winter, and have, therefore, acquired an amount of adipose tissue quite unbecoming to the degenerate sons of an ignoble sire. Were this the sum total of their offending, no harm would be done, for too much fat on a mule is an infirmity easily overcome by a judicious system of heavy loads, a long thrash pole and much profanity. But a mule, when he gets fat, is sure, in rural parlance, also to become "ambitious," and injudicious ambition is as bad for a mule as for the hereditary ruler of a warlike people. Properly directed, the ambition of the mule, like that of the king, can be worked off in peaceful channels, but sometimes the mule, like the monarch, has not quite sense enough to perceive that the ways of peace are preferable to the paths of war, and so manifests his ambition by kicking the harness to pieces. Of course, this reprehensible act meets with prompt retribution at the hands of the enraged granger, and a conflict ensues, generally ending to the disadvantage of the mule.

But grubbing and cleaning and brush burning and plowing are, after all, the introduction to the planting with which the labors of spring may be said to close. There is no more romance about planting than about any other part of the farmer's spring toil, for nothing is more fatiguing than to walk all day over newly plowed ground, sinking to the ankles at every step, dropping exactly the same number of grains in every hill to the subsequently covered by a dexterous stroke of the hoe. It is hard work, and the only representatives of animate nature that really enjoy seeing anybody do it are the crows. To them it is a joy, if not forever, at least during the spring season, nor are they deterred from it in any wise by the erection of scarecrows, for crows have a world of sense for crows, and can tell the difference between a scarecrow and a man as far as they can see. The farmer may erect his worst suit into manly guise, and do his planting in the belief that the crows are deceived, but the sly rogues know better, laugh his scarecrow to scorn and follow along in his tracks and pick up his corn as he drops it, without, by so much as a single croak, giving an indication or hint of their nefarious presence. They know he has no gun; they also know that he cannot throw a clod as straight as his youngest boy, so they hop along from hill to hill, as though measuring the distance to ascertain where they will have to dig for what is left after he has covered it up. The farmers' seed-time is the crows' harvest, and keenly do the latter enjoy it. Thus it is that the farmer sees no romance in the beautiful spring. For him the words mean, not the waking of natural world to fresh life, but a renewal of coarse and often ill-requited toil. No mistress is so caprious as Dame Nature. Sometimes she opens her hands and pours out her blessings until the barns burst and the granaries cannot contain, but at others she fails to send the rains and the dews and the genial heat at the times when most demanded by the exigencies of plant life, and then the labor of the farmer is all in vain. Dependent as he is on the vicissitudes of the season, no wonder he sometimes becomes a fatalist and finds signs and wonders where others see natural phenomena easily susceptible of explanation.

DYNAMITE AIR-SHIP.

Novel Flying Machine Is Being Constructed in Washington.

In a busy workshop of a Washington suburb a novel flying machine is in course of construction. The greatest secrecy prevails among the workmen, and the professor who is the brains of the concern is a sphinx. It has been learned, however, that the invention consists of two immense bobbin-shaped receptacles made of thin sheet aluminum, to contain hydrogen gas.

A car or cabin of the same metal is to be attached to the receptacles, and will be of sufficient size to accommodate a crew of five or six. An electric motor will operate the wings and steering mechanism. The car will be the shape of a ship's hull, and, in case of the aerial contrivance collapsing, the inventor claims the crew can drop to the surface of the sea and become navigators of the water instead of the air. Tightly closed trapdoors, which, when securely fastened, will not admit water, are to be opened when at the desired height for the purpose of releasing torpedoes, to be lowered by a cable reeled from a windlass in the car. The torpedoes, according to the inventor's plan, are to be lowered to the deck of an enemy's ship or swung against the side of her hull, when a current of electricity is to be sent through the cable to explode the cartridge.

The airship is designed particularly for night service, and to that end a powerful electric light is to be provided in the form of a large globe suspended from a reel of wire passed through the floor of the car.

Romance of the Telegraph.

A great deal of romance hovers round the means by which the world's news is gathered. The speed and accuracy with which messages are transmitted between the uttermost parts of the earth is marvelous when the conditions under which they are sometimes transmitted are considered. The Indo-European line offers a good illustration. It runs from London to Lowestoft on the east coast of England. It then dips under the sea to Emden, on the German coast, where it passes right through Germany to the Russian frontier. From this point the wire passes by way of Warsaw, Rowno, Odesse, the Caucasus and Tiflis, to Persia, and by Tauris to Teheran, the capital of the shah's dominions. There it joins the Indian government line, which runs from the Persian capital to Bushire on the Persian gulf. Thence the wires run through Beloochistan, and complete the route by connecting Kurrachee, north India. The operation of this immense stretch of line, passing through countries of such varying climates and characteristics, is one of much difficulty.

On the snow-swept steppes of Russia the wires are often snapped like thread by the rapid flight of flocks of wild geese. The poles are cut down and made into firewood by the nomad tribes of the Caucasian districts, and the cunning innkeepers of Georgia seek to boom their post-horse trade by deliberately creating faults in the wires. In the mountainous regions of Asia the maintenance of the solitary line involves much personal risk and hardship to the staff hands. Communication is often cut off by a snowfall of five or six feet in a night. These mountain stations are provisioned with several months' supplies before the winter sets in, as the staff will be in touch with the rest of the world by the wire only until the spring weather opens out the passes. In these supplies is always included a liberal allowance of books and games wherewith to relieve the monotony of the tedious winter exile.

Elections.

Auburn Gives a Democratic Majority on Everything but Marshal.

The election yesterday in Auburn was hotly contested and resulted in an almost complete landslide in favor of the democrats, if we compare it with the result one year ago, and two years ago, at which elections, the greater part of the successful candidates were republicans, getting majorities of from 8 to 93. This year the popular tide has turned and turned heavily to the democratic side. The following shows the vote:

At Albion, Noble county, the democrats get the marshal and clerk, while the republicans get the rest. Democrats over the state have gained a good deal.

Garrett city election solidly democratic electing Co. Chairman Frederick as alderman by about 80, a democratic gain of 150 since last election.

Ft. Wayne went democratic 1,400 majority Tuesday, only one republican councilman getting through. The present republican mayor, was defeated with the rest.

Elections all over the state in the various towns show great democratic gains. All we need is to stop quarreling over such unimportant things as "silver," and unite against the common enemy, the republican party, that for thirty years has been following a course that has finally dragged us down to hard times.

Building Crumbling.

WATERLOO, IND., May 5, 1896:—(Special.)—A large business building at Waterloo owned by Wm. H Leas and occupied by the large grocery stock of Ex-Sheriff Plum, suddenly gave way this forenoon creating considerable excitment. The building is old, is constructed of a kind of soft pressed brick and the heavy rains latly beating in between the walls of this building and an adjoining one, caused the brick to crumble and suddenly give way. The building gave ssfficiently to crack the windows and plastering and had it not been for the support it received from the adjoining building it would most likely have collapsed with a crash. Assistance at once came to Mr. Plum's relief and his stock of goods was all removed. The upper rooms were occupied by a photograph gallery which also vacated on very short notice. Workmen were at once put upon the building to tear it down and thus save futher danger.

Live at Formosa and You Wont Have Catarrh.

Among the few spots on the surface of the earth where catarrh is not, is the Island of Formosa. Here grow the camphor trees from which is obtained the camphor of commerce. The pungent odor which is exhaled from the leaves of these trees so impregnates the atmosphere that catarrh is unknown. The wonderful healing properties of camphor have been the cause of the great success of Pretzinger's Catarrh Balm, which carries in the form of salve, large quantities of not only the camphor that comes from the island of Formosa but also the more rare and delicate camphors, among which is that obtained from the Australian Blue Gum Tree, and the Japanese Camphor known as Menthol. When this salve is applied to the inflamed and diseased membrane decay is arrested at once and healing commences. There is no case of catarrh or catarrhal deafness that Pretzinger's Catarrh Balm will not heal. A small sample may be obtained by sending a two-cent stamp to Pretzinger Bros., Chemists, Dayton, Ohio. Austin Gebhart, Whitfield, Ohio, says—"It gives me great pleasure to inform you that your Catarrh Balm has cured my catarrh and deafness."

BUTLER.

The corporative election is now in progress (May 4) and a large interest is being wakened. The outcome is in doubt, but as both parties have an excellent ticket the difference is not seriously felt.

There'll be Merry Doings

Among the CARPETS and DRAPERIES during the next few days. It's housecleaning time now and your mind is on these matters. There are styles and values here that will make "County talk" when the news get out. We make a strong bid for your business in these important items, and are prepared to serve you. with the largest stock ever shown in DeKalb county.

The New Carpets.

Dray loads of worthy weaves have been received during the past few weeks. We've laid our lines to do the Carpet business of the county, and with the equipment we've got we ought to do it.

INGRAIN CARPETS

All wool and a yard wide. The best extra supers—not an old, or side tracked pattern among them. All clean, quiet, neutral tints that won't show dust—and they turn well.

Your pick from 40 to 60 cents the yard.

NEW BRUSSELS

The best kind, of course. No better medium priced Carpets made. Got lots of handsome patterns. They've got the looks and wear in them. Come and get the prices.

MOQUETTE CARPETS

Always beautiful—more so this season than ever before; soft as a mossy bank, bright as a meadow in June. Pay you to give them careful inspection.

THE NEW MATTINGS

Some jointless, some cord-warp, some plain, some fancy, and all good. They're made of good live straws; they're flexible and don't scuff out out like the poorer, dried-out sorts. What a cool, cleanly, comfortable floor covering they make, to be sure—and so cheap, too, as we sell them.

A Lace Curtain Event.

That's what we name it—that's what it is. It's an event of money-saving importance to you. It's the one time in the round year when we put our Lace Curtain Stock on a very narrow margin of profit and give you a benefit. We don't make much money, but we sell more Curtains, and it's a good advertisement for the department. The choicest things will go first, of course—they always do in a sale of this kind.

The schemer approached a fellow passenger with a twenty dollar bill in his hand. The swindler wore glasses and appeared to be near-sighted. He asked the fellow to give him change for $10. The victim hurriedly gave him $10 in change and shoved the $20 in his pocket thinking he had beat the fellow out of $10. After the man with the glasses left the train the change-maker looked at the bill carefully and discovered it to be a counterfeit. As the victim thought he was getting the best of the swindler, he was advised to "keep still and take his medicine."

—Mayday, was celebrated here after a fashion, more especially by the little girls. After night fall last evening, many homes were secretly visited, and boquets of flowers tied to the door knob, or left on the porch. It is a very pretty custom, and a great improvement over the rackety doings of hallowe'en evenings. We wish our little folks would change over, and quit the hallowe'en business and take out their enjoyment in the Mayday fashion.

—For every quarter in a man's pocket there are a dozen uses; and to use each one in such a way as to derive the greatest benefit is a question every one must solve for himself. —Democratic papers that are abusing or sneering at, or belittling President Cleveland or Secretary Carlisle, or "gold bugs" and finding fault with the democratic administration may not mean to injure their party. But did they ever know a party to win, if it began and continued through the campaign, in this way? If the party is to win anything, anywhere this year, this will have to stop. The question is a simple one, namely, whether they prefer to go on in this unwise course and lose everything, or discontinue it and allow all breaches to heal and stop making more. By adopting the latter course, is the only hope the party can have of winning in either county, state or nation.

Early Crops.

Few people are aware of the wonderful growth made recently by the crops. The hot weather of April and the abundant showers have put things to growing as they were never known to grow before. Think of wheat headed out in April! L. Spitler is out in the country now and then, and his attention was attracted to the rapid growth the crops were making, April 28, he saw a field of wheat not far from Butler, and saw, what he felt certain, were signs of heads appearing in the wheat. An examination proved this to be the fact. Heads were actually appearing. Afterwards he procured a specimen of rye, taken from a field on the farm of John Hafley, in Springfield township in Allen county, and brought to this office. They lie before us while writ this. Seeing, is believing. Every stalk has a well developed head, almost as large as when the plant is mature. It is simply surprising. But anyone who doubts, should come to this office. These heads were in plain sight, April 28 also.

It is sold in 10c, 50c and $1:00 size at Robbins & McCord's. 22

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

THE BEST

is SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR—don't forget to take it. The Liver gets sluggish during the Winter, just like all nature, and the system becomes choked up by the accumulated waste, which brings on Malaria, Fever and Ague and Rheumatism. You want to wake up your Liver now, but be sure you take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR to do it. It also regulates the Liver—keeps it properly at work, when your system will be free from poison and the whole body invigorated.

You get THE BEST BLOOD when your system is in A1 condition, and that will only be when the Liver is kept active. Try a Liver Remedy once and note the difference. But take only SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR—it is SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR which makes the difference. Take it in powder or in liquid already prepared, or make a tea of the powder; but take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR. You'll find the RED Z on every package. Look for it.

How to Treat a Wife.
(From Pacific Health Journal.)

First, get a wife; second, be patient. You may have great trials and perplexities in your business, but do not therefore, carry to your home a cloudy or contracted brow. Your wife may have trials which, though of less magnitude, may be hard for her to bear. A kind word, a tender look, will do wonders in chasing from her brow all clouds of gloom.—To this we would add always keep a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy in the house. The imports of shoddy into the United States increased from 4,170,941 pounds in 1894 to 20,718,168 pounds in 1895. Just where this sham and often filthy stuff has gone is not disclosed, but the American people are using it in some shape, and paying for it a great deal more than it is worth.

The G. A. R. posts are giving their indorsement to the scheme of international arbitration. Such action on the part of men who have performed military service is significant, and will surely have a pronounced effect. They know what war means, and do not care to see any more of it, so long as it can be honorably avoided.

As soon as one arduous task is accomplished, we should begin another; as soon as one formidable obstacle is cleared away, we should attack the next; as soon as one knotty problem is solved, we should proceed to disentangle some other intricacy. In this way not only will all difficulties vanish one by one, but, what is of far more consequence, we shall become stronger and more courageous in the process.

To desire the approbation, good-will, and esteem of others is a natural and perfectly legitimate feeling, and one which largely conduces to the welfare and morality of every community. It is folly to try to banish it as a motive power, to depreciate it as being an unworthy source of action, to despise those who are influenced by it; all this is simply fighting against nature, and in every such battle defeat is certain. While men and women are woven together in the web of social relations, and dependent upon one another for their happiness, and even their very existence, so long will the desire of enjoying the esteem of one another continue to form a strong and a valuable influence in their lives.

The Chicago fire of 1871, whether considered with regard to the area of land covered, the number of lives lost, or the value of the property destroyed, ranks as the greatest of history. Over 18,000 buildings were destroyed, of which 2,400 were stores, shops or factories, and about 100,000 people were rendered homeless by the burning of their houses. The district over which the conflagration swept was three and three-fourths miles in length by more than a mile wide, covering the most densely peopled portion of the city. It is said that 250 lives were lost by accidents during the progress of the fire, and the total value of the property destroyed was estimated at $192,000,000, this estimate not including over $4,000,000 allowed for salvage on foundations and the like. Scores of fire insurance companies were forced to the wall by this terrible calamity, their losses being so great as to drive the companies into bankruptcy. The cash contributions for the benefit of the sufferers of the Chicago fire amounted, within a month after the disaster, to $4,200,000, and the contributions in the way of supplies, food, clothing and other necessaries to perhaps as much more.

The close of the oyster season makes pertinent the fact that it is believed in Maryland that it will be a partial failure. In Baltimore alone about 5,000,000 bushels of oysters pass through the hands of the dealers every year, but this season the total will fall to nearly 4,000,000 bushels. And what is still more alarming is the fact that there are evident signs of the failure of the supply in Chesapeake Bay, the greatest oyster resource in the country, if not in the world. Warnings have been given in past years that this would be the result unless there was a reform in the methods employed and greater care taken of the beds. Legislatures have been appealed to in this matter, and while some have responded others have been negligent. There ought to be no further delay unless the country is to be deprived of one of its most toothsome food supplies.

D. O. Mills, the millionaire, has given orders for the erection in New York of a ten-story hotel for men, to cost $700,000. Each one of its 1,500 rooms will be well lighted and ventilated, furnished with clean, comfortable beds and let at the low rate of 20 cents a day. There will be reading-rooms and lavatories on the first floor and a restaurant where frugal, well-cooked meals will be served for 5 and 10 cents. The hotel, its projector says, is not intended to make money. He expects it to be run rather at a loss than at a profit. This new departure of Mr. Mills is not charity. It is better. It gives the self-respecting poor man an opportunity to live in a great city amidst cleanly and cheerful surroundings, without exhausting all his scant earnings. To men who come to the city in search of employment and whose store of coin is small, it will offer an asylum while looking for work. Indiscriminate alms-giving is not charity. It is rather a lazy compromise with conscience. To prevent the poor and the struggling from reaching the condition of receiving alms is nobler, wiser, more humane than alms-giving. This will be one of the aims of Mr. Mills' new hotel. Those rich men who bestow their millions upon universities to perpetuate their names and feed their vanity could learn from Mr. Mills a lesson in practical philanthropy. Only those who have the means to purchase leisure have time for university training. To help young men and women willing to work to earn food, clothing and shelter and to put aside their little savings by the way is more humanizing, more Christ-like than the endowment of universities or the erection of libraries and art galleries. The need of the hour is more practical philanthropists like D. O. Mills.

Too Much Adulation.

The Italians are about to erect a monument to Donizetti, their famous composer who wrote sixty-five operas. The monument will be raised at Bergamo where he was born in 1797. Donizetti's life was an example of the evil effect of too much adulation.

He was so completely spoiled by praise that he could not endure anything that detracted from the full effect of his compositions, and his health was undermined and his life shortened by the nervous effect of paroxysms of rage at unsatisfactory performances of his work.

When Donizetti gave public performances or conducted productions of his works at some of the Italian cities, he was often met by processions of young girls scattering flowers in his path; and one admirer caused him to play the piano on certain occasions in a room completely carpeted with roses plucked from their stems.

It is no wonder that he grew to think that no one in the world was of so much consequence as he. Occasionally it was possible for the public to sympathize with his insistence on his rank as a master of his art.

He once gave a performance on the piano before the Czar. As he was playing, the Czar began to talk with one of the people who accompanied him. Thereupon Donizetti stopped playing abruptly and left the piano. Presently the Emperor approached him and said:

"Why did you cease playing?

"Because, sire," answered the Italian, "when the Czar speaks, all the rest of the world should be silent!"

There was nothing to be said in rejoinder to this Machiavellian response, and the Emperor had to accept his rebuke.

One Correct Answer.

An amusing little story was told a good many years ago in connection with Gov. Mattox, of Vermont. At one time he was chairman of the committee appointed to examine candidates for admission to the bar of Caledonia County.

He reported that one of the candidates was, in his opinion, unqualified, having answered correctly but one of the questions put to him.

"Only one? Well, what was that?" asked the presiding Judge.

"I asked him what a freehold estate is," replied Mattox.

"Important question," said the Judge. "And what was his reply?"

"He made it without the least hesitation," said the Chairman, with a twinkle in his eye. "Of course that fact is in his favor."

"Well, what did he say?" asked the Judge, with some impatience.

"He said," returned the Chairman, "that he didn't know."

Cure for Bee Stings.

It is well known that liquid ammonia relieves the effects of the stings of bees. A much more effectual antidote is the mixture known as ammoniated tincture of quinine. On several occasions, when stung by bees, it was found that the quinine mixture would give much quicker and greater relief than ammonia alone.

WHAT PROTECTION HAS DONE.

This country was settled by the tillers of the soil. It was the farmers who cleared away the forests, fought Indians and wild beasts, and in later years achieved the country's freedom from the tyranny of foreign rulers. It has been the farmers who have pushed the lines of civilization steadily Westward and have occupied the great prairies and fertile river valleys. It is the ever-increasing number of those who live by cultivating the earth that has created markets for the diversified industries which have sprung up all over the country. The true basis of all the nations industrial and commercial greatness has been in the millions of farms, and not in the manufacturing cities and towns.

At the present time the farmers greatly outnumber those who are engaged in manufacturing pursuits. As ours is a government which is claimed to represent the whole people it might naturally be supposed that the interests of the majority were the first consideration of national legislators. A brief examination will show whether such is the fact.

The census returns for 1890 show that the farm products of the United States in the last census year were valued at two and a half billion dollars. In the same year the products of the American manufacturers were valued at nine and a half billion dollars, or more than four times greater in value than the farm products. For this remarkable result of the larger number of persons producing a comparatively small share of the annual wealth of the country, there must be some sufficient reason.

What that reason is, is not hard to find. It is in part that for over thirty years the Republican party maintained a most iniquitous system of taxation which fell with crushing weight upon the American farmer. Under the pretense of creating a home market for their products the farmers were compelled to pay billions of dollars in unjust taxation, and billions more in high prices exhorted by the favored objects of class legislation. The protected manufacturers were subsidized with money wrung from the unprotected farmers. Instead of helping the great foundation industry of the country, it was oppressed by laws which brought ruin and poverty to hundreds of thousands. The record of thirty-three years of Republican rule was one of continued discrimination against the men whose unwearied toil had made this great commonwealth.

This is why there has been so much poverty and discontent among the farmers; why the price of farm lands has steadily fallen in many States; why the young men have left the rural districts and crowded into the cities and towns. Is it not time to protest against the attempt of the monopolists who control the Republican machine to restore and extend the system which has proved such a curse to the farming industry?

Wool Prices and Tariffs.

Sheep are bringing very fair prices now in this country; but for all that, it does not pay to raise cheap wool on dear land. The shepherds who do most of the complaining about free wool are in the wool commission business or editing high tariff newspapers. The Louisville Courier Journal is cruel enough to recall to their minds a little wool and tariff history, as follows:

As to prices of wool it may be noted that in January, 1867, before the passage of the high wool tariff, fine wool was worth 68 cents a pound in New York. In October of the same year, after the passage of the high tariff, the same grade of wool was down to 48 cents. We do not say that the decline was due to the tariff; but what would Protectionists have said if the tariff had been reduced? In 1865 fine wool sold for $1.02 a pound under a much lower tariff than that of 1867. It is true that these prices were on an inflated currency, but if we go back to 1859 and 1860, when wool was virtually free, it sold for 60 cents a pound in a currency equal to gold. Under the tariff of 1867 it went down to 34 cents in 1879, and under the McKinley bill to 20 cents in 1894. Wool has declined far less under the present tariff than under former tariffs, and the recent decline has occurred in a period of business depression.—Philadelphia Record.

Bringing Ridicule on McKinley.

There is something immensely funny about the McKinley canvass for the St. Louis nomination. The style in which he is being secluded by his managers, isolated, surrounded with mystery, hemmed in by barriers, made as inaccessible as the Grand Llama of Thibet, and as inscrutable as the oracle of Dodona—all this is thoroughly ridiculous. Here is William McKinley, hitherto a plain American citizen, all of a sudden transformed by his managers into a sort of veiled prophet, immersed in sacred silence, hid in a dim, religious twilight, guarded from invasion by his fellow man, shrined and hidden like some double-distilled fetich, and generally saturated with the mysterious and the supernatural. How very silly it all would seem if it were not so stupid and offensive.—Washington Post.

One More Billion Congress.

The appropriation bills already passed by the House make it inevitable that the total for the present Congress will be largely in excess of $1,000,000,000. The total for the present session, including the deficiency bill and the permanent annual appropriations, and not allowing for additions by the Senate to the bills now in that body, will be in excess of $505,000,000. Here is more than half a billion dollars! This figure was never before reached at a first session.—Utica Observer.

Chandler's Objections to "Boodle."

Mr. Chandler's objection to the use of the manufacturers' money is that it is corrupting. It is of comparatively little consequence, he continues, by inference, if the ballot-box is corrupted in this way, but "the purity and honesty of the party organization" must not be assailed. In other words, the bribery of Democratic voters is allowable, but the bribery of Republicans is not to be tolerated. Chandler is bound to be the enfant terrible of the Republican party to the end. His exposure here of the peculiar kind of morality that prevails in it is in his "freshest vein."—Boston Herald.

Prosperity in the South.

The Chattanooga Tradesman, a nonpartisan business journal, published in a recent issue a summary of reports from 2,500 correspondents throughout the Southern States. These reports show that the iron industry is very active, many of the Southern furnaces having large orders in advance of their present capacity. The large demands for coke keeps the coal miners busy.

The lumber market is strong, with an increasing demand for both domestic and foreign shipments, and the mills are generally fully employed.

Cotton mills are all running on full time, and new textile mills are being organized in large numbers. In one week new cotton mills were reported from Brancheville, Orangeburg and Spartanburg, S. C., and at Sweetwater, Tenn., a silk mill from Birmingham, Ala., woolen mills at Morristown and Shelbyville, Tenn., and knitting mills at Athens and Lexington, Ga., Rocky Mount, N. C., and Chattanooga, Tenn. A large number of other industries, representing nearly a million dollars capital, are also reported from various Southern States.

If facts of this kind were peculiar to the one week included in the Tradesman's reports, they would not call for special mention. But as they are merely samples of the widespread business revival which is everywhere manifest in the South, they furnish a conclusive answer to the wails of Republican calamity howlers. Busy mines, furnaces and factories, new mills and other important industries are the best proof that the cry of "Wilson tariff ruin" is only the invention of desperate office seekers. Between the clamor of partisan organs and the reliable statements of impartial trade journals, which will business men choose?

Hanna Not a Good Campaign Boss.

Men like Hana may be good friends for a candidate to have, but they are poor bosses for a great party. Their first friendship is for themselves. The men they work for are regarded by them as only their hired men, who must obey orders.—Providence Telegram.

Protectionisms.

The protected steel trust keeps the price of steel at least eight dollars per ton higher than it would be under free trade. The farmer who has to pay more for a steel harrow this spring is contributing to the profits of the trust millionaires. Does he like it?

Each keg of nails used by the farmers this year will cost more than twice as much as last year. The highly protected nail trust will make fortunes for the few firms which control the nail industry. How will that help the farmers?

Prices of staple farm products are low, and farmers complain that the railroad freights eat up all the profits on their crops. But the railroads have to pay the trust's price of $29 per ton for steel rails, while the same rails are sold to Japan and Canada for less than $22. The additional $7 comes out of the farmer's pockets. Is it any wonder that freights are high?

The iron ore trust (protected, of course) has decided to mine 2,000,000 tons less ore this year than last season in order to keep prices 50 per cent. higher. This will throw thousands of miners, railroad employes and shipping hands out of work, and tend to lower the wages of those who will be employed. This is how the tariff helps labor.

The New York Tribune, a leading Republican paper, calls trusts "enemies of the people." Yet the Tribune is doing all in its power to persuade the people to nominate for President Major McKinley, the friend and agent of trusts and monopolies. If trusts rob the public through special privileges, it would seem that the way to destroy their powers for evil would be to abolish the tariff taxes which enable them to charge high prices. What do the people who are bled by the trusts think about it?

For thirty-three years the farmers voted for a high tariff. They got the tariff, but the profits all went to a few monopolists. When the Democrats talked tariff-reform the Republicans said: "You make us tired." After a while a majority of the people got tired—of protection, and said so by electing a Democratic President and Congress. Because two years of low tariff have not repaired all the injury caused by thirty-three years of high protection the McKinleyites are howling for a change. If there is to be a change it should be in the direction of lower duties, as demanded by the country in 1892.

Political Notes.

New York Republicans are bound to have harmony, even if they must fight for it.

Edison says he can see through eight inches of wood. Will he kindly explain, then, what the financial plank adopted by Ohio Republicans means?

The loss of two toes will not interfere with Governor Morton's running. His candidacy will boom just as long as he can sign checks.

Will Senator-elect Foraker preface his nominating speech at St. Louis with a quotation? How would this do: "I come to bury Caesar, not to praise him?"

Ohio Republicans have chosen the eagle as their campaign emblem this year. We shall expect to see Governor Morton adopt the double eagle, if he hopes to win.

The Missouri Adventists predict that the world will come to an end June 16. We rather doubt this, but we imagine that several other things will come to an end in St. Louis about that time.

HEAVY LOSS BY FIRE

CRIPPLE CREEK, COLORADO, IS IN RUINS.

Several Squares Swept by the Flames—Plague Spots Wiped Out—Damage Over $1,100,000, with but Light Insurance—3,000 People Homeless.

Eight Blocks Burn.

One million dollars is a conservative estimate of the damage done by fire at Cripple Creek, Colo. The amount of insurance, as nearly as can be arrived at, will not exceed $250,000. When the fire broke out in a second-hand store the danger of a big conflagration was not perceived, and it was thought that the firemen, who were early on the scene, would have the flames under control in a very few minutes. But in a short time the fire had spread to the adjoining buildings and a brisk wind sprung up. Then it was conceded by all that at least half a dozen buildings on the corner of Meyers and Third streets would go, and the occupants began to move out. But many had waited too long and were unable to save their goods. Some barely escaped with their lives. Several women were dangerously burned.

Every minute added fury to the flames, and when the fire had spread several doors on either side the danger to the city was observed, but no one could realize how great the damage would be. The heat became so intense that buildings on the north side of Meyers street took fire. Then it was that occupants of stores and offices began to make preparations to save their possessions. Every wagon in town was pressed into service. Not a tenth part of the goods were saved.

By the time the postoffice had caught it became evident that the only way to stop the progress of the fire was to blow up the buildings with dynamite. This was done under the supervision of the firemen, and a number of buildings had to be sacrificed before the fire had reached them. The fire started about 1 o'clock, and by 4 it had demolished the blocks in Meyers between Third and Fifth streets, and in

SCENE OF THE CRIPPLE CREEK FIRE.

Bennett between Third and Fifth streets, stopping just this side of the New Midland depot. Nearly all the buildings between Third and Fifth streets in Eaton were destroyed. Many people lost everything they had.

Twenty Thousand Letters Destroyed.

The property in Meyers street was occupied in the most part by saloons. The two variety theaters, Topic and Hollang's, were there, and innumerable dance halls. Grace Clifton was badly burned about the face and hands. J. Anderson, while placing a charge of dynamite under the Sisters' hospital to blow it up, had a leg torn off by a premature explosion. The postoffice in Bennett avenue is a total wreck, only the vault standing. Twenty thousand letters and thousands of packages were destroyed. The First National Bank vault is standing. All the books and papers were saved, and the bank opened for business while its building was burning in a room adjoining the Bimetallic Bank. The Episcopal and Congregational churches were destroyed. The city jail, in which were confined about twenty prisoners, has only the iron cages left. The prisoners were released. The Sisters' hospital was blown up after the patients had been removed to the Pike's Peak hospital.

Mayor Steele ordered all saloons closed, which prevented lawlessness. A report was started that thieves were busy and a hundred deputies were at once sworn in and the militia was called out, but no depredations were committed. Thousands of people were made homeless, but they were all given shelter by the generous people of the town. The burned section is to be built up at once with brick and stone.

Work of Rebuilding Begun.

Already the work of rebuilding the burned district has begun. At a meeting of the City Council a resolution was passed allowing the erection of temporary buildings within the fire limits with the provision that all must be removed within sixty days to give place to buildings of stone and brick. Before nightfall fully twenty-five buildings were under way and quite a number are occupied. With 3,000 people rendered homeless in a day, of course lodging houses are in greatest demand, and many of these are rapidly progressing.

At an early hour telegrams began coming to the Mayor from cities and towns of the State offering financial aid. These were turned over to the committee, who replied with thanks, but declining the kindly offers. Cripple Creek will take care of her own. Mayor Steele prepared a proclamation to the general public, saying that outside assistance is not needed.

EGBERT KILLS FIVE PERSONS.

He Then Takes His Own Life—His Sister Dies from the Shock.

Peter Egbert, a Rockville, Ind., carpenter, 22 years old and unmarried, Saturday morning, without apparent cause or provocation, shot and instantly killed Mrs. Herman Haschke and two children, next door neighbors. He then reloaded his gun, and, going up town, saw Sheriff W. M. Mull and Deputy Sheriff Sweem in the National Bank stairway. Egbert put up his weapon and shot the sheriff in the back of the head, killing him instantly. Deputy Sheriff Sweem was at the bottom of the stairs and was shot in the right side of the neck, being instantly killed. Egbert then made his escape to the fair grounds, just outside of town. A posse was immediately organized and started in pursuit. Fifty or more men, armed with shotguns, rifles and pistols, surrounded the grounds. Here, when Egbert found escape impossible, he fired a charge of buckshot into his own head and expired immediately.

Miss Florence Egbert, the sister of the murderer, when she heard the details of the horrible affair and that her own brother was the central figure of the various tragedies became frantic and died immediately from the shock. She was in bed suffering with typhoid fever.

Egbert was about 21 years old and unmarried. He was a great reader and studied Shakspeare much. His companions say he frequently remarked that if he ever got into a tight place he would imitate Brutus' example and take his own life. He seems to have carried out his idea.

Sheriff Mull is widely known in Grand Army of the Republic circles and was a member of Commander Walker's staff. During the war he was colonel of the 149th Indiana, and at times was an officer of the old 14th and 115th. He was brave to a fault. He was on his first term as sheriff and had just received a nomination to a second term.

Sweem was a member of the Rockville Light Artillery and a poor man, but fortunately had insurance of $3,500 in the benevolent organizations. He leaves a wife and six little ones.

Eight Persons Killed Outright in a Kansas Cyclone.

A cyclone swept through Clay County, Kansas Saturday night, leaving a trail of destruction and death to mark its visit. Eight persons were instantly killed and four fatally hurt, so far as known, although investigation is likely to add to this grewsome list. In addition a number of others were more or less seriously hurt, and property worth thousands of dollars, herds of stock and growing crops became the plaything of the devastating tornado.

To add to the terror of the occasion, the storm came at night, arousing the panic-stricken people from their slumber to face death in terrible form. There was scant warning, a few fleecy clouds in the evening giving no sign of the howling tempest that was to descend three hours later. The list of killed, so far as reported, is as follows: E. Beltzor, Mrs. Beltzor, Jessie Hall, aged 5 years; Mrs. Ole Halverson, J. Haynes, Mrs. Frank Peterson, Selma Peterson, aged 10 years; Joseph Trembly. The fatally injured: John Morris, Frank Peterson, aged 40 years; Julia Peterson, aged 8 years; Mrs. Frank Wilkerson.

A mile east of St. Joseph the first victims of the storm were found. There dwelt a well-to-do Frenchman, Eli Beltzor, his wife and six children. The farm house and outbuildings were torn to pieces and Mr. Beltzor and his wife killed. The family were preparing to go into the cellar when the storm struck them. Just east of there another farmer, Joseph Trembly, was killed. None of the family, so far as can be learned, was injured. Three miles south of Clifton several houses were torn down and a number killed.

The cyclone took the people unawares. There had been indications of a heavy rain all day, with local showers, but nobody expected a storm. So far as learned, the victims were in their houses, and most of them had retired. The storm struck Peter Anderson's house at 9:30 o'clock. This was about a mile from the starting point. The house was demolished in an instant. Every member of the Anderson family was injured. When they had extricated themselves from the debris they discovered that Anderson's grandchild was missing. The dead body of the child was found in a ravine half a mile away. It evidently had been carried there by the wind. Anderson alarmed the neighbors who lived out of the track of the storm, and search was commenced for victims.

A large number of cattle and horses were killed, and fruit in the storm's track was ruined. It is impossible at this time to estimate the damage to buildings and other property.

Heartrending tales of suffering are told by persons who visited the scenes of the storm. Many of the injured lay all night, pinned down by wreckage or paralyzed in the mud, while others crawled or hobbled across the country to a neighbor's house. In several instances people were lifted into the air by the cyclone and carried for a distance, and then suddenly dropped. Buildings were lifted up and then hurled to the ground with force enough to demolish them. The wife and daughter of John Morris were reading when the shock came. The house was divided. The women managed to get out, when the wind picked them up, carried them 200 yards and let them safely down on a pile of straw, just away from the storm's track.

FIGURING ON THE DEFICIT.

Officials Estimate the Total for the Fiscal Year Will Be $25,000,000.

The treasury deficit for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, will be approximately $25,000,000. This, according to a Washington dispatch, is the opinion of officials and others best qualified to make an intelligent estimate of the result of the fiscal operations of the year. In his annual estimates sent to Congress at the beginning of the present session, the Secretary of the Treasury estimated the receipts from customs during the fiscal year at $172,000,000. So far, with nearly ten months of the year gone, the customs receipts have reached about $137,000,000, with a fair prospect of increasing to $165,000,000 by the close of the year. The estimate of the receipts from internal revenue sources was $158,000,000. Up to this time they have reached $120,000,000 and it is expected that the figures for the completed year will be about $146,000,000.

The receipts from miscellaneous sources are expected to slightly exceed the estimates of $15,000,000, making the total receipts for the year about $327,000,000. The Secretary's estimate of the year's expenditures was $362,000,000, which, according to his figures, would leave a deficiency of $17,000,000.

The actual expenditures, however, it is now thought, will aggregate about $352,000,000, or $10,000,000 less than Mr. Carlisle's estimate in December last, so that the deficit at the close of the year, it is believed, will not show any very material change from Saturday's figures, $25,162,423. This makes the total deficit for the three fiscal years ending June 30, 1896, $136,861,812.

TRIAL OF JACKSON.

Alleged Murderer of Pearl Bryan Fighting for His Life.

The end is drawing near in the Pearl Bryan murder case—that case so full of guilty romance, of mystery and of pathos. Seldom has a tragedy so engrossed the minds of the public as this horrible drama of the bleak hills of the Kentucky Highlands, where in the murky gloom of a cold January night the unfortunate victim of her own love and a man's fiendish scheming was beheaded. No adornment is needed for the story of the crime; it stands forth as strange, as weird and as intricate as any novelist's conception. Not yet are all the features in the case made clear; but the trial of Scott Jackson, which is now progressing in the Campbell County court at Newport, Ky., will lift fully the veil of mystery. And following his trial for the butchery of Pearl Bryan will come that of his accomplice, Alonzo Walling. Interest in the trial of Jackson is very deep and very general and the court room, in which Judge Helm presides, is every day crowded with people, anxious to see the prisoner and take in every detail of the proceedings.

Judge Helm and Sheriff Plummer decided to admit only 200 spectators to the court room at one time. Tickets are given out for each half day, and no one will be given tickets twice during the trial. In this way the sheriff hopes to discourage traffic in tickets, which, if placed on sale, would undoubtedly demand a high price.

A theory which finds many supporters is that Jackson will take the stand and admit he was instrumental in bringing about Miss Bryan's death; that he was a mutual friend of the victim and Will Wood, and that at their request he agreed to perform the operation and requested Walling to assist him. This they attempted to do and made a mistake which resulted in death, but the crime was committed in Cincinnati, and with a view to concealing the victim's identity the body was taken to Fort Thomas and the head severed. Should the truth of this story be established a conviction in Kentucky could not stand. Thus there is a possibility of the defendant escaping punishment on technicalities, even though he be guilty.

Witnesses were examined Saturday to establish the identity of the headless body found near Fort Thomas as that of Pearl Bryan's and to prove that she was murdered at the very spot where she was found. In the afternoon the defense began to cross-examine witnesses. The method pursued indicated the lines of defense; one that the body was killed by some drug several hours before it was beheaded where it was found; also that all confessions of Jackson were made under durance, were not voluntary and will be incompetent as evidence.

HER HAPPY DAY.

A CHARMING STORY OF MEDICINE AND MARRIAGE.

Two Open Letters From a Chicago Girl —How Happiness Came to Her.

Among the tens of thousands of women who apply to Mrs. Pinkham for advice and are cured, are many who wish the facts in their cases made public, but do not give permission to publish their names for reasons as obvious as in the following, and no name is ever published without the writer's authority; this is a bond of faith which Mrs. Pinkham has never broken.

Chicago, Jan. 5th, '95.

My dear Mrs. Pinkham:—A friend of mine, Mrs. ——, wants me to write you, because she says: "you did her so much good." I am desperate. Am nineteen years of age, tall, and weighed 135 pounds a year ago. I am now a mere skeleton. From your little book I think my trouble is profuse menstruation. My symptoms are * * * * etc.

Our doctor (my uncle) tells father that I am in consumption, and wants to take me to Florida. Please help me! Tell me what to do, and tell me quickly. I am engaged to be married in September. Shall I live to see the day? * * * * LUCY B. W.

Chicago, June 16th, '95.

My dear Mrs. Pinkham:—This is a happy day. I am well and gaining weight daily, but shall continue the treatment and Vegetable Compound during the summer, as you suggest. Uncle knows nothing about what you have done for me, because it would make things very unpleasant in the family. I would like to give you a testimonial to publish, but father would not allow it. * * * * I shall be married in September, and as we go to Boston, will call upon you. How can I prove my gratitude? * * * * LUCY B. W.

Just such cases as the above leak out in women's circles, and that is why the confidence of the women of America is bestowed upon Mrs. Pinkham.

Why are not physicians more candid with women when suffering from such ailments?

HOW TO MAKE A SHIRT LAST A WEEK.

HOW THEY MAKE LOVE.

Officers of the Salvation Army Must Do Nothing Sentimental.

Marriages of officers in the Salvation army are not numerous, and perhaps the reason is to be found in the very stringent laws which govern the love-making in that body. The new field book of the army, which has just been issued, lays down the rules which must govern the affections of individuals in the army as if hearts were machines and Cupid's pranks could be controlled with a word.

It is only to the officers of the army; however, that these rules apply; the rank and file may make love and marry as they see fit, provided they limit the number of their marriages to one. If the susceptible heart of a male officer becomes stirred with the tender passion of love, and he ardently desires to become one with the fair lady of his affection, he does not drop at once on the left knee and ask her to allow her soul to join with his, nor does he then slip on the engagement ring while she prettily blushes. Neither does he timidly approach him whom he fain would call father, declaring that life without "her" is of no account at all.

No; he goes to the division officer and briskly asks for a printed engagement application blank. He fills this out, stating all he knows about the fair one, and hands it back to the division officer, who in turns forwards it to the national headquarters.

Officers may not marry without a year's separation from their chosen life partners, and if the two favorites interested both live in the same town, the higher officer either refuses them permission to become engaged or remust rise from the ranks before the marriage will be sanctioned. This provision is made that there may be extraordinary efforts made by the private in doing good work—and love will find a way—for thus the marriage will reflect honor upon the army.

"Any breaking of an engagement," the field book ordains, "must at once quires one of the young people to go to another city.

In a case where an officer, male or female, wishes to become engaged to an ordinary soldier the same rule of separation is observed, but the private be reported to the division officer, and any officer found guilty of shameless and heart-breaking jilting will be reduced to the ranks. Courting means, more or less, a division of feeling, necessarily interfering in some measure with the discharge of duty, and is therefore deprecated. Officers must not be allowed to carry on any courtship in the town in which they are stationed."

NOT ALLOWED TO COURT IN SAME TOWN.

Not for Carriage Wheels.

It is not as generally understood as it should be, perhaps, that bicycle wheels seldom or never are subjected to lateral strains. They need to resist only those strains which pass through their own plane, and in this plane only have they any strength worth speaking of. This is worth remembering when the use of wheels of this type is being considered for three or four-wheeled vehicles, where the conditions are essentially different, and where, in turning corners rapidly, or in going over ground that causes the vehicle to be inclined sideways, a very considerable lateral strain may be brought upon the wheels—a strain which the ordinary bicycle wheel is, very properly, entirely unfitted for. This is to be considered also in connection with devices for attaching two wheels side by side to make a duplex or four-wheeled machine of them. Neither the frame, the bearings nor the wheels of a properly constructed bicycle are adapted to such use without injury.

SHE DEFIES THE FRENCH.

Plucky South Sea Queen Who Led Her Forces to Victory.

Queen Mamea of the Island of Huaheme of the Society group is a buxom ruler who for years has defied the power of the French authorities at Tahiti. Mamea has often been spoken of as the handsomest woman in the South Seas but whether her claims to this distinction are based upon substantial grounds residents of Raiatea are inclined to doubt. "We will annex the island, and you must submit," was the edict sent out by the Governor of Tahiti to the Queen. Her reply was a raid on the French missionaries near Uturoa and the slaughter of several traders. The French shelled Huaheme and landed troops at the Queen's palace, but the wily lady led her forces by a rapid march into the mountain fastnesses of the interior, and at the head of 500 natives held the foreign soldiers back, losing but a few followers in administering to the French soldiers a sound thrashing.

Shoe Cabinets.

The furniture-makers are showing a beautiful article of mahogany and glass which reminds one of the cabinets for bric-a-brac, but it is more substantial and its legs are shorter. It is made to hold a woman's shoes and to stand across the corner of her dressing-room. One Easter bride has such a cabinet well filled, and it is an important feature of the trousseau. Her cabinet has three plate-glass shelves and a drawer which holds the polish and small articles for repairs. On the top shelf is a row of slippers for evening wear. The next shelf holds the patent leather ties, the cloth top boots with big buttons and the stout little calf ones for street wear. On the bottom shelf is rather a motley group—cycle shoes, riding boots, tennis shoes, tan shoes, hunting boots and soft Indian moccasins of tiger skin, beaver trimmed.

A Brave Coyote.

Coyotes have the reputation of being very cowardly, but a trapper in Wasco County, Oregon, ran across one recently that put up a vicious fight and severely wounded him before he could kill it. The coyote was caught by the foot in a trap. As the trapper approached the animal succeeded in freeing itself and instead of running away turned and attacked the trapper, and war killed only after a severe struggle. The incident is said to be unique.

The trouble with cute children is they soon outgrow it, and become imprudent.

A man never gets as much as he expects, in anything.

BONNETS IN PIQUE AND MUSLIN.

Abyssinians Are Good Fighters.

The Italians, of course, explain their defeat by the presence of French and Russian officers with Menelek, but it may be questioned if any Anglo-Indian general accustomed to mountain warfare would agree with them. Drill does not improve Oriental soldiers like the Abyssinians. They are Semites in blood, of exceptional courage, men who did not hesitate to charge into the center of the Italian regiments; they have been accustomed to defend their hills for a thousand years; and they have generals accustomed to utilize masses of men who recently destroyed an army from Khartoum at Kassala.

They had good rifles, they were on the higher ridges when they started, and their King, Menelek, is obviously a soldier of the Hyder Ali type—that is, a man who can induce his soldiery to die. To beat such men they must either be decoyed out of the hills or attacked from above, and the Italians were still mounting when an avalanche of riflemen swept down on them. The number of the dead suggests that the Italians fought well, but the frightful proportion of officers killed, two-thirds the whole number, tells a different tale. The officers, we fear, exposed themselves to arrest a panic, which may, however, have broken out at first only among the native troops.—London Spectator.

He Knew What He Wanted.

I had an interesting experience the other day in one of the cut rate drug stores. There was a rush of budding pharmacists to wait upon me.

"I want a bottle of Dr. ——'s cure. How much is it?"

"Eighty-three cents," was the reply, "but we have one of our own make which is just as good——"

"But I don't want that."

"If you don't get cured after taking ours bring back the bottle——"

"I insist I don't want it."

"And get your money, although you may have taken all the medicine. We guarantee ours, and can't the other."

The fellow kept on talking, and I don't know but that he is still at it, for I didn't wait to see him stop, neither did I buy what I wanted, after all. I went to a neighboring store and purchased what I thought I desired, and not something "just as good" or "better" than what I purchased. There is some satisfaction in knowing what you want and getting it without the interference of a drug clerk.—Boston Post.

MUSCULAR RHEUMATISM.

From the New Era, Greensburg, Ind.

The editor of the Greensburg New Era hearing that Mr. J. S. Wise, a prominent and highly esteemed farmer residing near New Point, Ind., had been permanently cured of an exceedingly bad case of muscular rheumatism, decided to learn the truth of the matter for the satisfaction of himself, and for the benefit of his thousands of readers, and last week sent a reporter to New Point for that purpose.

Asked as to whether he had been cured of a bad case of muscular rheumatism by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, Mr. Wise said: "Yes, sir, it is true, quite true, every word of it, and I am proud to say it. My story is a sad one, as was my physical condition but a short while ago. In my early manhood I began suffering intense pains in my limbs from rheumatism. As the years rolled on my pains increased with each succeeding season, more especially in the fall and winter, and I was by no means devoid of it in the spring and summer. It continually grew worse.

"Finally it became unbearable, my suffering was so intense. The parts pained me severely. I had received treatment from a physician from the beginning, but he did me no good whatever. I tried another and yet another, but none of them did me the least noticeable good. It is true that at times they seemed to help me, but it was only temporary, and I would be much worse afterward. My physicians were said to be the best, one of them making a specialty of rheumatic diseases. They all gave me up and pronounced my case incurable. I was gradually growing from bad to worse.

"For six months it was impossible for me to dress myself. My joints were almost stiff, and I was confined to my room and bed continually. An hour's sleep of a night was a rarity with me, and a full meal I could not eat. I was despondent and discouraged and all hope was gone. I gave up in despair. I was only living, it seemed, to be a burden to my family and to postpone funeral expenses. It was at the eleventh hour that our druggist advised me to try a box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, as he had heard much good testimony in their favor. I had no faith in them, for I had tried numerous patent medicines without effect. My folks urged me to try them as a last resort. A box was brought me, and I began to get getter at once. The second box improved me so that I was able to be about and dress and wait upon myself. I took four or five boxes and they made me perfectly sound and well as you see me to-day. I was several years a sufferer, but was saved at last by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They did the work and they did me a world of good."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, etc. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price, 50c a box or six boxes for $2.50, by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. RIPANS TABULES

Mrs. E. F. Patterson, writing from Bridgeport, Jackson County, Alabama, June 3, 1895, says: "Being a Northerner by birth, it is not an easy thing to eat comfortably food prepared in Southern style, and consequently one suffers from it. One day, feeling great discomfort from that cause, an old negro retainer said to me: 'Scuse me, Missey, but my old woman knows something powerfu' good for dem pains. I disremembers the name, but it's Rip sometin', and it just rips the pain out. Old Milly 'ill tell you 'bout it.' To please him I called on his wife in their little cabin, and will try and give you her account. 'You know all fall and winter I was powerfu' weak and couldn't eat nothin', and one day I was a lyin' yere in terrible 'stress and genman knocked at de door and says: "Mammy, can I have some water for myself and horse?" "Deed you can, Marsa; but I'se too sick to get the things, I hab such awfu' 'stress all over." "Why, Mammy," he says, "I've just the thing for you that I bought in Washington for just such pains." So he gave that medsin and de 'stress am all gone and I eats eberything, and I goes eberywhere; so, Missey, I knows day will help you.' That Crooked Well.

W. S. Purdy's suit about that crooked well, has been finished, and to a certain extent he is winner, not however, to the extent he should be. We understand the jury at Fort Wayne allowed him $15, but had the amount at stake been large enough to pay for the additional expense, he could have secured a new trial. But he feels satisfied as far as he could under the circumstances. It will be recalled that he put down a well for a man named Snyder over in the edge of Allen county. It got good water and plenty of it. But Snyder objected, claiming the well was not perpendicular, and refused to pay. Purdy took out a mechanics lien on it, and Snyder resisted, claiming that while a mechanic might take out a lien on a building, he could not on a well. But the result of the suit was to sustain the validity of the lien. It appears also that Snyder had pulled up the pipe of this well and had another put down "straight" though it is claimed that it went down most of the way in the old hole. Just what difference it should make to Snyder whether the well was out of "plumb" or not, does not appear. The main use of a well is to get a plenty of good water.

Indiana Centennial.

Col. Eli Lilly, of Indianapolis, president of the Indiana Centennial Commission, and Myron D. King, its secretary, send us the following:

The movement to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the establisment of Indiana's territorial government is attracting the utmost attention and notice in all sections of the state. From every county come hundreds of letters enthusiastically supporting the idea, and from no quarter have the responses been more general or more encouraging than from the north eastern portion of the state.

D. N. Foster writes from Fort Wayne urging a great celebration and one that when over will leave Indiana's capitol an exposition building in which may be held every two years a fair similar to the one maintained by Chicago a number of years ago.

J. W. Baker, editor of the Columbia City Commerical, desires a celebration commensurate with the dignity and importance of Indiana. He urges that it be on a grand scale or not given at all.

Thos. R. Marshall, of Columbia City, writes that he believes patriotism is best fostered not only by frequent recurrence to the present, but also by constantly calling the attention of the people to the trials and struggles of our forefathers. He suggests therefore that various exhibits be prepared with a view to marking the state's progress from decade to decade, showing as clearly as possible the correct history of its condition at each of those periods.

E. O. Rose, of Angola, wants to see an exposition that will command the admiration of other states and be gratifying to the pride of all Indianains. He thinks the Philadelphia Centennial and the recent World's Fair worth many times their cost to the people and the industrial interests of the United States.

S. A. Powers, of Angola, writes that he would hardly be worthy the honor of citizenship in the greatest State of the Union were he the oppose the celebration proposed. He would open the doors wide and invite every State in the union to compete with and aid Indiana in this proposed celebration. He would send invitations to every nation on earth except Turkey. The event, he believes, should be of such a character that its impression on history of Indiana will never fade away.

W. H. Kiblinger Company, of Auburn, believe that such a celebration cannot but help Indiana, and are heartily in favor of it.

H. G. Zimmerman, of Albion, desires an exposition entirely creditable to the State in its extent, cost and details.

Otis L. Ballou, of Lagrange, is hearty sympathy with the movement and wants Indiana to celebrate her centennial in a manner worthy her fair name and fame. Such a celebration, he writes, will inure to the benefit of the humblest citizen and its results be lasting and effective to the people of this state.

wear off

The man with the tattoo marks on his skin would be foolish to attempt to wear them off by hard work. The person with a severe cough or cold is about as unwise to attempt to wear that off. This "wear off" idea has cost many a life.

Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil, with Hypophosphites, gives immediate aid by smoothing the cough and supplying tonic remedies to the weakened system. It prevents consumption by promptly curing these colds and supplying the preventive power by which the system can withstand disease.

SCOTT'S EMULSION has been endorsed by the medical profession for twenty years. (Ask your doctor.) This is because it is always palatable—always uniform—always contains the purest Norwegian Cod-liver Oil and Hypophosphites.

Put up in 50 cent and $1.00 sizes. The small size may be enough to cure your cough or help your baby.

The Facts Concerning a Sensational Case which came before 'Squire Walter.

On last Tuesday Milty Furgerson who resides with her parents in Jackson township, came to Auburn and commenced action against Almon Irven of the same township, claiming that she would become a mother and that he was the father. Constable Fred Kruger drove to his home and read the warrant and Mr. Irven accompanied him to this city. As soon as he understood thoroughly, the nature of the warrant he knew that charges were brought upon an innocent man. He at once employed an able attorney and stated the facts to him, Mr. Irven is a married man and has a most respectable wife and the same can be said of Mrs. Irven's parents. It appeared that one Newton Pendland had been keeping company with this woman since last winter and that he is the father of the child. But a plan was figured out between him and the woman, et al, to have her bring suit against Mr. Irven for bastardy. He owns a nice little farm and it was thought the court would grant the woman three or four hundred dollars, after which Penland would marry the girl, the money being sufficient to help pay the expense of commencing housekeeping. But this plan did not work. Mr. Irven had sufficient evidence to prove in a short time that he was not guilty. And before returning to his home that evening he was released from the charge by the woman and her father. She then swore out a warrant against Penland who had been influential in having her bring the charge against Mr. Irven. She demanded a settlement from him. At about 10 o'clock Tuesday night Pen and was brought before 'Squire Walter, and after waking up several of our citizens was unable to give bonds and was therefore turned over to Sheriff Stroh. Wednesday afternoon the case was tried before 'Squire Walter. Here the man and woman both gave some sensational testimony, which is too low to appear in print. Penland refused to settle with the woman and the case was carried up to court. It was then supposed the trouble was over till court convened. But in the meantime Penland and the woman had again met and he came to the conclusion that he had no grounds to fight the case in court and a marriage license was secured and the couple were married Thursday. Then the next thing in order was to take the case out of court and pay the costs which were promptly attended to. On Friday night at a late hour Penland and his wife's father called on Mr. Irven and asked for a settlement. Mr. Penland said that he had done wrong, that he was not alone in the matter but another man had urged him and helped persuade the girl in bringing charges against him. He asked forgiveness and said hereafter, wished to be a friend to him. They paid Mr. Irven's expense for an attorney and also made another settlement between Mr. Irven and another man. The COURIER makes this statement concerning this affair so that our readers may understand the facts.

Obituary.

Susan Boyer was born Oct. 8, 1843, and died April 30, 1896. Aged 52 years 6 months and 22 days.

She was the daughter of David Oberlin deceased, and a native of Stark Co. Ohio. In 1847 they came to DeKalb county, Ind., where her youth and womanhood were developed, amid the scenes and events of a pioneer life. Inured to hard and constant toil, she became a robust woman, capable in labor industry, economy and thrift.

On the 16th day of March 1861 she was married to Baylis H. Boyer. The union proving happy and in every way felicitous, during early days and down to the very gate of death "Bale" was her sure and steadfast stay and support. It would be difficult to find an instance of more perfect, loving and trustful union than their life displayed. Three sons and a daughter were born to them all except the youngest son survive and bless her memory. The bereft husband and family were comforted by the expression of sympathy of the enormous concourse of neighbor who accompanied them from the sad home to Hamilton where the funeral and interment took place on last Sunday.

Drowned.

Lewis Gingery, son of Frank Gingery, of Garrett was drowned about four o'clock Saturday evening, in Cedar Creek, a short distance south of the B. & O. bridge over that stream. The spot is in the woods on John Shuger's land. Two streams, the Cedar and Little Cedar unite there and form a large deep hole, in the present case made worse by the high water. It appears that a number of Garrett boys have been in the habit of riding from that place on freight trains and risking their lives by jumping from the moving train at the Sheets farm. Then they could walk down into the woods and have a swim. In this instance four boys came over together and went in swimming. It would appear that young Gingery took a cramp and this together with the deep and whirling water, made it impossible for him to be got out. When the boys caught him, he clung to them till they had to let him go. He went out of sight but the body was recovered about an hour later. We believe Sheriff Stroh got him. He was taken back to Garrett by the sorrowing friends who came over, and will be buried to-morrow May 12, at Hicksville, we presume, as his people formerly lived there. His father is a brakeman on the B. & O.

Promise Too Much

Candidates do foolish things, but nothing more foolish and wrong than to promise more people places, than there are places to give. The present talk is that McKinley's friends have already promised more places than can be given away. This also reminds us of the snap that Mike Long, the county clerk elect, got himself into in this way. During the campaign he promised Joe Grover of this place that in case of success, he would make Joe his deputy. Joe hustled for votes the rest of the campaign and doubtless helped Mike a good deal. After election however, it appears that Blanche Shilling, the present efficient lady deputy, got the job, at least it was given out that she was engaged to help in the office for a year. This took Grover and his friends over to Butler and we are told that Mike had to make a swift compromise, and it is likely that Joe will get a job after Miss Shilling's contract has expired. Several other officers we could name, have gotten into trouble by this same foolish practice of promising the same stick of gum to several different chewers.

Old Relics.

Talk about old relics! Here is the queerest one. H. H. Cupp was out at J. L. Ferguson's yesterday, and found that Mr. Ferguson was still using a set of "dump boards" that Mr. Cupp had used while helping to grade this branch of the Lake Shore road. That work was done through the summer of 1870, twenty-six years ago. The boards are of basswood and were originally two and a quarter inches thick, though now much thinner, as Mr. Ferguson has used them more or less all these years in hauling dirt, stone and the like. But he has taken good care of them.

What It Means.

Explaining what free coinage means Secretary Carlisle said in his Chicago speec h: "The naked proposition is that the United States shall coin, at the public expense, for the exclusive benefit of the individuals and corporations owning the bullion, all the silver that may be presented at the mints into dollars containing 371¼ grains of pure silver or 412½ grains of standard silver, worth intrinsically about 51 or 52 cents, deliver the coins to the depositors of the bullion and compel all the country to receive these coins at a valuation of 100 cents each." The farmer has the same right to ask the government to issue dollar wheat certificates against his fifty cent wheat, and compel the public to use them.

They compelled Simonton to open the safe, and after ransacking it, they bound and gagged the old couple and made good their escape. There is no clew. DEADLY GASOLINE STOVE.

Two Women and Two Little Boys Burned So Badly That They Died Soon After.

As a result of an explosion of a gasoline stove in a Brooklyn tenement house, two women and two children were so badly burned that they died soon afterward. Two other children were also seriously burned.

The explosion occurred in Mrs. Cohen's apartments while she was standing at the stove, and the burning fluid ignited her clothing, quickly enveloping her in flames. The terrified woman ran shrieking into the apartments of Mrs. Parcarnek, across the hallway, and in the latter's attempt to release the suffering woman, her clothing was set on fire. Then both women ran into the hallway, where they were found by the firemen who carried them to the street. They died a few minutes later. The clothing of Mrs. Cohen's two children, Karl and Solomon, was also ignited from the fire caused by the explosion. They were so terribly burned about the body and limbs that they died soon after being removed to the hospital.

WEYLER'S WORST ENEMIES.

Yellow Fever and Small-Pox Now Fighting the Spanish Troops.

The United States Marine Hospital inspector at Santiago de Cuba, in his latest report, says:

Yellow fever is still raging among the new recruits (from Spain,) and the Government has at last seen the wisdom of building separate barracks, where the sick from this fever are now confined.

United States Consul Hyatt, at the same port, reports to the State Department: "Small-pox is epidemic in many parts of Eastern Cuba, and between the lack of sanitary discipline and moving troops it bids fair to continue until, between the disease and vaccination, the culture field is exhausted."

The significance of these reports at a time when Cuba is healthier than at any other period of the year indicates what is to be expected when the hot season advances and the full effects of the neglect incidental to the revolution commence to operate.

Dying Robber Confesses.

Johnson City (Tenn.) special: John Crouch, the young burglar who was shot at Piney Flats, nine miles east of here in a duel with Station Agent Wm. Wolfe, is dead. Crouch entered the depot masked and blacked and commanded the agent to hold up his hands. Not being obeyed at once, he fired his drawn revolver, missing his man. Wolfe returned the fire, wounding the burglar in the neck. Crouch was a black sheep of good family. Before he died it is said that he made a confession implicating others not only in that robbery, but of wrecking four trains on the Southern, killing four engineers.

For McKinley.

By the action of the California Republican convention California added her named to the list of states that have endorsed ex-Gov. William McKinley of Ohio, for President of the United States, and her delegates will go to the national convention directed to vote for the champion of protection as long as there are any prospects of his nomination. The silver plank was as follows: "We favor the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, and the making of silver as well as gold a legal tender in payment of all debts, both public and private."

Picked Him Out.

A steel truss worn by Charles Glewitt of Pittsburgh, it is thought, attracted a bolt of lightning that killed him recently. Glewitt was 11 years old and a cripple. With two other boys he took refuge from a storm in an unroofed house. While crouching there a bolt of lightning struck him in the back of the head, killing him instantly. His parents and the authorities think the lightning was attracted by a metallic support around the child's waist.

Were Blown to Atoms.

George Cannon and Thomas Alberton were blown to pieces by an explosion in the Whitewell Mine, near Chattanaogo, Tenn. The men prepared a shot in one of the rooms. They waited some time for the fuse to ignite and growing tired went back to see what was the matter. They had hardly entered the room when the explosion occurred. Cannon's heard was blown off his body and both men were horribly mangled.

Postoffice Robbers Captured.

Town Marshall C. M. Miller of Husdred, W. Va., captured two postoffice robbers near Littleton, W. Good Fruit Prospects.

A DELIGHTFUL SPOT.

IT WILL BE A PARADISE FOR PLEASURE-SEEKERS.

The Broad Acres of the Swift Farm, Six Miles North of Fort Wayne, on the St. Joe River, Are Being Converted Into a Grand Summer Resort.

Fort Wayne, Ind., is to have a summer resort, and a first-class one at that. Instead of going away for a day's outing the citizens of that thriving city will be enabled to enjoy a breath of country air at home, and instead of the inconvenience of a long ride on the railroad, a few minutes ride on an open air car, through the pleasantest country in Indiana brings them to a beautiful spot, where they can stretch themselves and throw the conventionalities of city life aside for a day, and bask in the sunshine of the fields and woods.

To the officers and managers of the Fort Wayne Consolidated Electric Railway is due the fact that the people of Fort Wayne are at length to enjoy the freedom and rest which their busy lives make indispensable.

PAGODA.

The work of constructing a double track to the Swift farm has already begun, and the cars will be running in a few weeks.

The Swift farm, which has been purchased by the company, is situated six miles north of the city on the banks of the beautiful St. Joe River. The contract for beautifying the place and the construction of the buildings has been let, and will be commenced immediately.

The peninsula on which the buildings are to be built is about 600 feet across, and twenty-five feet above the level of the river.

The main pavilion will face the river, and is to have a frontage of 150 feet and a depth of 100 feet. It will be two stories in height, with a round tower at each corner and a gable between each. On each tower and corner, and on the angles of the roof, spaces will be left for flags and the colors of the societies which patronize the park.

There will be two porches, or verandas, around the entire building, one on each floor, 16 feet in width. Inside there will be a large dancing hall 60 by 80 feet. A cafe, strictly first-class, cigar stand, news depot, and a bar for the sale of soft drinks and confections, will be among the accommodations The building will be supplied with screens, so that in case of storm or rain, the people may have protection. The pavilion will accommodate 5,000 people.

On a high point of land that juts out into the river, the orchestrion or band stand will be erected, and will be one of the finest to be had. The location faces across the bayou, so that those in the grove on the opposite shore may hear and enjoy the music.

THEATER.

Across a small bayou, to the west of the pavilion, will be a club house, 60 by 80 feet in dimensions and facing the river. The club house will be a pretty building, with a veranda 15 feet in width extending entirely around it. In the center there will be a large reception room, billiard rooms and, forming a hollow square with the walls, will be a number of smaller rooms, which may be used as card rooms, or private dining rooms for parties.

Lavatories and otherconveniences will also be provided.

Throughout the grove, and along the banks of the river, are points of land somewhat elevated above the surrounding ground, and on each of these will be built a pretty pagoda. These small arbors will be pretty places for small parties who desire to separate themselves from the throngs.

To the west of the pavilion, and some distance from the train shed, will be the theater, with a capacity of seating 1,500 people. The exterior of the theater will present an attractive appearance, while inside the arrangements will be after the plans of the great theaters of the country, with a gallery running around three sides of the room.

On a point of land west of the "loop" and pavilion and other buildings there will be a water tower, constructed on the plan of an old world windmill. The tower will be of rough stone and the great fans, swinging through the air, give the place a decidedly Knickerbocker appearance.

East of the pavilion, down at the water's edge, will be the boat house, an important adjunct. Here a fleet of rowboats will be kept, beside a number of electric and naptha launches, for the benefit of the lovers of aquatic sports. Rowing and other similar sports will receive an impetus from the construction of the park and buildings, and river tournaments and regattas will be a feature of the summer entertainments of the future.

The boat house will be situated on the large bayou, which will be dredged out to a shallow depth, making a large stretch of water for the pleasure of ladies and children, who may not wish to venture out into the deep water.

Some distance to the north will be situated the engine and power house, with a dynamo large enough to furnish light for the park. One hundred arc lights will be placed about through the grove, while 1,500 incandescent lights will furnish the light for the buildings, and will be scattered here and there wherever needed throughout the grounds.

The grove proper comprises about 75 acres of land, all heavily wooded. There is no young, small timber—no underbrush. On the contrary, nearly every tree in the grove is a monarch. Great, gnarled oaks, their rough bark telling the story of centuries of storm and sunshine, rear their heads proudly, and interlace their boughs with the foliage of the stately beech and the hardy hickory.

The land is undulating, a gentle swell alternating with the lower portions, forming a diversified and variegated landscape. Two tiny streams trickle from between great stones and sing their meandering way through the leafy covers to lean laughingly into the main river. These little brooks will be crossed by rustic bridges, placed here and there among the pathways. Scattered about through the grove are a number of springs, pouring forth a never decreasing supply of water, fresh, pure and sparkling from the bosom of mother earth. The grove affords an excellent view of the river. Standing on the elevated point of land at the entrance to the bayou, the eye falls on a broad expanse of clear water, sweeping along majestically, and far to the south, where the river curves, the woods appear to mingle their branches with the limpid waters.

The great bend in the river surrounds a section of land, 100 acres in extent, directly opposite the grove to the south and east. This land is, for the most part, low and marshy, with a number of elevations which are heavily wooded. A slight rise in the river puts this land under water, when the entire country takes on the appearance of a lake. It is the intention of the street car company to dredge out the low land of this section, bringing it on a level with the rest of the river, and flooding it, making a lake of no mean dimensions. The high places will be allowed to remain, making a number of pleasant, thickly-wooded islands. On one of these little islets, opposite the bayou and directly facing the buildings, will be built a lighthouse. The tower will be 75 feet in height and provided with five arc lights and a large search light, with which any object within a radius of several miles can be brought distinctly into view no matter how dark the night.

BOAT HOUSE.

To all who are acquainted with this delightful spot, its fitness for a summer resort will be at once apparent, as the natural beauties of the place, coupled with its many advantages, make it a most desirable locality to the seeker after pleasure or repose.

AN ENGINE OF DEATH

MANY KILLED BY A CINCINNATI GAS GENERATOR.

Awful Catastrophe Occurs When Building and Streets Were Crowded—Certain that Many Are Dead and More Mangled—Panic in the City.

Tale of the Horror.

At 7:45 Monday evening a terrific explosion occurred in Louis Fey's saloon at Cincinnati, O., immediately opposite the Gibson house. The building, a five-story brick, was shattered to splinters. Fey manufactured his own gas with a machine from gasoline. A large tank filled with the explosive fluid was in the room in the rear of the saloon. In addition a barrel of gasoline was being unloaded at the time. An electric motor furnished the power. The motor was operated at too high a rate of speed, causing the commutator to burn out. This ignited the gasoline, causing the explosion. It is almost certain that at least twenty persons were killed. A fair estimate places the number caught in the falling building at from sixty to seventy-five. At least twenty-five people, and perhaps more, the exact number may never be known, were mangled, crushed, burned and scalded to death. Bodies of Adolph Drach's family of four, and four unknown, were quickly recovered. Three of the Fey family, two servant girls, and three men employes were missing. Twenty-five injured were removed to the hospital, two of whom will die.

The explosion shook large buildings for squares. Hundreds of windows in the Gibson House were broken and plate glass windows on both sides of Walnut street the entire length of the square were shattered. Scores of pedestrians were knocked from their feet and there were dozens of runaway teams in the vicinity. Several electric cars were thrown from the track and at least twenty female passengers on different cars fainted away and were carried into the Gibson House and adjoining places. The electric light, telegraph, telephone and trolley wires on the square were torn down and the explosion was followed immediately by darkness.

Whole Building Destroyed.

Flash lights were rigged up across the street and the rays thrown onto the ruins. The explosion tore the entire structure from between adjoining buildings on either side as neatly as it could have been accomplished by workmen. All that is now left is a mass of brick, mortar and torn lumber, over which the roof rests in a slanting position. It was occupied by Fey's and Drach's saloons, both of the better class. It is estimated that forty or fifty people were inside at the time of the explosion, and it seems impossible that any could have escaped.

The firemen beat a path into the adjoining barber shop and began drilling holes through the thick brick wall in the hope of reaching some of the bodies. The heavy roof lying over the ruins made it impossible for the firemen to make any headway from the top or sides.

The upper floors of the five-story building were occupied as flats. It is not known how many people were in the flats or how many were in the saloons, but none escaped, as the building immediately collapsed. There was no fire to consume the ruins and make certain death of all in the building, but the dust and dirt continued flying for a long time so densely that the work of rescuing the victims proceeded with great difficulty.

His Whole Family Gone.

One of the barkeepers, who was not on duty at the time and escaped, lived in one of the upper flats, and was wild with grief because he knew that his wife and four children were in the ruins. One of his children was recovered dead soon after the explosion.

As the night passed the scenes about the wrecked buildings became more distressing than ever. Women whose husbands and sons had not reached home by 10 or 11 o'clock came down to the Fountain square and filled up the space about the government building, where they were weeping and crying about their friends being in the wreckage.

Departments at Work.

All of the departments of the city were at work at the ruins. The police commissioners were in charge of their department, together with Chief Deitsch, and the fire commissioners were with Chief Archibald. The street cleaning department was out in full force, at work removing the debris and hauling it away, and good engineers were soon on hand superintending the handling of the heavy timbers.

Crowded with People.

The explosion occurred at a time in the evening when there were many people in the bar, and it was said soon after the explosion that a number of women and their escorts had just entered. They were probably in the wine rooms in the rear of the bar. The street was well filled with pedestrians and it is almost certain that many of them were fatally injured. Standing almost in front of the building when the explosion occurred was a Newport and Covington car. It was completely wrecked and the half-dozen passengers and the motorman and conductor were more or less severely injured.

Panic in the Gibson House.

There were several hundred guests in the Gibson House and they all became panic-stricken. Men and women rushed from their rooms, the latter shrieking with terror and several of them fainting. The guests of the house who were in the lobby, barber shop and waiting-room were knocked down by the shock. It seemed to them as though the explosion was in the hotel building and, not knowing at what moment it would be followed by another, they rushed from the hotel, adding to the panic in the street.

Wreck at Liberty, Neb.

At 3 o'clock Monday morning train 63, fast freight on the Burlington, going west, ran into a washout, near Liberty, Neb. The engine and three cars were wrecked. Two trainmen were killed and several injured.

Engineer Brennan was crushed between the engine and tender. Conductor Wilcox, who was in the engine cab at the time of the wreck, was badly mangled, one leg being torn from his body and the other badly crushed. He expired in a few minutes after being extricated from the wreck.

The fireman was thrown from the cab window and escaped uninjured, with the exception of slight bruises, as at the time of the wreck the train was running very slowly, having orders to do so on account of the heavy rainfall. Engineer Brennan's home was at Scottsville, Pa.

The bridge was a short one and one that had recently been filled—that is, earth had been dumped in and the open space beneath the bridge filled up. It is supposed that the recent rains washed out a part or all of this filling and that when the earth gave way a portion of the bridge went with it.

"Gus" Glidden of Raleigh, Rush County, died recently, aged 54 years, of a peculiar malady. Six months ago he became ill when he weighed 217 pounds. He gradually lost flesh until he weighed but 75 pounds when he died. He had a wide reputation as a horse-trainer, having tutored more than forty head and won much honor on the turf. He was a soldier in the late war and was buried under the auspices of the G. A. R. post at Raleigh.

For some time city bacteriologist Drayer of Fort Wayne, found traces of tuberculosis in many samples of milk taken from the dairy wagons. After culturing the germs he inoculated several rabbits. In three days the animals died of pulmonary consumption. Members of the State Board of Health went to Fort Wayne and examined the cattle on many of the farms and found five head afflicted with disease and ordered them shot. They will pursue their investigation until they have visited every dairy farm about the city.

In the United States Supreme Court an opinion was rendered in the case of F. A. Coffin, accused of wrecking the Indianapolis National Bank, affirming the decision of the court below and confirming the sentence of imprisonment. Coffin was charged with conspiracy with Theodore P. Haughey, President of the Indianapolis National Bank, to wreck that institution, and was sentenced to eight years in the penitentiary by the United States District Court for the District of Indiana. The case, with that of Percival B. Coffin and others, had been heretofore before the Supreme Court, which reversed the finding of the District Court, and ordered a new trial. This new trial resulted in a second conviction. The present effort was directed at securing a second reversal on numerous assignments of error. Justice White delivered the opinion of the court.

Further reports of the enumeration of school children under the new law show a falling off of 20 per cent in Marion County, as compared with the statements last year, when the total reported aggregated 51,000. In Indianapolis it is 8 000 short and the suburban towns and townships show a heavy decrease. In Fort Wayne the falling off is nearly 40 per cent and at Albany, Lafayette, Crawfordsville and other points there is a decrease which it is believed will average 10 per cent. Counting the State at large, the entire decrease will be nearly, if not quite, 75,000 children, all due to the care with which the present enumeration is being taken under the new law. The State school money is apportioned on a per capita basis, and the larger a school enumeration the more money apportioned to each individual community. The old law did not require certificate of accuracy from each family and too frequently estimates were made instead of actual enumeration.

He has petitioned the County Commissioners for the rebate, claiming that the property on which taxes had not been paid is located in Evansville and that he thought the taxes had been paid.

NO FIGHT IN INDIANA.

HARRISON'S STATE INSTRUCTS FOR M'KINLEY.

Instructions Are Carried Through by a Viva Voce Vote—Free Coinage of Silver Vigorously Opposed—James A. Mount Named for Governor.

Hoosier Republicans.

Indiana Republicans nominated a complete State ticket and elected delegates to the national convention at St. Louis, who are instructed to vote for McKinley. James A. Mount is the nominee for Governor and R. W. Thompson heads the delegation to St. Louis.

R. W. THOMPSON.

The convention instructed its delegates for McKinley with scarcely a show of opposition and the long impending battle with alleged Harrison forces ended in commonplace peace. The platform embodying the instructions was adopted by a viva voce vote and without division, the chairman's decision that the motion to adopt had carried being received without a challenge. Gen. Harrison did not make his eagerly expected speech to the delegates and did not visit the convention at all. The platform declares for "sound money," favors the use of both gold and silver at a parity, urges bimetallism on an international basis, and condemns the free and unlimited coinage of silver at a ratio of 16 to 1.

It was 10:15 o'clock when the State chairman, J. K. Gowdy, began calling the convention to order in Tomlinson hall, and it was fifteen minutes later when he announced the hardly self-evident fact that the gathering had been called to order. After the invocation by Rev. D. R. Lucas of Indianapolis, the report of the Committee on Rules and Permanent Organization was read. Ex-Secretary of the Navy Richard W. Thompson was reported for permanent chairman, with a rousing cheer, and G. R. Stormont was named for secretary. The report was unanimously adopted.

TOMLINSON HALL.

When white-haired "Uncle Dick" Thompson assumed the gavel he was greeted with a rousing reception. Despite his 88 years, the ex-Secretary delivered a stirring speech, which disposed of the Democratic party to the entire satisfaction of the crowd, and vigorously predicted a sweeping victory for Republican principles in the coming election.

At the conclusion of Col. Thompson's speech there were loud cries of "Harrison," but the ex-President did not appear, and the report of the Committee on Credentials was submitted and accepted without contest. Then came the reading of the platform and resolutions.

MICHIGAN REPUBLICANS.

Indorse McKinley for President—Animated Fight Over Money.

An animated fight over the money question was the most striking feature of the Michigan Republican convention at Detroit. It resulted in squelching both the gold plank offered by the majority and the silver plank submitted by the minority of the resolutions committee, and the substitution therefor of the money plank of the Minneapolis platform of 1892. McKinley was indorsed most unequivocally and the delegates were strongly instructed in his favor. Four delegates-at-large were elected, two of them without contests. The financial plank was as follows:

We are unyielding and uncompromising in our demands for sound and honest money. We are in favor of the use of gold and silver and paper dollars in our currency, all to be maintained at a parity as to their purchasing and debt-paying power. We are opposed to any provision that will invite depreciation of any portion of our currency, and, therefore, we are opposed to the free and unlimited coinage of silver by this country alone under present conditions, and we believe that such a course would destroy the parity of and contract the currency.

SUN'S TOTAL ECLIPSE.

A Party of 200 Americans to View It from Bodo.

The great event of the year 1896 is the total eclipse of the sun, visible only in the extreme portion of Japan, Amoor river, Siberia, Nova Zembla and the northern part of Norway, within the Arctic circle. It is estimated that there will be many expeditions from various points in Europe, England, Germany and France.

On June 27 a party of 200 Americans will leave Philadelphia to view the eclipse at Bodo, on the morning of Aug. 8. It will also be possible to get a glimpse of the midnight sun, which is seen at the North Cape above the horizon at midnight, and a few days later a morning midnight. The expedition will be accompanied by many astronomers and students of astronomy.

CHAPTER XV.

Upon inquiry, Frank found that the news which Lady Seafield had given him was correct. He was indeed believed to be dead. His presence in London was looked upon as a strange resurrection.

It was a poor position at best to be in a large and splendid home with nothing but the memory of his dead father for company. It would have been better, he sometimes thought, if he had died upon the field of battle.

At last, however, an invitation came to him from the Countess of Seafield, and in a fit of desperation, tired to death of his monotonous existence, he accepted.

When the countess sent that invitation she knew perfectly well what she was doing. She had arranged this party as a means of allowing the cousins to meet.

"They will be sure to do so sooner or later," she said to herself, "and it is better that they should meet at my house than that of a stranger. I can take care of the duke while dear Constance puts things right with her cousin."

Meanwhile the Duke d'Azzeglio was by no means as contented as this strange change of circumstances should have made him. He was angry when he believed his rival to be dead; he was still more angry when he found that he was living. The duchess threw off her mourning, dried her tears, and seemed willing to accompany her husband anywhere and everywhere, but the duke noticed that even while she stood in the most crowded of rooms, with an admiring group about her, her eyes were wandering restlessly around as if searching for a face she could not find. He knew for whom she sought, and his soul grew bitter with jealousy and anger, and he watched her keenly.

At length came the invitation from Lady Seafield. A few days after it had been accepted the countess called upon her friend. She found Constance taking tea in her boudoir.

"So glad you are coming to my little gathering, dear," she said. "Do you know I feel very proud that I have induced our young hero to emerge from his obscurity, and show himself to his friends?"

"Whom do you mean?" asked Constance, already feeling a vague fear gathering about her heart.

"Whom should I mean?" returned the countess gayly, "but our hero of heroes, your handsome cousin? We must not allow him to lead the life of a hermit, for the young Earl of Harrington is a very important member of society; he doesn't know how many young ladies are waiting for the chance of becoming his countess."

The little lady spoke according to her own light, wisely. It would be quite necessary, she thought, for Constance to accustom herself to the thought of her cousin's marriage, and Constance listened in a wild dream, feeling her heart lacerated by every cruel word. When Lady Seafield was gone and she found herself alone, she clasped her hands and, falling upon her knees, cried out in pain:

"Oh, kind heaven, lead me not into temptation!"

Probably she had never in her life looked so lovely as upon the evening of the reception; when she entered the countess' drawing room, looking like a beautiful statue, there was a genuine murmur of admiration. The duke heard it and smiled. He was proud of his duchess. But Constance was as cold as ice; and her heart seemed to have ceased its beating.

Suddenly she started, and every drop of blood seemed to flow back upon her heart, as her eyes, which had been wandering restlessly about the room, became fixed upon her cousin's face. Yes, there stood Frank, looking like a young Adonis in his elegant evening dress. His face was very pale, a broad black ribbon still supported his arm. At the first sight of him she started, and eagerly gripped her husband's arm, and then—but was she dreaming, or was it real? Was this indeed Frank, her lover, in whose arms she had lain so contentedly while his kisses had rained upon her lips?—whose image filled her heart, whose whole being was dearer to her than her very life; was this indeed he—this pale young man—who bent over her hand and called her "duchess," as the veriest stranger would have done?

What happened after that she did not know—her senses must have become clouded for a moment, for when her brain cleared again she was away from all the confusion of the crowd, sitting in the conservatory by the open window, her husband by her side. The duke's face was very grim.

"Are you better?" he asked coldly. She could not answer him; at length, unable to conquer her emotion, she burst into hysterical tears.

The duke fetched her some wine, she drank it, and gradually grew more composed; to return to the crowded room, however, was impossible, her face bore too evident traces of tears, so the duke proposed that she should return home.

During the drive not a word was spoken, but when they reached the house Constance gained her room, locked the door, and threw herself upon a couch, sobbing like a heart-broken child. She was an impulsive woman now, not a statue, her very blood was on fire.

"I will not endure it," she cried passionately. "They both deceived me—my grandmother first, then he—whom the world calls my husband. I have been cheated, betrayed, trapped into a life of misery, and he, my darling, thinks, as all the world thinks, that I did it of my own free will. When he looked at me to-night I thought I should have died at his feet. I must see him again—I must tell him the truth, then perhaps my miserable life will be a little less hard to bear."

She went to her writing table and wrote: "I must see you at once; I intended to speak to you to-night, but could not. I cannot ask you here; I dare not, neither can I with safety come to your house. I want to see you alone—quite alone. Will you therefore meet me to-morrow night at the south gate of the park at 10 o'clock?

"CONSTANCE."

She then addressed an envelope to the Earl of Harrington, and blotted both with a clean sheet of blotting paper. When she had finished and sealed her letter, Feveral came with his message from the duke.

"Madam," he said, "I was told to inquire during the evening for your grace's health."

"Thanks; say that I am better."

And she said no more. Feveral had been gazing intently at her table.

"Which means," muttered Feveral to himself as he bowed and took his leave, "that you have written a letter. Good; but another time be careful of your blotting paper; do not leave it so near a mirror, or your secrets may be read by others."

He passed out of the hall door and concealed himself in the shadow of the house.

In a very short time the door opened and Constance, cloaked and hooded, came forth.

Feveral followed her. Presently she came to a pillar box, slipped in her letter, then hastened back to the house.

"Bravo, Feveral," he ruminated, "the game is in your hands; you can crush this proud duke, humiliate him, and yet you pause. Why? because his wife is beautiful, forsooth—and because you know your plan of vengeance will victimize her. Pshaw, Feveral, you are a fool. Was she not warned, and yet she married the duke? Well, he shall know now that his wife, the duchess, is no more immaculate than other women; he shall learn what a man feels when his honor is betrayed."

CHAPTER XVI.

The next day was a weary one for Constance; it seemed to her that night would never come. At 9 o'clock Constance asked her maid if the duke was at home. The girl answered in the negative.

"You can leave me," said Constance, "and do not disturb me again to-night."

She looked at the great bronze clock which stood upon her chimney piece. It was near the hour she had named, yet she was still in her room, trembling like a criminal waiting to hear her doom. Well, there was no further time to be lost; she must either go or stay, and she resolved to go. She hurriedly fastened on her bonnet and cloak, and descended the stairs.

Once outside, she sped along with the swiftness of a hunted hare. At length she reached the trysting place. Suddenly her heart gave a great leap, for her eyes fell on her cousin. A moment after their eyes met. He came forward with but little eagerness, but Constance seized his hand and burst into tears.

At last they had met, and the hours seemed minutes. It grew late, the crowds in the streets were getting smaller and smaller, but Constance and Frank still sat side by side on a seat in the park. They were silent, all had been said that could be said, all doubt and suspicion had been uprooted from his heart; and now for one little hour they put the present from their minds and had over again those happy hours of their early love.

"It is very late," she said. "O Frank, I must go home."

"Constance," he cried, "for heaven's sake, don't tell me you are going back to that man!"

"You forget, Frank, that man is my husband."

"Your husband!" he cried scornfully, "a man who has tricked and deceived you; who cares for you no more than he does for the hound which follows him—you will go back to him, Constance?"

"Why not, Frank?—I have married him."

"An oath extracted by a lie is not binding," said Frank. "Come, listen to me; you will leave this man's house. Go back to Avondale Castle; then at least we can be cousins, if nothing more."

As he spoke a form stood between him and his cousin. It was the Duke d'Azzeglio.

"Pardon me for interrupting you," said the duke with mock politeness, while Frank and his cousin stood dumb, "but as I think it is rather late for my duchess to be abroad I will have the pleasure of conducting her home."

The whole affair had taken place so suddenly that the figures of husband and wife had faded into the darkness before Frank had fully recovered from the surprise caused by the sudden appearance of the duke.

But early the next morning he received a letter from his cousin.

"My Dear Frank," she wrote:—"I am sending this to implore you to leave England for my sake, if not for your own. Your presence in London is fraught with much danger to us both. Try to forget me, and if you cannot, remember always that my husband stands between us. He was warned of my meeting with you last night, and followed me.

"CONSTANCE."

Meanwhile, what had taken place between the duke and his wife?

No one knew. At midnight Feveral had seen them enter the duchess' boudoir. About half an hour later the duke came forth looking cruelly angry, but no one saw the duchess that night. The next day, however, Feveral met her. He bowed low; she did not respond, but drew herself up and passed him by, as if there was contamination in his very touch.

A few days later Alice Greybrook, in answer to the piteous appeal of her friend, came to pay a long visit to Constance.

For several weeks after this the duke and duchess were seldom seen together. The duke was a busy man, and had little time to devote to society, but on every festive occasion of any note he sent his duchess to represent him. She went, accompanied always by Alice Greybrook, and often the two were escorted by Feveral. Constance did not refuse the secretary's escort since it had been commanded by the duke, but she never addressed him. Suddenly, urgent business called the duke to Madrid. He went alone, leaving Constance in London.

CHAPTER XVII.

At the end of a fortnight the duke was again in London. The first thing he did, after coldly greeting his wife, was to go to his room and send for Feveral.

"The journals are full this morning, I see, of the state ball which was given last night. You were present, I believe?" he asked.

"Yes. It was truly magnificent."

"Indeed!" replied the duke, grimly, "but I heard of some scandalous scene."

"Oh, a mere trifle. Some roughs picked a quarrel with the soldiers; then some drew knives."

"Nothing more?" said the duke, significantly.

"Let me see. Ah, yes, your studious nephew, Count Palmatos, was one of the first to arrive."

"Never mind my nephew," interrupted the duke, shortly; "speak of my duchess."

"I saw her for a moment, afterward she disappeared."

"And you did not see her again?" said the duke eagerly, "you did not remain near her? You do not know to what individuals she was presented?"

"Frankly," returned Feveral, in the same indifferent tone, "I do not."

"Mr. Feveral," said the duke sternly, "let us understand each other. You are my secretary, my servant, employed by me at your own particular request to serve me in any way I wish; at the very moment when I most depend upon you, when I look for services more domestic in their nature and more affecting my happiness, your ardor cools, your devotion vanishes. Hereafter you must keep a closer watch upon the duchess, or leave my employ. Decide!"

"My lord," answered Feveral, "I must have an hour to reflect."

As the door closed upon him, the duke smiled.

"He is mine," he said; "when such a rascal demands time for reflection he is as good as bought."

He paused; the room door opened and admitted Count Palmatos, the duke's nephew. He was a youth of sixteen, with black hair, a brown skin, and dreamy eyes.

"Well," said the duke, with a smile, "how are you enjoying your visit, my dear boy? Did you go to the state ball last night?"

"I did, my lord."

"You saw the duchess, of course?"

"Saw her? O yes, of course, just for a moment. I assisted her to her carriage. There were present two others, Mr. Feveral, your secretary, and——"

"Yes," said the duke, quickly, "the other?"

"The other is a gentleman whose name I do not know—a charming person, who saved my life."

"Indeed!"

"Yes. There was a scuffle outside the palace. Some ruffian drew a knife, which was at my throat when my preserver interposed and received the thrust in his breast."

"He was wounded, you say?"

"A flesh wound, which will heal, with care, in a few days."

"May I ask—did the gentleman accost the duchess?"

"Not in my presence."

The youth looked at the duke in a puzzled sort of way. Then he left the room, wondering what all this mystery could mean.

Meanwhile Feveral was sitting in his room thinking deeply over the interview which he had had with the duke, and wondering what course it would be best for him to pursue.

"Feveral," he said to himself, "what is coming to you? A few weeks ago you betrayed the duchess simply for the pleasure of humiliating the duke, and now because you are asked to repeat the performance you hesitate. Why should you hesitate? Your task in life is set; why should you refuse to accomplish it? If I were once to leave this roof I should never reap my revenge. I will not leave it—I will do as the duke wishes me. I will become his spy."

JAPAN'S GREAT CATHEDRAL.

One of the Finest Structures to Be Found in the Civilized World.

When foreign architects visit Japan and see the cathedral of Buddhism for the first time they are generally astonished at the magnificent structure. It is executed in pure Oriental style, and is richly ornamented with carvings. H. Ito, a famous builder of Nagoya City, designed it. The structure was commenced in 1878, and was completed this year. The cost has been estimated at $17,000,000. It would have greatly exceeded this amount had not numbers of Buddhists worked without any recompense. As the structure neared completion the committee having the work in charge was much perplexed as to fire insurance. They found that no company would assume the risk on such a valuable wooden structure, the danger of destruction by fire being very great, and thus the premiums would amount to an enormous sum of money. At last the committee decided on a design devised by Dr. Tanabe. Numbers of powerful fountains were constructed, both exterior and interior, which can be made to play on all parts of the structure at the same time. Usually only one great ornamental fountain is playing, rising to the great height of 157 feet. This is probably the largest artificial fountain in existence, emitting 82,000 gallons per hour. In case of fire all the water pressure is directed through fountains. Thus every part of the structure, both inside and out, could soon be drenched, and any conflagration soon extinguished.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Religion of Presidents.

The religious convictions and church affiliations of our Presidents have often excited the curiosity and interest, not only of church members, but of serious people generally. Washington was a communicant in the Episcopal Church; Jefferson, though accused of being an atheist, alludes in his writings to his belief in a supreme being. Jefferson, however, never connected himself with any denomination, and not very often attended any place of worship. John Adams was a Unitarian, Madison and Monroe were Episcopalians; John Quincy Adams was a Unitarian; Jackson joined the Presbyterian Church after the death of his wife; Van Buren attended the Dutch Reformed Church, but was not a member. W. H. Harrison was an Episcopalian, so also was Tyler; Polk was not a church member, but on his death bed was baptized by a Methodist clergyman; Taylor was a regular attendant at the Episcopal Church; Fillmore was a Unitarian; Pierce, a Congregationalist; Buchanan belonged to the Presbyterian Church. President Lincoln belonged to no denomination, though before his election, and frequently afterward, he attended the Presbyterian Church. Johnson attended the same church as Lincoln. Gen. Grant was a tolerably regular attendant on the services of the Methodist Church, though not a member of any. Hayes was a Methodist communicant. Garfield attended the Church of the Disciples, sometimes also called the "Christian," or "Campbellite," of which he had once been a preacher. Arthur was an Episcopalian; Harrison is a Presbyterian elder, and Mr. Cleveland attends the Presbyterian Church.

The longest artificial water course in the world is the Bengal Canal, nine hundred miles; the next is Erie, 363. Each cost nearly $10,000,000.

Germany has 30,000 breweries, Great Britain 18,000. The United States shows only 5,000 of these factories of delight.

TOWN RUN BY WOMEN.

GAYLORD, KAN., enjoys the unique distinction of being the only municipality in the United States whose government is composed entirely of women. It has a lady mayor and women officials and the city offices are conducted with honesty, ability, integrity and economy. There is no hint at corruption or jobbery. The streets are clean, crime is virtually unknown and not a single dollar of indebtedness lies upon the place.

Antoinette L. Haskell, mayor of the town, has held office for a year and has given the best of satisfaction in her administration. Her appointments have been wise and her knowledge of city affairs such as would reflect credit on any man. Mrs. Haskell's husband is a prosperous banker and she is the mother of two sons, 17 and 11 years old. The city clerk, Miss Florence Headley, is a native of Kansas, and is the editor of the Gaylord Herald, where she first became connected with the paper as a compositor. She is 20 years of age and is serving her second year as city clerk. Mrs. Mary L. Foote, police judge-elect, is a native of Illinois, and has resided in Kansas seven years. An odd feature of her election was that her husband was her opponent, but she defeated him by a large majority. The members of the council consist of Mrs. Mary A. White, a native of Franklin, Ohio; Mrs. Nancy Wright, born in Scottsville, Iowa; Mrs. Emma A. Mitchell, a native of Indianapolis; Mrs. Esther Johnston, a native of Ontario; and Mrs. Loella Abercrombie. They have given every manifestation of their ability to run the business of the city government and no one can question their motives.

Chosen Queen of the Fiesta.

The annual floral festival at Santa Rosa, Cal., was preceded this year by a warm contest as to who should be chosen queen of carnival. When the contest was first announced half a score names of popular women in the city named and vicinity were entered, but before the voting was begun it became evident that only three were "in it." These were Miss Knoppenburg, Miss Hall and Mrs. L. W. Burris, who ran about neck and neck until the final day for the reception of ballots. On that day it suddenly developed that the friends of Mrs. Burris had been holding by far the greater portion of their strength in reserve. Ballots by the hundred in her favor poured in all day, and long before noon it was clear that she was the winner. The rush of Burris ballots was greatest in the last half hour, when hardly any others were to be seen. The count of votes showed her to be first and the others nowhere, the figures being: Mrs. Burris, 11,109; Miss Hall, 1,956, and Miss Knoppenburg, 1,100.

Value of the Trellis Pattern.

The trellis pattern can be carried out in numerous ways and serves for a variety of purposes in dress and millinery. It also answers equally well as a velling for bright colored satin bags, sachets and pincushions. A combination of tinsel thread and jet would set it off admirably.

EMBROIDERED ON NET.

Fashion in Calling-Cards.

The Roman or block letter is becoming more popular as the style of engraving for visiting-card plates, while the fashionably thin card of two-sheet quality is eminently proper. Cards for both men and women are considerably smaller, and the script engraving is finer in consequence, following more closely the English style than the Parisian, which is large and with flourishes. The block or Roman letter plate is very English, and with those affecting London styles it finds great favor. The price more than doubles that of script engraving. Ladies use the block style now on their cards for teas and receptions, as it admits of the necessary engraving of days within a smaller space than the script, and enables a smaller card being used.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Sleeves Copied from Paintings.

The sleeve continues to be the all-important factor of the gown. Frills on frills, Vandyke caps and epaulets are rampant about the very top of the arm, with a decided tendency toward extra tightness of the sleeve above as well as below the elbow. Often a parting is made in the center of the puff, revealing the close coat sleeve from the shoulder down. The newest sleeves, it is officially asserted, have been copied from the oldest pictures, though the "old masters," could they behold them, would hardly recognize some of the modern versions.

When the Hair Grows Thin.

Here is a recipe for a promade to check the falling out of hair: Five parts of tincture of japorandi, three parts of lanoline, twenty parts of glycerin; mixed with the help of a little soft soap; the scalp to be rubbed every night with a little of this pomade on the end of your finger. Another simple lotion is composed of a teaspoonful of salt and one scruple of quinine, added to a pint of brandy; shake the mixture well and apply every night for a few weeks. Ammonia takes the color out of the hair. Therefore if you use it in your bath take care not to wet the hair. For cleaning hair brushes, however, ammonia is invaluable—far better than soda or soap. A teaspoonful to a quart of warm water will be sufficient; dip the bristles into this, but not the handles of the brushes. Dry the brushes in the open air, but not in the sun.

Bows at the Elbows.

Miss Pemberton, of Warrensburg, Mo., has been requested to be a candidate for the office of County Recorder, an office she filled satisfactorily upon the death of her father, who died shortly after election to the position.

QUEERLY NAMED.

Some of Our Puritan Ancestors Had Remarkable Baptismal Titles.

The quaintness of the Puritan names of piety—not Bible names, but words or phrases of religious import—has long been recognized. In the days of Cromwell, contemporary jokes were rife among the "Malignants," in which such worthy Roundheads as "Fight-the-good-fight-of-faith Jones," "Help-from-on-High Robbins," and "Faint-not-Pilsbery," figured prominently, and were treated with scant respect. The names themselves were not burlesqued. They were so queer it would have been difficult to do so.

The longest and strangest of the combinations in use in Old England did not, fortunately, ever become popular in New England. Nevertheless the American colonies had their share. Our own Dr. Holmes has recognized this in his ballad of Puritan times, beginning with the father's invitation to his little son:

"Come hither, God-be-Glorified, and sit upon my knee."

And it was in a much later period than the colonial that a worthy person flourished, commonly known as Tribby Clap, but whose whole name was Through-much-tribulation-we-enter-the-kingdom-of-Heaven Clap. The brief surname follows its lengthy prefix as surprisingly as a clap of thunder.

But, apart from the rarer and longer combination names, any one reading much among old town records, or expert in antiquarian lore, is sure to come across names odd enough to make him pause to wonder whether the ancestors who bestowed them were so singularly sober-minded as to be without the sense of humor, or so excessively humorous as to name their children in jest.

Some of the names read remarkably like puns. For instance, one of a group of her ancestors to whom Mrs. Alice Morse Earle dedicates a recent book on "Colonial Dames and Goodwives" is Mistress Silence Heard. One wonders whether Goodman and Goodwife Heard noticed the effect of this conjunction when they named their baby, or did they do it on purpose?

Here are a few other names of the same kind, all duly recorded among the births and deaths, wills and land transfers of a few little New England towns: "Wait Long," "Temperance Waters," "Righteous Hope," "Lovey Sweet," "Submit Willing," and "Thankful Hart."

"Expect Little" of one village list offsets "Hope Much" of another. "Lively Smart" should certainly have been a forward child, but he died in infancy. One poor little girl, at least, we may be sure was named in ignorance by her parents, who were peaceable and respected people, though it is hard to imagine how they could have failed to perceive the bloodthirsty significance of her Christian name when united with her surname. She was christened "Desire Gore!"

Notwithstanding her forbidding appellation, a young man was found bold enough to ask her to change it, and she has to-day numerous descendants whose desires are not gory, but it is quite true that none of them is named for her great-great-grandmother.

Bred in Captivity.

The greater number of the lions exhibited to the English public have been born and readed in travelling menageries or caravans. When very young the cubs are taken from the lioness and given to a collie, Newfoundland, or other canine foster-mother. As a rule, a woman looks after both nurse and cubs, the task usually falling to the lot of the mistress of the caravan. When born the lions are like young cats. The little family is usually accommodated in a corner of the caravan, or in the trainer's private apartment. In their infancy the young lions are treated just like kittens. When they are able to walk they have the run of the place, play about, and seem to look for and enjoy the tit-bits and caresses that are bestowed upon them. They recognize for a long time the authority, so to speak, of the foster-mother, and are obedient to her wishes, even after they have considerably outgrown her in size.

Discouraged Linguist.

A young European, attached to one of the foreign legations at Washington, has lately withdrawn from society, according to the Star, not because he has wearied of social pleasures, but because in trying to speak English he finds himself, to use his own expression, "putting in ze foot."

Talking with one of his new American friends about the matter, he said:

"I talk to se ladees and smile and be agreeable, and all at once zey grow quiet and look at me so var' queer. I exclaim, 'What haf I done?' and se ladees zey make answer, 'It is not what you haf done, monsieur, but what you haf said.' And zen I feel so decayed, oh, so decayed."

"'Decayed?'" said his friend. "You don't mean that. Oh, I see, you mean to say you are mortified."

The attache was cast down anew, and could only say:

"Haf I not told you I spik bad all ze time?"

He Had a Good Excuse.

A clergyman was on a Western trip for his health, and happened one Sunday to stop at a little Colorado inn, the keeper of which was also the superintendent of the local Sunday school. The superintendent was proud of his scholars, and persuaded his guest to attend that afternoon's session, and to put the pupils through a little examination. The lateer did as desired, and wound up with a short discourse on profane swearing.

"I hope," he added, "that none of you ever indulge in that wicked practice. I am sure," he continued, turning to the head boy, a sparkling urchin of ten, "that you never do it. Do you, my little man?"

"No—o, sir, I don't. The other day I did call Bill Smith a cussed fool. But he is, you know."

Indestructible Fire.

Paper indestructible by fire has been invented in Paris. A specimen of it was subjected to a severe test—148 hours in a potter's furnace—and came out with its glaze almost perfect.

When an industrious man makes a dollar by hard work, the loafer starts the story that he made at least ten dollars, and stole half of it.

A Musical Education FOR A DOLLAR.

The above heading will of course appear to most people as the height of absurdity, yet the absurdity is mose apparent than real. It goes without saying that a finished musical education in the regular course cannot be had for a dollar, or even with several hundred additional dollars, but can it be truthfully said that the person with a sufficient knowledge of music to play accompaniments readily on the piano or organ, to all the populor and standard songs of the day has no musical education? Assuredly not. A musical education sufficient to enable one to play correctly accompaniments to the song sung in the home frequently gets, and gives more pleasure from the modest accomplishment than does many on whose education hundreds of dollars have been expended.

To the more modest musical education the above heading applies. Such an education the DAILY COURIER is now enabled to offer its music loving readers for a dollar, believing that it is the greatest benefit it can give to its subscribers.

This ready made musical education consists of Pratt's Chart of Chords for the Piano and Organ, which is the nearest approach to a ready made knowledge of music yet attained by science.

It is a short cut to harmony, and is to music, what the multiplication table is to arithmetic, A quick method of learning to play the Piano or Organ without a teacher.

With this chart anyone can with but a small amount of practice become an expert pianist. It is a complete self instructor, enabling anyone to play the piano or organ at sight and to play without difficulty brilliant accompaniments to any song ever written. It is valuable to the well advanced masician, as well as the beginner, embracing nearly every major and minor chord used in music, and is endorsed by teachers and musicians everywhere.

This chart is the practical result of years of study by Charles E. Pratt the noted American composer and musican, who so compoitions have world-wide popularity and a larger sale than those of any other American comsoser.

Believing that the educational value of this Chart cannot be over-estimated the DAILY COURIER has arranged with the publishers to supply Pratt's Chart of Cards to our rearders at $1.00 each, and in addition to the Chart of Cards, the publishers have kindly agreed to send without extra charge a copy of the Giant Album of Songs containing 184 Songs with words and melody. Many of these songs are old time favorites long out of print, that can be obtained in no other way.

Every home that has a piano or organ, especially where there are children should have Pratt's Chart of Chords.

This offer is made for a short time only and DAILY COURIER readers should avail themselves of it without delay. Address,

PERSONAL

WATERLOO.

George Huber has bought a gristmill in Rawson, Michigan, and will leave Waterloo for his new home, the latter part of this week. Mr. and Mrs. Huber have many friends here, who regret their leaving. Mrs. Huber will be especially missed in the M. E. church, of which she is a member, and an active, ever ready worker. Both also are members of several orders, and societies.

W. Lease has not fully decided whether his building can be repaired or not. If not it will be taken down, and a brick erected in its place.

At the regular meeting for election of officers, May the fifth, at the home of Miss Blair, the Minerva Club, elected Mrs. Olive Jackman, pres.; Emma Keep, vice-pres.; Olive Showalter, secy.; Ella Boozer.; treas.; Mary Boozer, critic. The class will read Shakespeare untll the end of June.

Mrs. Juliette Dickson will leave for Angola the latter part of this week to remain for a time with his daughter, Mrs. Ettinger, who will keep house. Mrs. Ettinger left last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Kennedy are making arrangements, to spend part or all of the summer at Kent, Ohio, visiting their son, Dr. George Kennedy, who is expected here shortly. The plan is to take a cottage on the border of some one of the many lakes that abound in that vicinity.

Mrs. George Huber and Mrs. Dr. Porter went Monday to spend a few days with friends at Orland, and Mongo.

The W. C. T. U. held their last meeting, Tuesday, at the home of Mrs. Erlougher.

The army worms are doing great damage to the orchards in the vicinity. These pests eat not only the leaves of apple trees, but of other fruit trees as well. They even eat the foilage from the fruit trees.

There is considerable building going on here this spring. Besides the entire burnt block which is all to be rebuilt. Editor Willis will put up a new printing office and business room on the site of the old gristmill. John Shuman talks of putting up a building east of the old mill site, on the Dertick property, for a business room and offices. Then the unoccupied lots on Maple street west of Dr. Chamberlain's, are all to be occupied soon by new residences. Next west of Chamberlain's, is to be O. C. Dickinson's, next west is to be Clyde Reed's next west will be Mart Miser's, and the remaining dwelling will be that of John C. Beidler. All these men are employed by the railroad company. Maple street and Railroad street ought to swap names.

BUTLER.

The M. E. friends held communion last Sabbath. Rev. Disbro was assisted by Rev. Davis, from Wolcottville. The Presiding Elder being unable to attend any part of the service.

Mrs. Matilda Freeborn a former well known resident of Butler, died at the home of her daughter Mrs. Lewis Burgets at Kalamazoo, Mich., last Saturday morning. Her obituary will appear elsewhere.

J. A. Campbell's little daughter Florence, nine years old has a new wheel and is riding with ease and rapidity.

About a dozen of Butler wheelmen visited Bryan and Ringling Brothers' show last Thursday.

One of the over-confident republican candidates for trustee slept at his post and was defeated by his wide-awake democratic competitor by a majority of a single vote. But a miss is as good as a mile.

Thomas Revet has been stricken by something akin to paralysis. He is confined to his bed unable to assist himself but to a very limited degree.

DIED:—At the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Lewis Burget, at Kalamazoo, Mich., May 8, 1896, in the seventy-sixth year of her age Matilda relict of John E. Freeborn.

Matilda Cooper was born in the city of Philadelphia, Pa., July 13, 1820, where she grew to womanhood. On the tenth day of Aubust 1842, at Pottsville Pa., she was united in marriage to John E. Freeborn who departed this life Aug. 3, 1889. To this union were born seven children, four sons and two daughters surviving. In 1854, she removed with her husband and family to Crawford, Co. Ohio, where they resided until 1867, when they removed to DeKalb Co. Ind., settling on the Headley-Rex, farm four miles southeast of Butler, remaining there about five years, then removing to Butler, where Mr. Freeborn died. Since then she has lived with her daughter, at Kalamazoo. She became a member of the U. B. church in early life and ever remained a faithful and consistent christian. Her funeral took place from the U. B. church at Butler, Rev. Smith officiating. Her remains were laid to rest in the cemetery east of Butler.

Took a Tumble.

No slang is intended. We simply state a fact. Cory Baxter is a handy young fellow to help in almost any kind of work. But he sometimes gets hold of too big a job. Yesterday he was helping put things to rights at Dr. Buchtel's and went to get some screens etc., down from a shelf full of such articles. The stack of them took a tumble and struck him square on the head bore him to the floor and hid him from view. And his first question when dug out was "Am I dead?" He is all right now.

SUMMER MORMAL.

The Auburn Summer Normal will open Monday, June 1, in the New High School Building and continue six weeks. Besides the usual course adapted to those preparing to teach or those wishing to pursue the common branches or higher studies, there will be a business course including penmanship, bookkeeping, short hand, typewriting, commercial law, letter writing etc., under the able instruction of Prof. J. N. Woolfington,

I purchased a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin of Armstrong & Swank and as soon as I had taken its contents I was like a new person, and I now feel better and weigh more than I have for years." Pots and Plants in Harmony.

The decorated stone pots so largely in use in drawing-rooms for growing plants need to be selected with care. They should not only be adapted in coloring to the plants they are to hold, but there should be a harmony in the jars themselves, as no matter how beautiful each individual one may be if there is incongruity in the coloring the whole effect will be unpleasing. Even an uneducated eye would detect the inharmonious effect without being able to discover the cause.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Something to Be Avoided.

Don't find fault; that is, in the flaw-picking, grumbling way. It not only makes you look and seem and feel disagreeable at the time, but it permanently mars your beauty. About the mouth there is certain to come a cluster of lines to tell the world at large of the peevishness of its owner. It makes the eyes smaller, because they contract at the time, and the lips grow extremely sensitive from continual biting.

—Tom Platt, the leading repulican boss in New York state says he hopes for the success of his party this fall, adding. "We must work until the smoke from the funnels of our merchant steamers drifts down the winds that blow on every sea." It takes the regular Platt gall to say this, when he knows that it has been the fault of his party for the past thirty-five years, that gradually drove our merchant marine from "every sea." This is a fact known to all and denied by none. For all know that we had a splendid merchant marine on every sea when republicans first went into power, and that now we have little or none.

Card of Thanks

The practice of thanking everybody and everything for all sorts of favors, through the columns of the local paper, has about reached the limit. It remained for the Hamilton Advocate to put on the finishing touches. Last week's issue of that paper contained an informal card of thanks from one of the township assessors "to the kind people of this township for their hospitality during his canvass." Now, let the "card of thanks" business die.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

THE BEST

Is SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR—don't forget to take it. The Liver gets sluggish during the Winter, just like all nature, and the system becomes choked up by the accumulated waste, which brings on Malaria, Fever and Ague and Rheumatism. You want to wake up your Liver now, but be sure you take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR to do it. It also regulates the Liver—keeps it properly at work, when your system will be free from poison and the whole body invigorated.

You get THE BEST BLOOD when your system is in A1 condition, and that will only be when the Liver is kept active. Try a Liver Remedy once and note the difference. But take only SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR which makes the difference. Take it in powder or in liquid already prepared, or make a tea of the powder; but take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR. You'll find the RED Z on every package. Look for it.

The COURIER appreciates the friendly feelings that induced Congressman Leighty to send the editor a package of garden seeds. But after all, is it not about time this giving away of garden seeds was stopped? There was a time, when it paid better, because we got a good deal of new varieties, and things that were never cultivated in this country before. But now it is different. We get only the common things, pumkins, beets, radishes, melons, etc, that can be purchased at 5 cents a package at every store. And retail dealers in these things find it hard to compete against a government that gives seeds free, just as printers find it impossible to compete against government that furnishes addressed envelopes for a mere song. It is about time that government goes out of all kinds of retail business.

How it is Done.

Free coinage is not always well understood. It does not mean that the government must purchase the gold or the silver at its market value, or at any value. The government merely takes the metal, gold or silver, finds how many dollars it will make and gives the man who brought in the metal, that many coined dollars. The bullion so purchased, is laid aside till they get ready to coin it into money. The man who brings gold bullion to the mint saves the cost of coining it. The man who brings silver, saves not only the cost of coining it, but he receives from the government $1 of coined money, for 50 cents worth of bullion. It is a fine bargain for him, but it is expensive for the government.

How to Treat a Wife.
(From Pacific Health Journal.)

First, get a wife; second, be patient. You may have great trials and perplexities in your business, but do not therefore, carry to your home a cloudy or contracted brow. Your wife may have trials which, though of less magnitude, may be hard for her to bear. A kind word, a tender look, will do wonders in chasing from her brow all clouds of gloom.—To this we would add always keep a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy in the house. It is the best and is sure to be needed sooner or later. Your wife will then know that you really care for her and wish to protect her health. For sale by Davenport the Druggist. 22

Baron de Hirsch takes his place beside Sir Moses Montefiore as one of the world's worthies.

A Newark, N. J., man wants a divorce because his wife is deaf and dumb. Some men never know a good thing when tney see it.

The New York bloomer restaurant enterprise has proved a failure. It was impossible to scare patrons so badly that they couldn't eat.

The dispatches tell of a Pennsylvania man who committed suicide to oblige his wife. There is such a thing as being too much of a good fellow. No one can afford to do that oftener than once in a lifetime.

Men who see into their neighbors are very apt to be contemptuous; but men who see through them find something lying behind every human soul, which it is not for them to sit in judgment on or attempt to sneer out of the order of God's manifold universe.

If ever the happy time should arrive when we are more interested to discover the excellences of our friends and neighbors than their defects, and more anxious to study their ideals than to insist upon our own, a great impetus will be given to moral progress and to the true and cordial brotherhood of man.

Senator Cullom's idea of flavoring the adhesive material on the back of postage stamps so that it will not be repugnant to the taste may be all very well for the people who derive their meals from that source, but to please the general public, the Senator should see to it that stamps are spread with gum that will stick.

True happiness is of a retired nature, and an enemy to pomp and noise; it arises, in the first place, from the enjoyment of one's self, and in the next, from the friendship and conversation of a few select companions. False happiness loves to be in a crowd, and to draw the eyes of the world upon her. She does not receive any satisfaction from the applause which she gives herself, but from the admiration which she raises in others.

The Turkish authorities recently decided that the Epistle to the Galatians was a seditious document, and arrested the colporteur who was selling it. They took the further precaution of calling for a certificate of the author's death, to assure themselves that such dangerous utterances were not recent. Evidently the spirit of Galatians and the disposition that expresses itself in murdering Armenians do not go well together. Were St. Paul at large in the Turkish dominions, the Sultan would tremble.

Concident with the war upon the big theater hats worn by the fair sex comes a counter demand for the elimination of that curious piece of headgear sported by the men, known as the "plug" hat. Objection is made to this style of covering upon the general grounds of ugliness, lack of comfort and inconvenience, and the points seem to be well taken. This tile, which is constructed on the lines of a tube closed at one end and fitted with a flange at the other, has nothing whatever of artistic or picturesque beauty, and should be relegated to the garret to repose among the cobwebs which festoon the hoopskirts and the bustle of a bygone generation.

Wm. E. Curtis writes from New York to the Chicago Record: "It is a curious fact that many New-Yorkers, the men who keep their noses on the grindstone, and couldn't go to the World's Fair in 1893 because they had to watch their money bags, have never become fully convinced that civilization has crossed the Allegheny mountains, and that the inhabitants of Iowa, Michigan and Illinois have entirely abandoned breech clouts for breeches. And they associate Western ideas with mercantile failures, wildcat mining enterprises and unprofitable railways, forgetting that most of the schemes in which they have lost money were hatched here in New York, and that many of the ablest bank presidents in this city are Western men."

There is an excellent opportunity for some ambitious girl to outshine the numerous American duchesses, countesses and marquiseses now sojourning in foreign parts. King Alexander, of Servia, is very anxious to take to wife some rich and handsome damsel from the United States, and as an inducement he proposes to elevate his prospective bride to the ranks of royalty in order that she may be on social equality with his kingly nibs. Then he will espouse her with splendid ceremonial and use a portion of the bride's "dot" in purchasing a nice new crown. It is true Alex. is coarse and brutal in his manners and altogether one of the most displeasing and odious youths a person could imagine, but that shouldn't stand in the way where a queen's coronet is to be won, to the everlasting envy of the American duchesses, countesses and marquiseses aforesaid.

Thomas Hughes is dead. No good American should be indifferent to the fact, for America never had a better friend than he. Throughout our civil war he battled steadfastly against the hostility to the Union cause, then so strangely prevalent in English society. Visiting this country at a later date, he entered into cordial relations with our men of letters, particularly Lowell. Probably none of his many benevolent enterprises was closer to his heart than the planting of an English settlement at Rugby, in Tennessee, in which his was the moving spirit. In his own country he was respected as a jurist, as a public man, as a student of social questions and of history. But his strongest claim on all English-speaking people is one which young readers will doubtless be very ready to acknowledge. He wrote "Tom Brown at Rugby," and "Tom Brown at Oxford." It is hardly too much to say that in the first of these books he set the pace for all writers of stories for the young who have followed him. Indeed, it may be said that he opened up a new field of healthy and helpful literature for boys and girls. Who that has ever read the book—and what man or boy of us all has not?—will ever forget Tom, or Harry East, or Arthur; or the foot-ball match, or the fight; or the great Dr. Arnold, revered alike by the hero and the author? How to preach and yet not be prosy, how to put real live boys into their books, and not mere abstractions of youthful vice or virtue—this is what Thomas Hughes taught to writers for the young. For this he should have the heartiest gratitude of boys of all ages who speak the English tongue.

A young man who recently made an assignment in Boston, owing $70,000 and without any visible assets, seems to possess all the necessary qualifications for a Napoleon of finance. He induced the leading business houses of Boston to sell him large bills of goods, and, after buying expensive jewelry, hall clocks, cigars, carriages and clothes and filling his house with costly furniture, transferred all this property to his wife, made an assignment and assured his creditors that he "would try to settle with them on a basis of 10 cents on the dollar, if he could get his wife to agree to it." Several misguided gentlemen who have got into trouble by holding up pedestrians and blowing open safes will see from this Boston episode that they have not yet learned the A B C of progressive, up-to-date robbery.

Though Baron Maurice de Hirsch was of distinguished ancestry and the inheritor of great wealth, his memory will be revered for what he was and what he did. The world cannot but admire the genius of a man who had his phenomenal grasp of great affairs, who could seize opportunities before they were conceived by the ordinary mind, and who could go unerringly to the accomplishment of stupendous undertakings in which millons were involved. But it was not this rare power that insures the lasting fame of Baron Hirsch. The true nobility of the man appeared in his intense sympathy for the poor, the unfortunate and the oppressed, which found eloquent expression in the gift of millions for their relief. He was a munificent giver, but without ostentation and without thought less worthy than that of ameliorating the condition of his afflicted race. His philanthropy was on the same magnificent scale as his operations in the business world and the ability that guided the one was only outshone by the unselfish charity that prompted the other. The death of his son may have been the chastening affliction that stirred the heart of the father to deeds of mercy and humanity; but the man who could be so moved possessed all the innate virtues so admired in the career of the dead baron. The man who would give forty millions to one good cause and make two continents the beneficiaries of his bounty, deserved all the prosperity that came to him, and left a lesson that the rich men of the world should take to themselves. There could be no greater worldly happiness than he enjoyed in the consciousness of duty done and the blessings his charity invoked.

SUCCEEDS CECIL RHODES.

Sir J. Gordon Sprigg, Cape Colony's New Premier.

Sir J. Gordon Sprigg, who has succeeded Cecil Rhodes as premier of Cape Colony, is another one of the men who have gone to South Africa possessing neither health nor wealth, and he now enjoys both. Thirty years ago he was a newspaper reporter in London. His physician advised him to emigrate for his health, which had been broken as the result of overwork. When he was carried on board of the vessel which bore him from his native land he little thought that he would be premier of the new country to which he was being conveyed. In fact he has been three times premier, being first chosen in 1878 and serving until 1881, and then again from 1886 to 1890. From 1884 to 1886 and again from 1890 until his reappointment as successor to Sir Cecil Rhodes, Sir Gordon was treasurer of the colony. The circumstances upon which he first gained the post were similar to those upon which he now returns to power. In 1878 Sir Bartle Frere dismissed the Ministry because of his dissatisfaction with the conduct of the Transkeian rebellion. Three years later he resigned after a fiasco in regard to another rebellion, that of the Basutos.

Insurance in Nebraska.

The insurance companies doing business in Nebraska took out of the State last year about $500,000 more than they put in. And this was done in a year of business depression, when the indefinite thing called moral hazard is said by fire insurance men to have pervaded the State. More than this, fire insurance companies have operated under the valued policy law, which compels them to pay the face of a policy in case of total loss. As general business improves insurance business will materially revive and a still better showing can be made.—Omaha Bee.

VAST SUMS ARE SPENT

PRESENT SESSION OF CONGRESS A COSTLY ONE.

Amounts Appropriated This Year Will Not Fall Far Short of $512-000,000—Great Gathering of Methodists at Cleveland.

Throw Money to the Birds.

Washington correspondence:

ALL previous records in the way of large expenditures will be broken by the present Congress. The appropriations will far exceed the figures of the Fifty-first Congress — "the billion-dollar Congress." In the Fifty-second Congress, when the Democrats had the House and the Republicans the Senate, with the consequent divided responsibility, the total reached the enormous amount of $1,027,104,547.92, and that is the highest record yet made by any single Congress.

What the total for the present Congress will be cannot even be estimated approximately. Statements have been made that appropriations for the present session would aggregate $605,000,000. This is not strictly correct, as that figure includes not only the immediate appropriations for the next fiscal year, but the liabilities in the way of contracts to be appropriated for in future years which are authorized.

All of the great annual appropriation bills have been passed by the House of Representatives, and together with the permanent annual appropriations they bring the total up to $505,079,410.88, without allowing for any increase whatever by the Senate. Even this figure is largely in excess of the appropriations for the first session of the Fifty-first Congress, when the bills as they passed the House provided for but $450,486,571.15, which was increased by the action of the Senate to $463,398,510.79. It will thus be seen that the present House has exceeded the record of the House in the Fifty-first Congress by $53,592,839.73. The only bill which has passed the Senate up to the present time which has been largely increased is the sundry civil bill, to which the Senate added more than $6,000,000. The river and harbor bill has been reported to the Senate with additions aggregating more than $2,000,000, and considerable increases may be expected on the general deficiency bill, which is now in the hands of the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

All of the increases put on by the Senate will not be retained by the conference committees. Most of the additions to the sundry civil bill are for new public buildings. The House has not appropriated a dollar for public buildings except to continue work on those already commenced, and the House Committee on Appropriations is determined that all the public building amendments put on the sundry civil bill by the Senate shall be stricken off.

Even in this case, however, a conservative estimate would place the total increase on account of the action of the Senate at not less than $7,000,000, which would bring the total for this session up to more than $512,000,000, or nearly $49,000,000 in excess of the appropriations for the first session of the Fifty-first Congress. The contracts authorized by the present Congress will amount to over $93,000,000, and will thus bring the total of appropriations and liabilities provided for by this session up to $605,000,000.

There is one possibility that may make a substantial reduction in the above figures, and that is that President Cleveland may veto the river and harbor bill. President Cleveland has never signed a river and harbor bill. He has heretofore allowed them to become laws without his signature, thus signifying that they did not meet his entire approval. With the present bill he is said to be very much dissatisfied, and in view of the situation of the treasury he may veto it.

SHAH'S SON ACCUSED.

Ugly Rumor that He Is Responsible for His Father's Death.

It is rumored that the assassination of the Shah of Persia was brought about by the machinations of his eldest son, Missoud Mirzia, Governor of Ishpahan. The latter was born in 1850, while the new shah, second son of the dead monarch, was born in 1853. But the latter is an offspring of a wife of higher rank and thus was chosen to succeed his father in place of Massoud, his elder brother. He has often rebuked Mirzia for his unruliness and in 1888 recalled him and only allowed him to return to Ishpahan after disbanding some of the regiments and ordering him to pay more than the usual tribute.

THE SHAH OF PERSIA.

Massoud Mirzia, who is also known as the zilles sultan, or shadow of the kingdom, resented this treatment and it was believed that he might make an attempt to usurp the throne. Massoud Mirzia, who is enormously rich, is unpopular on account of his severity and intolerance, and, on the other hand, Muzaffer-ed-Din, the new shah, is much loved by the people of the province of Azerboijan, where the Persian army is chiefly recruited. He is a keen sportsman, like his father. Immediately after the death of the shah, the heir apparent (Valiand) Muzaffer-ed-Din, was proclaimed shah. Russia and Great Britain recognized Musaffer-ed-Din as heir to the Persian throne in 1858.

According to details of the assassination, the shah, accompanied by Grand Vizier Asbgar and a number of attendants, paid a visit to the shrine of Shah Abdul Azim. Two chains barred the way to the inner court of the shrine. The shah had just passed the first chain when the assassin approached him and, when within a few feet of him, fired a revolver, the bullet from which struck the shah near the heart. His majesty fell forward upon his knees, but rose to his feet and walked a few paces, when he fell again. The assassin was immediately seized and hurried away. The shah at once became unconscious and was taken to his carriage and conveyed to the palace in Teheran. When the physicians arrived at the palace they found the shah dead and certified that his death was caused by a bullet lodged in the pericardial region, between the sixth and seventh ribs.

HOSTS OF METHODISTS.

Three Thousand Attend the Conference at Cleveland.

Three thousand people were in the hall when the great quadrennial conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church was called to order by the venerable Bishop Bowman at Cleveland. On the floor were white men and black men, the delegates from cold Norway and Sweden and from tropical India and Japan. Nearly every country on the globe was represented. Central Armory looked beautiful indeed. Its interior was brilliant as the hall of a political convention, and on all sides there was an expectancy that issues of importance were about to be precipitated. The Bible used in the services is the one which was used by John Wesley in his study in England. This historical treasure was presented to the conference some years ago.

The notable feature of the opening of the conference was the reading of an address of the bishops. This may be said to be the notable feature of all general conferences of the church, for the reason that it is fraught with many suggestions with reference to church polity and embodies a comprehensive resume of the progress of the organization, financially and spiritually. The strong features of the address of the bishops this year were the recommendations with regard to the duties of Christian citizenship, the declaration in favor of a national divorce law, a denunciation of the Armenian atrocities and a pronouncement in favor of arbitration in labor and in international disputes. Another significant feature of the address is the portion which favors the maintenance of the itinerant system except in rare cases. This will be a disappointment to a majority of the clergymen, who had hoped that the polity of the church would be changed so that congregations might have greater authority in the matter of retaining ministers who appear to be particularly adapted to a special field.

Many questions of supreme importance to the denomination, action upon which will be awaited with intense interest by Methodists the world over, will be acted upon during the month's session of the general conference. Chief among these is the question of admitting women delegates. This issue has been voted upon by all the annual conferences, but the necessary three-fourths vote has not been secured, the total vote being 7,515 for admission and 2,529 against. The women have therefore lost by eighteen votes, and a change of ten votes would give them seats in the conference. Four women delegates are accredited to the present gathering, but as the committee on credentials must be governed by the existing rules, they cannot be recognized to take any part in the proceedings. The proposition to change the basis of ministerial representation from one delegate for every forty-five ministers to one for every sixty-five has also been lost. The question of abolishing the time limit is also an important one. At present no minister of the church can remain pastor of one church for more than five consecutive years. This is based on the old itinerant theory of the denomination, and it is now proposed to abolish the time limit. It is doubtful, however, whether the proposition will carry. An effort will be made to modify the rules of discipline adopted by the conference of 1872 against dancing, card playing, theater going, attending circuses and horse-races or patronizing dancing schools. It is contended that these rules have barred out from the denomination tens of thousands of young people who otherwise would be glad to identify themselves with it. Several new bishops will be elected, together with numerous officials, including book agents, society secretaries and editors.

BILL FOR BANKRUPTS.

House Passes Long Pending Measure that Interests Trade.

The House, after five days of debate, passed the Henderson bill to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy, by a vote of 157 to 91. The majority in favor of the bill was greater than was anticipated, owing largely to the fact that quite a number of members, who desired only a voluntary bankruptcy bill, after being defeated, voted for the measure as reported.

The bill, as passed, is based upon the Torrey bankruptcy bill, which has been urged before Congress for several years. It provides for both voluntary and involuntary bankruptcy. Under its terms there are eight acts for which a debtor can be forced into involuntary bankruptcy, as follows:

1. If a person has concealed himself with intent to defraud his creditors for forty-eight hours.

2. Failed for thirty days, while insolvent, to secure the release of any property levied upon for $500 or over.

3. Made a transfer of any of his property with intent to defraud his creditors.

4. Made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors.

5. Made, while insolvent, a transfer of any of his property for the purpose of giving a preference.

6. Procured or suffered a judgment to be entered against himself with intent to defeat his creditors, and suffered same to remain unpaid ten days.

7. Secreted any of his property to avoid its being levied upon under legal proceedings against himself.

8. Suffered, while insolvent, an execution for $500 or over, to be returned "No property found."

The bishop of Bedford avers that the East London district contains a population of a million and a half, nearly all poor. From this statement some idea will be had of the vastness of the work the clergy are called upon to perform. The difficulty of raising funds for so great a work is very great.

The Japanese envoy in Corea has been instructed to request that Russian troops be detailed to guard the Corean palace and also that Russia appoint advisers to the Corean Government and military instructors for the Corean army.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

ENCOURAGING EXPORT FIGURES

In 1880 the exports of agricultural products comprised 83.25 per cent. of the entire exports of the United States. The shipments of products of mines, fisheries and the forest swelled this percentage to 87.52, and in the same year the exports of domestic manufactures aggregated 12.48 per cent. of the total. In 1890 all exports other than of manufactures had fallen to 82.13 per cent., and the shipments of manufactured products had increased to 17.87 per cent. In 1892, after nearly two years of the McKinley tariff, manufactured exports had shrunk to 15.61 per cent. of the total, while other exports, by reason of the phenomenal crops in this country and partial famine abroad, increased to 84.39 per cent. Last year the exports of manufactures comprised 23.14 per cent. of the country's sales to foreign markets—a total never before equaled in the history of the United States. Yet even this increase has been surpassed by the record of the first eight months of the present fiscal year, when the total of manufactured exports rose to 24.41 per cent.

If this be the sort of prostration of domestic industries that has resulted from the enforcement of the Wilson tariff, the American people can stand a great deal more of it. The agricultural exports will rise or fall with the needs of Europe and the capacity of domestic producers to supply them. But manufactured exports must be pushed hard against rivals who have long held the field without contest from the industries of this mountry. It is an encouraging sign that within a year and a half since the tariff fetters were partially relaxed the manufacturers of the land should have increased their proportion of its exports even as much as 3.27 per cent. The movement will grow as American ingenuity and enterprise shall become more familiar with their newly found field of exercise.

McKinley and His Prophets.

The belief of the savage that his fetich, a snake or stone, can bring rain or drive away a pestilence, is no more superstitious than that of the McKinleyites that their idol can change natural laws and bring prosperity by the mere fact of his election to the Presidency. In the enlightened State of Massachusetts it might be supposed that men intelligent enough to manufacture goods would know better than to suppose that a mere change of office-holders could alter economic conditions. But the published statements of Mr. Samuel Chapen, of Lowell, would seem to indicate otherwise.

Mr. Chapen is a stockholder of the Lawrence Manufacturing Company, which has recently decided to close down part of its great textile works and sell part of its plant. The reasons given are the increasing competition of the new cotton mills of the South, which undersell the Lowell mills because of the lower wages and longer hours of their operatives; their lighter local taxation, and the advantage of cheaper power and lower freight rates on their raw materials.

To an ordinary mind these conditions would seem to be beyond the power of national legislation to change. But Mr. Chapen is not an ordinary man. He is a true-blue protectionist Republican. So, instead of his agreeing with his fellow-stockholders that under the circumstances the wisest policy was to shut down the part of the mill making goods which could be made cheaper in the South, he said: "In a short time, you know, we shall have a Republican House, a Republican Senate, and a Republican President, and then things will be different."

It is true that things may be different if the Republicans buy their way back into power. But how does Mr. Chapin propose to equalize the conditions of manufacturing in his State and the South? If wages are now too high in Massachusetts, will Republican success pull them down? Will hours of labor in the North be longer when McKinley is President? Will local taxation in the South be higher after 1897. Unless these changes take place, how will the cotton mills of Massachusetts be enabled to compete with those of the South? And if the Republicans put down Northern wages and raise Southern taxes, will that be a benefit to the American people?

Protected Starch.

A McKinley newspaper, which is continually complaining that the tariff duties now in force are not high enough for protection, publishes a story about an inquiry made in England and elsewhere by an agent of the German manufacturers of starch, who wanted to know why American starch was preferred in England to their product. At the conclusion of his investigation the agent told them that American starch was driving German starch out of the English market for the simple reason that the price of the American product was lower. Turning to the official reports, we find that our starchmakers exported 11,788,990 pounds last year, selling 6,053,666 pounds in the United Kingdom and 4,070,375 in The Netherlands. They also sold nearly 400,000 pounds in Canada.

Now, what is the bearing of these facts upon the tariff question? Do they show that our starchmakers need to be protected here in their home market against a "flood" of starch from Europe? If they can undersell the Germans in England and in The Netherlands, can they not undersell them here at home? Under the McKinley tariff, however, they were protected by a duty of 2 cents a pound, equivalent to 91.88 per cent., and under the present tariff the duty is 1½ cents a pound, which is equivalent to 76.29 per cent., and which the Republican House recently increased to 87.73 per cent. so far as it could do this by passing the Dingley bill.—New York Times.

All There Is of Protection.

The luminous Post states for the information of the Chronicle that the protectionists are in favor of free trade with such countries as we can trade with advantageously. But we do not trade with any country unless we can trade with it advantageously. The very fact that we trade with a country proves that we find trading profitable. When Congress steps in and assumes to say that it is not advantageous to us to trade with a certain country it meddles with what is none of its business. Besides, it makes knowingly false statement. And, furthermore, it insults us when it says we are such fools as to trade to our own hurt. When it comes in and interferes with our trade by putting taxes running from 25 to much more than 100 per cent. on certain imports it by so much diminishes the profits of trade, if it does not put a stop to the trade altogether, and it does this at the behest and for the enrichment of a few persons who want a monopoly of the home market, and the power, backed by government, to fleece their own countrymen. This is all there is of "protection."—Chicago Chronicle.

BARON DE HIRSCH'S BENEFACTIONS WERE BOUNDLESS.

His Death Will Not Interfere with Many of His Plans for the Amelioration of His Race—His Fortune Was Largely Self-Made.

Lived Like a Prince.

The death of Baron Maurice de Hirsch will not put an end to his princely benefactions. Many millions of the fund dedicated to the amelioration of the condition of the oppressed Jews in Europe, and to other charitable purposes upon the death of his son, still remain for disbursement in years to come. The Baron's title was inherited from his father, not bestowed in recognition of his philanthropy, as many have supposed. The greater portion of his enormous wealth was won by his own efforts. It was while traveling through the rich countries bordering on the Black Sea that he conceived the idea of the vast enterprise which laid the foundation for perhaps the greatest individual fortune in Europe. This was the building of a railroad from Varna, on the Black Sea, to Buda-Pesth.

BARON HIRSCH.

It is roughly estimated that Baron Hirsch died worth $200,000,000. In 1883 he retired from the business of money-making and married Miss Bischoffsheim, the daughter of one of his partners, who brought him as a dowry 100,000,000 francs. This money was invested apart from the husband's wealth. Husband and wife gave themselves up to the business of distributing their money among the poor, and vied with each other in good deeds. He founded free schools in Egypt, Asiatic Turkey, and in the countries of Europe. These charities were chiefly beneficial to the poor of the Jewish race. The Hebrews of Poland and the country of the Danube were his favorites. Four or five years ago he gave the Government of Austria 12,000,000 francs for the establishment of non-sectarian schools in that country. About the same time he donated a similar amount for the education and Americanizing of Russian Jews emigrating to the States.

Baron Hirsch lived like a prince. He maintained in the most elegant fashion magnificent residences in London, Paris and Berlin. His country estates were rich and princely, more especially his largest estate in Moravia. He resided chiefly in Paris, and in that city he had a great office filled with recorders, clerks and managers, whose only occupation was that of carrying on the charitable work of the benefactor. Personally the Baron was a very handsome man. He was of medium height and gracefully but compactly built. Gentleness and intellectuality were strongly marked in his face. His eyes were large, dark and soft as a woman's. His continental life gave him a thorough knowledge of most of the languages of Europe. He spoke English, French, German, Italian, Spanish and Russian, and was familiar with many of the obscure tongues of Europe. He was a man of polish, and his knowledge of political, social and economic questions was broad and deep. It is said that his gifts to charity summed up more than £12,000,000.

PARROT RIDES A WHEEL.

He Becomes Speechless When He Sees a Woman in Bloomers.

A New-Yorker named J. J. Walsh has a parrot named "Don Caesar," a green and red bird of South American birth, which goes bicycle riding every day with Mr. Walsh. "Don" is a familiar sight along the boulevards, and, according to his owner, becomes speechless with rage at the sight of a woman in bloomers. He sets up a fierce, hoarse shriek, which he keeps up for several minutes, at the end of which he is in danger of falling off the handle-bars.

"Don" does not push the pedals. He perches in the middle of the handle-bars, on the spot where some enthusiastic bicyclists place their babies. There he stands and vociferates and scratches himself. Now and then he ducks his head down to see how the front wheel is going. It is a wonder that he has never punctured the tire and dislocated his beak, but that has not happened yet.

Occasionally he leaves the handle-bars and takes a fly into the air. For a parrot he is a good flyer. Having taken a view of the crowd, of the river, or whatever may be in sight, he returns faithfully to the wheel. Mr. Walsh slackens his speed slightly when the bird goes flying.

The real polite member of a family is the one who does the most lying when guests are present.

THE TURN OF LIFE.

THE MOST CRITICAL PERIOD IN THE LIFE OF A WOMAN.

Experience of Mrs. Kelly, of Patchogue, Long Island.

There is no period in woman's earthly career which she approaches with so much anxiety as the "change of life." Yet during the past twenty years women have learned much from a woman.

It is safe to say that women who prepare themselves for the eventful period, pass through it much easier than in the past.

There is but one course to pursue to subdue the nervous complications, and prepare the system for the change. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound should be used.

It is well for those approaching this time, to write Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. She has the experience of years to aid her in advising. She will charge you nothing.

She helped this woman, who says:—

"I have used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in my family ten years, with the best results. Some time ago my daughter had catarrh of the womb, and it entirely cured her. I was approaching the "change of life," and was in a deplorable condition. My womb had fallen, and the bearing-down pains and backache were terrible, and kidneys affected

"I began taking the Compound, and my pains ceased. I consider it the strong bridge between sickness and health, and recommend it to everybody I meet who needs it."—MRS. L. KELLY. Patchogue, L. I.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills, which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge, that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, laxatives or other remedies are then not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

HEATING BY STEAM.

RECENT ADVANCES MADE IN THIS METHOD.

Its Early Imperfections Have Been Overcome and Splendid Results Are Now Obtained—Description of Model House and Its Heating Apparatus.

Clean and Economical.

The vast increase in the number of the very large buildings, which is one of the most marked features of modern architecture, has brought many new problems to the builders. There has been a complete revolution in methods of construction. One of the minor ways in which this manifests itself is in the matter of heating. It goes without saying that the old style hot-air furnace is incapable of any development that would fit it for the sky-scraping structure one now finds on every city block; nor would it suit the huge rambling country houses that have taken the place of the square, box-like building that contented our forefathers. The world of the present day is not the world of twenty-five years ago. Steam heating, it is true, had its origin before these architectural changes had made themselves felt; but it was crude at first, and has developed to its present perfection under the spur of necessity.

With its many early imperfections steam-heating was slow in coming into favor, and there are to-day many worthy persons who hold a rooted aversion to it, based upon unhappy experience. It is not difficult to understand the reason for this when one visits a building equipped with a steam-heating apparatus of a score or more years ago. The temperature is scarcely even bearable, for with the steam turned on the rooms become torrid; if it is turned off they become frigid, and there seems to be no happy medium. Added to this very vital objection, when the steam is first admitted to the radiators, one might as well live in a boilershop. The thumping and clanging is enough to craze a person of nervous susceptibilities.

In view of the splendid results that are now obtained in steam-heating, it is needless to say that these faults are not due to the system, but to the ignorant application of it. Where the heat cannot be properly and perfectly regulated, there has been no scientific adjustment of heating surface to the cubic dimensions of the room. In many buildings that have been equipped with the apparatus, subsequent to their erection, there are hundreds of feet of steam pipe exposed, because it was impossible to carry them from floor to floor and from room to room within the walls. The radiators themselves have sufficient heating surface, while the steam pipes are responsible for the over-heating. The architect of to-day settles this difficulty in his plans. If the matter is left to him, steam-heating becomes a delight to the householder, as it gives sure and equable temperature in the most extreme weather, and at a minimum of cost for fuel.

FIRST FLOOR.

The thumping in the radiators, which forms a prime objection to the system in the mind of those who remember the experimental stage of steam-heating, is entirely obviated by the use of the improved apparatus. It is caused, of course, by the condensing of steam in the radiators, and when this water is properly conducted back into the boiler the system is as noiseless as hot air or hot water heating.

The accompanying design is for a country villa in which the plans call for a simple and inexpensive steam-heating plant.

General Dimensions: Width, through dining-room and back parlor, 33 feet 8 inches; depth, including bay window, 43 feet.

SECOND FLOOR.

Height of Stories: Cellar, 7 feet; first story, 9 feet; second story, 9 feet.

Exterior Materials: Foundation, stone; first and second stories, clapboards; band between first and second stories, band under eaves, gables, dormers and roofs, shingles.

Interior Finish: Two coat plaster, hard white finish. Flooring and trim in hall, oak; elsewhere, N. C. pine. Oak staircase. Kitchen walls wainscoted. All interior woodwork grain-filled and finished with hard oil varnish.

Colors: All clapboards, fawn-brown. Trim, including water-table, corner boards, cornices, etc., white. Outside doors and ceiling, oiled. Shingles on side walls left natural for weather stain. Shingled roofs stained a deep red.

Accommodations: Cellar under rear half of house with inside and outside entrance. Portiere openings connect hall, parlor, sitting-room and dining-room. Open fireplaces in hall and dining-room. Hat and coat closet in hall. Butler's pantry, containing dresser, connects kitchen and dining-room. Portable range and sink in kitchen. Bathroom in second story, with full plumbing. Attic unfinished, except for storage purposes.

This house would cost about $2,985—not including the heating apparatus, range and mantels—built within 100 miles of New York City, although in many sections of the country the cost should be much less, where labor or materials are cheaper.

Radiators should be placed as near the windows as possible, and in all rooms but the kitchen, including the bathroom and lower hall. A fair estimate for the apparatus complete, set, would be about $290.

A MONKEY'S WARDROBE.

Brummel, the Best Dressed Monkey in All Creation.

A white-faced Japanese monkey, owned by a member of the Union League Club of New York, is quite a dandy in his way. He is certainly the best dressed and best groomed simian in the world, and very appropriately is named Brummel. It was in London recently that the owner conceived the idea of providing his monkey with decent clothes. Man, he argued, owed a certain debt of gratitude to dead monkeys which they could repay in no better fashion than by showing a decent courtesy to the living ones. And to this forcible reasoning Brummel owes his wardrobe. His master sent to Poole. Mr. Poole is the most fashionable—which means the most expensive—tailor in London, and therefore in the world. One has to be introduced before Poole will make clothes for one.

Mr. Poole sent Dent, the famous Dent, his head cutter, to measure Brummel, and within two weeks the monkey had the neatest little wardrobe that ever mortal monkey possessed. His dress suit is made of the costliest broadcloth, faced with satin, and stitched throughout with silk. His walking costume is of heavy English tweed, and when you see Brummel with his cap perched jaunidly upon his head and a walking stick in one hand you have a vivid impression of having seen something like it before—probably upon a trans-Atlantic liner. His pyjamas are of the lightest, finest Chinese silk, and the monkey has become so accustomed to them that he refuses to go to sleep without them. The bath robe, which is of some fleecy material, soft to the touch, pleased Brummel so much that he actually learned to take a bath every morning, for the pleasure of feeling it upon his back. Of course, Brummel has a valet to look after him, and you may depend upon it this valet earns his wages. There is no monotony in his life.

Curious Freak of Nature Owned by Thomas Flannigan of Elwood, Ind.

One of the most remarkable freaks of nature ever seen in the vicinity of Elwood, Ind., is the four-legged Plymouth Rock rooster owned by Thomas Flannigan, a Panhandle section foreman, who lives in that city. The rooster is 2 years old, and, although otherwise a common-looking chicken, it has two well-developed pairs of legs. The hind legs branch out from the hips immediately behind the ordinary legs,

A Disappointing Haul.

Some folks say, says a fisherman, that if the fish once gets into a pound net it never gets out until it is taken out, but as a matter of fact fish often get out of pound nets. It is common for sheepshead, bluefish, Spanish mackerel and shad to get out of them. I've been to a pound net on Sunday and counted 285 bluefish and when the net was hauled on Monday found only four or five. The fish get in, and if they find the opening and get started right they can get out. They follow one another like a flock of sheep.

In the Boston Museum of Fine Arts there are many casts of works of sculpture which are dusted in a novel manner. A large air pump is mounted on a truck and is rolled around to the various rooms. One man operates this pump, the other applies a fine jet of air to the sculptures, blowing off the dust. The blowpipe is connected to the pump by means of a pole and rubber tube.

The Government Likes Red.

Somehow or other the United States government seems to go in a great deal for red, which some people have always supposed was a British color. They buy mostly red blankets for the Indians. It is being much used in the navy. He has a great fashion of taking off his eyeglasses and twisting the end of the string around his finger, then he lets the glasses swing out full length, to the confusion of any passing Senator, often, and with a rotary motion sets the string to winding round his finger. When it is wound up he proceeds to unwind it, and that seems to be his sole amusement.

RIPANS TABULES

Mr. J. T. Jones, who lives in Sharpsburg, Ky., in an interview with Mr. J. C. Nelson, editor and proprietor of the Bath County World, published at Sharpsburg, Ky., on the 24th of May, 1895, said: "I attribute all disorders of the system to the stomach; when the stomach is all right, we are well and happy. For a long time I suffered from the worst form of habitual constipation. Sleeplessness and nervousness set in, and at times I was so melancholy and out of sorts that life was a burden. An advertisement in our local paper induced me to give Ripans Tabules a trial. I did so. The first box made a decided change for the better, and six boxes have completely cured me. I can say for Ripans Tabules, it is, in my opinion, the best medicine for constipation on earth. It accomplished for me what all other remedies failed to do. I am all right now—sleep well and life is worth living. I believe the Tabules put my stomach in shape, and the stomach did the rest. My general health is better than it was for years previous.

"Old Bill Bunyan."

The following in the New York ail and Express comes to our table, narked for special perusal. It will ay the lovers of "fine writing" to ead it. It suggests at once, the handi. ork of Charlie Murray, at one time leading and talented writer in northern Indiana. It must be Charlie or his departed spirit. Hear him.

Away up in the northeast corner of the Hoosier State, where flow the placid waters of the Pigeon and the Maumee, lies the Twelfth Congressional District of Indiana, containing the counties of Lagrange, Steuben, Noble, DeKalb, Whitley and Allen. In this fertile and populous district pumkins and politics are thicker to the acre than in any part of the Harrison State. Politics grow on the vines and bushes, exude from the trees, float in the zephyrs and ride the storm. Infants imbibe politics from the bottle, while bent and toothless nonogenarians croon politics till the Reaper mows them down. There are no "off years" in Twelfth District, politics, and no time of year when political strife and discussion do not enter into every relation of life, and lend zest and piquancy to every conversation.

This constant tendency toward political dialectics, and the active participation of all classes and ages in local political contests, seems to promote frankness of utterance, and gives a potency to the vernacular which is unattainable by us here in the effete East, where the acme of the politician's art is to conceal, not to express thought. There is an artless unreserve, a delightful unambiguousness of political characterization in the Indiana Twelfth, which afford a valuable object lesson to the secretive, teacherous, Joabitish duplicity that distinguishes machine politics here on the seaboard. The Platt-Quay order of politicians might take lessons of the Hon. H. C. Hanna, of Fort Wayne, Ind.

Mr. Hanna is the Republican boss of Allen County, in the Twelfth Congressional District. At the Republican District Convention, held a few days ago at Auburn, in DeKalb County, Hanna had a candidate in the person of R. T. McDonald, of Allen County, to which county the nomination belonged. There were factions in the county, however, and a minority faction presented C. D. Law as a candidate in opposition to Hanna's man. With this minority the Noble County delegation, under the leadership of the Hon William Bunyan, made an alliance, thus overwhelming Hanna and McDonald, and nominating Mr. Law.

Hanna, of course, was sore vexed and exceeding wroth. There was no need for any to inquire what was the matter with him. It was quite apparent. He had a Bunyan on his hands, vastly more irritating than one on the other extremity would be. After the Auburn convention he betook him back to Fort Wayne, sought out the editor of the Fort Wayne "Journal," and said things—said them with unction and undisguise. He prefaced his soliloquy by the deprecatory remark that he "did not want to be personal, but only frank." He then proceeded to characterize the Noble County "meddlers" under the lead of Bunyan. "Our county never went into a district convention with a divided delegation that these fellows did not unite with the minority, and in the end give the Republican party in Allen County a black eye. That is what they are on earth for. It is their life and their salvation." Mr. Hanna then proceeded as follows to depict the virtues of Mr. Bunyan:

If the republican party of the Twelfth District were to root out and put from itself forever the most colossal nuisance with which it was ever afflicted, Old Bill Bunyan, of Noble County, would have to hunt a new job. He is an unsightly excrescence, a meddlesome, mischief-making, selfish old political tufthunter, who was born into politics a nuisance and a burden, and who will die so. When Old Bill Bunyan is not nosing around for political free lunch, he is out hunting up a minority faction to tie up to that trouble may be made. That is the figure he has always cut in the Republican politics of this district, and that is the figure he will continue to cut until the party in its impatience heroically ties his scheming head in a bag forever. The history of Noble County politics is written thick with the buildozing of Bunyan. When he hasn't been a candidate himself, he has had some one else to push for office. He is always hungry and always feeling unfed. He is a malcontent and disorganizer of the most pronounced type. It is time he was politically confined.

All of which merely shows the tropical luxuriance of the Hoosier vernacular. It makes us wonder, too, what Hanna would have said if he had been "personal," and not merely "frank." Still, he did not mean half of his frank utterance. Hanna knew that he was not even leaning against the well-sweep which hung over the well at the bottom of which lay truth. Now we know "Old Bill Bunyan," know all about him and his forbears, and Brutus in his best days was not so honorable a man. Bunyan is a new Yorker, born and raised on a stony farm up in Saratoga County, where corn is planted with a rock drill and where the sheep are provided with steel nose-plates, with which to move the flat stones in order that they may graze. It was a farm where the staple products were pursley and quack and wire-worms and woodchucks; where the grasshopper was a burden and the potato bug an incubus; where there were but two seasons, winters so cold as to freeze the milk of human kindness, and summers so blistering hot as to curl the tails of the pigs. As to "pie," it was something Bunyan never had, except at husking bees, and a "free lunch" is something he never heard of till he went to the Legislature.

When he pulled up and went to Indiana, Fortune accompanied him in disguise. He exchanged the shovel, and the hoe, for the pestle and the mortar, and out of the latter he pounded success. Soon he was able to have pie seven times a week. He became a man of prominence in the community, and everywhere became respected for his sturdy honesty and modest worth. His character might well have given his county its name. He took to politics like a duck to water. He served in both houses of the Legislature, and made an excellent record. He is the representative of the better element of Indiana politics, and is the trusted friend of such eminent Hoosier Republicans as Benjamin Harrison and Lew Wallace.

Nor is there anything "unsightly" about "Old Bill Bunyan," of Kendallville. If not exactly beautiful, in the most strictly esthetic sense, he is at least restful to look upon. His rotund figure and genial disposition are not at all indicative of "hunger," or of that "unfed feeling." He is neither an "excrescence," nor a "tuft hunter." In fact, he has so little respect for "tuft-hunters" that he has spent twenty years of his life in endeavoring to avoid the depilatory advances of that remorseful "tuft-hunter" Time, with a result that he wears a noble alabster forehead which reaches backward from his eyebrows to his shirt collar. He is neither a "boss," nor a "bulldozer," a "malcontent" nor a "nuisance." And it will be a cold, wintry day when Mr. Hanna gets that shapely, polished knob of shrewd "Old Bill Bunyan" in any bag. He has drowned cats himself in his day.

Hon. H. C. Hanna is certainly no relative of Hol. Mark Hanna, the astute and successful manager of the McKinley canvass. Mark Hanna would never have permitted a convention in which he was interested to be held in a county a with French name, which had within its borders both a Sedan and a Waterloo.

Walk through an old dense forest and you see nothing but trees, and in spring a host of things will shoot from the ground. These did not appear before because every thing was not favorable for their growth.

Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil, with Hypophosphites, prevents consumption because it keeps the system in such good condition that things are not favorable for the growth of the germs of that disease. Cod-liver oil makes rich blood; and the hypophosphites strengthen nerves.

SCOTT'S EMULSION has been endorsed by the medical profession for twenty years. (Ask your doctor.) This is because it is always palatable—always uniform—always contains the purest Norwegian Cod-liver Oil and Hypophosphites.

Of Fort Wayne, Ind., writes on Nov. 29, 1894: "I was afflicted for forty years with heart trouble and suffered untold agony. I had weak, hungry spells, and my heart would palpitate so hard, the pain would be so acute and torturing, that I became so weak and nervous I could not sleep. I was treated by several physicians without relief and gave up ever being well again. About two years ago I commenced using Dr. Miles' Remedies. One bottle of the Heart Cure stopped all heart troubles and the Restorative Nervine did the rest, and now I sleep soundly and attend to my household and social duties without any trouble."

A Little Child

Of Mr. and Mrs. Ridgeway came near being Run Over this Morning.

The little baby of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Ridgeway who live at Auburn Junction came near being run over by the south bound Lake Shore passenger train this morning. As the train approached the stopping point, for the crossing the engineer and fireman saw the little tot sitting on the rail. The fireman ran ahead and picked up the child and at about the same time the mother came after it, the residence being only a few feet from the track. It was a very narrow escape. The reporter was on the train enroute for Fort Wayne and is under obligations to Conductor Fitch for the particulars concerning the incident.

BICYCLING.

A Funny Incident Witnessed By a Courier Reportee this afternoon.

THE bicycle is no respecter of persons, as many of our leading citizens can testify. It runs against the just and the unjust and over the small and the great, dignity has no influence over the fractions thing. A minister of the gospel, is just as liable to stand on his head, when in company with a bicycle for the first time, as is the wild eyed little urchin and even more so. Grave attorneys find all the "demurrers and objections" to be as mere water, when on the back of this machine for the first time. "Doctors of physic and medicine" and skilled surgeons, are bewildered and lose their nerve at their first "bicycle operation." All this, and more, we can prove by Dr. Swarts, who this morning for the first time, if we are to judge by results, bestrode one of these fiery steel horses. Coming down sou' by sou' west from Cedar street to Main, Wash Askew and his baggage wagon hove in sight some knots ahead. There was plenty of time and space to keep away from the stranger craft, which had come to a dead standstill. But the pesky wheel wouldn't have it that way. With malice aforethought and seemingly forced from its course by some sort of gravitation the wheel steered for the team, wabbling as it came on, head down. The doctor pulled the reins in vain, and having been trained to ride a horse, he as vainly dug a pair of imaginary spurs into the steel-steed's intercostal muscles. It was of no avail. The distance grew to a few inches, and he shut his eyes, and "with a crash went smash" into the team, and between the horses. It was an exciting episode for the Doctor and the team, but both are all right now. And the Doctor would like to make people think he had examined the pulse of that bike, before starting, and it was in a normal condition, making seventy-eight strokes in the shade. He will not put his trust in them again, till he is better acquainted.

Why They Go.

TOOK JOHNNIE TO THE SHOW.

Poor little Johnnie longed to go
And see the show;
Like any simple trusting lad
Who viewed the walls in pictures clad,
Of men who lived on horses' backs,
Or climbed each others' heads in stacks,
Or drivelled dressed in stripes and spots,
Or tied themselves in double knots,
Or metamorphosed into wheels,
Or swung each other by the heels,
Or, placid, led unblemished lives
Amid a fusillade of kniv,
Or punched the lion while he roared,
Or with their heads his mouth explored;
You would yourself have longed to go
And see the show!

Then Jonnie's father said, "Although
I loathe, abhor, and hate the show,
I feel that little John should go,
The curious animals to see;
'Twould never do—so little grown—
For him to wander round alone;
My little boy shall go with me."
And Johnnie's mother—prudent dame—
And Johnnie's auntie—felt same;
And Johnnie's Uncle Lemuel,
His second cousin, Samuel,
His older sister, Mary,
And Susan Ann and Sarah,
His brother and his brother-in-law,
His father's cautious mother-in-law,
And others, went along with him
To see that naught was wrong with him;
'Twas not a sin to take, you know,
Poor Johnnie to the show!

As any one might be afraid,
'Twas very hard, with all this aid,
For little John to see the show.
They hustled him, they jostled him,
They pulled him to and fro;
When one of them would chance to see
A knot of friends, then he or she Would grasp the urchin by the hand,
So all the world would understand
That they had simply come, you know,
With Johnnie to the show.
And Johnnie's heart was breaking,
His lengthened arms were aching,
His pulse was wildly throbbing,
His little breath was sobbing,
When with a new and different ache
In every separate toe,
He lay at night—in his own charge—
A dreary poor and lonely one,
And murmured, "I'm the only one.
Of all the family, small or large,
That didn't see the show!"

His Tack Hammer Saved.

"The sound of the tack hammer is heard in the land" may be read in about half of our exchanges. But Auburn can always add to an item, if given a chance. The chance came yesterday, and the hero thereof is Charley Glazier, the good natured proprietor of the Glazier House. It became necessary to get some good things for dinner, and while he was about it, he concluded he might as well begin now as ever, to make a few sacrifices to the popular god of house-cleaning. So he bought a new tack hammer. Then to prove that his head was still clear in spite of the near approach of house cleaning, he put the tack hammer, and a bundle of fresh crisp rhubarb together, and on reaching the Hotel, he put this bundle, arefully away into the big refrige rator. Later on there was quite an exciting hustle to find that hammer, for it was needed, A long and not very patient search was at last crowned with success. There in the ice-cold receptacle with the vegetables meats, milk, cream, butter, etc, reposed that lost hammer. It was not in the least "spoiled" in spite of the hot weather, but was as crisp and solid as when he first laid its wilted form beside the bundle of rhubarb. Charley, house cleaning will soon be over and then "we men" can regain our normal mental balance.

Your Boy Wont Live a Month.

So Mr. Gilman Brown, of 34 Mill St. South Gardner, Mass.; was told by the doctors His son had lung trouble, following Typhoid Malaria, and he spent three hundred and seventy five dollars with doctors, who finally gave him up, saying: "Your boy wont live a month.' DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

MOTHER AND BABE

Were Burned to Death and Three Other Children May Die.

Pittsburgh (Penn.) special: At McDonald Station Mrs. James Cadmore and her 2-year-old babe were burned to death, and three children who tried to save their mother, were so badly burned they will probably die. Mrs. Cadmore lighted a fire in the kitchen stove. As the coal did not ignite, she poured on some kerosene oil. There was an explosion, and burning oil was thrown around the room.

With her garments blazing, the woman rushed into the next room to rescue her sleeping babe. Pressing the child to her breast she tried to get out of the house, which was then burning furiously. She became bewildered, and fell. Her three children, seeing the danger, tried to drag their mother from the house, but were driven out by the flames and smoke. When assistance arrived it was too late to save the woman and her babe. The house was destroyed, and the charred trunks of Mrs. Cadmore and her child were found in the ruins.

The three children are now at the Presbyterian Hospital in Allegheny, where it is stated they may not recover. When the husband and father returned home he fainted.

Many Killed.

A terrible cyclone struck Howe, Texas, leaving death and destruction in its wake. The path of the cyclone at this point was a quarter of a mile wide. Ten farmhouses and as many barns were wrecked. Eight persons were killed outright and many injured. Bark was ripped from trees and much stock was killed. At Gribble Springs, eight miles north of Denton, Texas, four persons were killed and five others so badly wounded they cannot live. The property damage is great. The same cyclone also struck the town of Justin, blowing twelve houses down, killing one man named W. J. Evans of Kell r, Texas, and badly injuring seventeen others. The cyclone also did much damage north of Justin. The storm raged in other portions of the State, and later reports indicate that a hundred lives were lost.

Quintuplets Dead.

Mayfield (Ky.) special: The Lyons quintuplets, born in this city on April 29, to Mrs. Oscar Lyons, are all dead. Their deaths were peculiar, and the exact cause is unknown by the physicians. However, it is generally believed that it was the result of worry caused by the enormous visiting crowds. They all had similar attacks, which resembled spasms. Each one of them died instantly and at the last moment they would give loud screams. They were fully developed, and appeared to be in perfect health. Their bodies have been embalmed, and are now on exhibition.

Made His Son Swear to Kill.

A dispatch from Pendleton, S. C., says: At Clemson College, the State Agricultural Institute, P. M. Lindsay, a convict guard, shot W. D. James, foreman of the college farm, who will die. Arrangements are being made to use the X rays on James in order to locate the three bullets. After he had been shot his twelve-year-old son came into the room. James called the boy to his bedside and with a volley of oaths made him promise that when he was twenty-one years old he would shoot Lindsay dead. The son promised faithfully to do this.

Princely Gift to Pennsylvania University.

One of the largest gifts ever made to the University of Pennsylvania was made known recently by Provost C. C. Harrison, who announced that Thomas McKean, one of the university trustees and a member of the class of 1862, had contributed $100,000 to the university upon the condition that it raise $1,000,000 within a specified time. Mr. McKean placed no limitation on the use of his gift, but left that to the discretion of the trustees.

A Woman's Frightful Death.

At Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., Mrs. Arthur Pickett was attacked by an epileptic fit while working near an oil stove. She fell over the stove and when discovered was horribly burned, her body being a mass of cooked flesh. Not a single hair was left on her head and her eyes had been burned out. She died in a short time.

Crooked Officials Sent Up.

Ex-Coroners Butler and Bertzinger, together with their two clerks, Bird and Benzing, were each sentenced to eighteen months in the house of correction at Detroit. The quartette were convicted of conspiring to defraud the county by submitting bills for inquests, etc., which never took place.

Plowed Up Wealth.

Rev. Rhodes, living twelve miles east of Thompson, Texas, while plowing his field, unearthed 30,000 Mexican dollars. It seems that the money was buried in a leather satchel, and it was almost rotten. Mr. Rhodes bought the place two years ago. For several years there has been digging in that community by unknown parties at night.

Lawyer's Fatal Drop.

Will W. Snyder of Fremont, Ind., a prominent attorney, fell from a second-story window and was killed.

Stabbed in Church.

Near Blountville, Ala., Wm. Kyle, a young farmer, whose wife had made him jealous, followed her to church and found her with a young man who was objectionable to him. He seized his wife by the hair, dragged her to the door of the church, and before help could arrive he had twice stabbed her to the heart. Kyle made to the woods and is still at large. Mrs. Kyle died in the church door.

Sister's Wrong Avenged.

Walter Wright shot and killed Dr. J. T. Blackwell on the streets of Columbus, Ga. The latter had insulted the former's sister, as Wright claimed.

ANOTHER WAR CLOUD.

Russia Seizes the Disputed Territory of Chefoo.

London special: A dispatch from Shanghai to a London news agency says that the Russians, through the medium of American Agent Smith, have taken possession of the disputed territory of Chefoo, over which the British maintain claims. The dispatch says that six Russian warships and four United States war vessels are lying at Chefoo.

The ascertained facts of the Chefoo affair, in which the Russians are represented as having siezed disputed territory upon which England had a claim, are these:

The Russian steam navigation company secured a tract of Foreshore belonging to the English firm of Ferguson, at Chefoo, and proposed to build a pier thereon. Other firms objected to the Russian company having possession of the property, whereupon the Chinese authorities acceeded to the full transfer of the property to the Russian company.

The Globe, in a special article on the subject, says that England is bound to regard the affair as an unfriendly act and that the result will be awaited with the greatest anxiety. The government has not received any information that Russia has seized English territory at Cheefoo and the authorities say they will be greatly surprised if Russia has really taken such an aggressive step.

ROBBED THE BANK.

Two Young Men Had an Easy Time in Illinois.

Decatur (Ill.) special: The Buffalo bank, at Buffalo, twenty miles west of here, was robbed of $11,000 in cash at noon Friday by two strangers, of whom the cashier has been able to furnish only an imperfect clue. At that hour Cashier Huffberger was alone in the bank and the two men entered as though on business. One stepped up to the cashier's window while the other walk d toward the end of the counter. The cashier arose to wait on the supposed customer and partially leaned over the counter. He was seized by the throat and in an instant the other robber had got behind the counter and grabbed him from behind. The cashier was then bound hand and foot and a gag thrust into his mouth. He was then rolled under a table. The money on the counter was thrown into a valise. The cashier was discovered half an hour later by a customer. No one had seen the thieves enter or leave the bank and it is not known positively how they got out of town, but the supposition is that they drove to Decatur. Cashier Huffberger was not able to furnish an accurate description of the men beyond saying that both were young men. There was not a word spoken during the entire transaction.

BUSINESS AWAITING

The Harvest and the Presidential Contest.

R. G. Dun & Co. says in the Weekly Review of Trade: "It is now the middle of May, too late for business to change materially until the prospects of coming crops are assured and definite shape has been given to the presidential contest by the conventions. Until the future is more clear there is a prudent disinclination to produce much beyond orders or to order beyond immediate and certain needs. If this waiting spirit prevails two months longer it will crowd into the last half of the year an enormous business if the outlook then is good. For the present there is less business than a year ago, though in some branches more, and the delay following months of depression is to many trying and causes numerous failures. Speculative markets are comparatively inactive, but the stock market is stagnant and the average price of railroad stocks has declined less than 1 per cent. for the week and the average of trust stocks only about half of 1 per cent."

Son of Senator Davis Drowned.

Word was received at Wheeling, W. Va., of the drowning of Henry G. Davis, Jr., son of Senator Henry G. Davis and nephew of Senator Stephen B. Elkins. Young Davis was in bad health, and went on a cruise to South Africa in a sailing vessel. He shipped on the steamer Munkesenton, and was accidentally drowned in mid-ocean. No further particulars are given.

Attorney Michiner Sentenced.

Attorney J. B. Michiner, a well-known and influential citizen of Canton, Ohio, was sentenced by Judge Ricks in the United States Court to eighteen months in the penitentiary. He was arrested in April a year ago on the charge of making counterfeit $10 and $5 gold pieces.

JACKSON IS TO HANG.

JURY FINDS HIM GUILTY OF MURDER.

One of the Slayers of Pearl Bryan Convicted of the Atrocious Crime—How the River and Harbor Bill Appropriations Are Distributed.

Speedy Justice in Kentucky.

Scott Jackson was found guilty at Newport, Ky., of the murder of Pearl Bryan and his punishment was fixed at death. The jury entered and was ordered to remain standing. Judge Helm asked if they had agreed, and Foreman Murty Shea announced that they had. The court warned the spectators against any demonstration, no matter what the verdict, and instructed the clerk to read: "We, the jury, find Scott Jackson guilty of the murder of Pearl Bryan, and fix his punishment at death."

Immediately there was an uproar. Several persons clapped their hands in approval, despite the judge's warning. Sheriff Plummer rapped for order and the officers fiercely jumped to their feet to find the offenders, but no attention was paid to them. All eyes were riveted on Jackson. He gave a sudden start when the words condemning him to death fell on his ears. He turned an ashen color, but thirty seconds later was his old self again.

Jackson was seen in his cell shortly after his removal from the court room. There he showed the first signs of weakening. His face was blanched and pinched and his voice husky. He talked with a lump in his throat. He asserted that he had established a complete alibi and there was not a single reason why he should be convicted. While he talked he could scarcely suppress the tears. It was the first sign of real weakening shown since his artest. Alonzo Walling, his alleged accomplice, said on hearing the verdict: "Why, he is guilty, and it's only right that he should hang."

The Bryan family—the father and two sons—were delighted with the verdict. They speak highly of Kentucky and Kentucky justice. They shook hands with each other on hearing the finding of the jury.

The news of the conviction created the most intense excitement in Greencastle, Ind., the home of Miss Bryan. The news spread over the city rapidly, and men, women and children were soon upon the streets discussing it. The public schools were just opening for the afternoon session when the tidings came over the wires, and the pupils could not be restrained, but joined the crowd upon the streets, and were soon followed by their teachers.

AN EXTRAORDINARY RACE

When the Sextet Bicycle Goes Against the Empire State Express.

One of the most extraordinary races on record is scheduled for the 5th of June. On that date six athletic cyclists, headed by Dan Cabanne, of St. Louis, all riding on one machine, called a "sextuplet," will endeavor to beat the Empire State Express, which is the fastest railway train in the world. The race is to be over one mile, at a point where the huge flying locomotive may safely crowd on its greatest speed. In order to test the claims of the makers of the "sextuplet," that, with their machine, the unaided muscles and sinews of man can carry him more rapidly than the most perfected application of the powers of steam, a five-mile track is to be laid at the side of the New York Central Railroad, near Poughkeepsie, and here the test will be made.

It is necessary that the track should be five miles in length, as the full speed of the sextuplet cannot be attained in less than two miles, and it takes two more to come to a stop so that the six riders may alight safely. The race will, therefore, be over the third or center mile of the track. The start will be so timed that both train and cyclists will commence the racing mile together and then both will be sent along at the utmost speed.

The sextuplet is a bicycle in every sense of the word. It has only two wheels, but it has seats and pedalling gear for six riders. In the hands of the front man only is the steering apparatus. The whole machine is built of aluminum, and though it is 156 inches long over all, with a wheel base of 125 inches, it only weighs 137½ pounds. The machine is said to be such that it could bear a weight of 20,000 pounds. It is geared to 196 inches. If the men to ride it can turn their pedals three times each second, as is hoped, the train record for a mile will be beaten 2 2-5 seconds. There are four sprockets used in gearing, so that at each revolution of the pedals the bicycle moves ahead 42 feet. The friends of the sextet claim that with good riders the "bike" will prove that it is the fastest method of locomotion on earth.

COMING RACE BETWEEN A BICYCLE AND EMPIRE STATE EXPRESS

AN IRISH CLERGYMAN.

Rev. Crawford Johnson, Who Spoke in Chicago on Wesley Day.

Rev. R. Crawford Johnson, who spoke at the Wesley day celebration in Central Music Hall, Chicago, is an Irish clergyman who preaches to a charge in Belfast, yet he is neither Roman Catholic nor Episcopal. An Irish cleric who is not Anglican or Roman Catholic is a rarity, but Mr. Johnson is a Methodist. He has a fine church in Belfast and is one of the most attractive preachers in the Emerald Isle. He is native Irish, born in the County of Antrim, which is in the northern end of the island. He has devoted most of his life to pastoral work in his native land and has spent his life in Ireland, with the exception of the years he gave to culture, study and thought in Didsbury College, which is hard by Manchester. About six years ago Mr. Johnson was given charge of the city missions in Belfast in order to reach the masses, and his work there has been a fine success. He preaches in a great auditorium called Grosvenor Hall and is the leading man in the "forward movement" in Ireland. This movement aims to lift the masses by giving them libraries, reading rooms and training schools. During his stay in America Dr. Johnson will look into kindred institutions and take back with him to Belfast whatever improvements he thinks can be adopted with profit. The doctor's wife and son accompany him.

Consul Read, the chairman of the Cheng-Tu commission, has succeeded in securing payment in full of the Baptist missionary claims for property losses in the Se-Chuen riots.

Simon Schultmann, arrested in Los Angeles, has confessed to the burning of several stores in Denver and other cities.

INDIANA VETERANS.

MEET IN ANNUAL ENCAMPMENT AT SOUTH BEND.

Have a Grand Parade and Three Rousing Campfires—Comrade Caylor Chosen Commander—Lew Wallace Attends—Richmond Gets the Next.

Indiana Grand Army.

The seventeenth annual encampment of the Indiana Department, G. A. R., was held at South Bend Wednesday and Thursday, and it was one of the most notable events in the history of the organization. Weather and arrangements were all that could have been desired.

The opening session was called to order by Department Commander Shively, who made a short address. The response was to have been made by Mayor Schafer, but owing to his unavoidable absence J. B. Stoll responded in behalf of the citizens of the G. A. R. committee. Prayer was offered by Dr. Lucas of Indianapolis, and following this came the address by Commander Shively. He referred with vigor to pension matters and was loudly applauded. His remarks concerning Cuba also brought applause.

The session adjourned at the close of Commander Shively's address for dinner and the parade, which was one of the greatest affairs ever seen in South Bend. It was under command of Joseph Turnock of Auten Post No. 8 of South Bend. It moved through the principal streets, and at one place 3,000 school children, dressed in white, sang patriotic songs and waved American flags. Gen. Lew Wallace was in line. Nearly every business house and private house along the line of march was profusely decorated.

At the close of the parade the executive session of the G. A. R. was resumed and matters pertaining to the department in general were considered. Assistant Adjutant General Smock of Indianapolis presented his report, in which he gave a number of interesting statistics and financial figures relating to the work of the Indiana Department.

The Campfires.

Three camp fires were held in the evening. One at Turner Hall was presided over by Commander Shively, another at the Third Regiment armory by Past Department Commander A. O. Marsh of Winchester, and a third in a large tent on the Government lot by Past Department Commander Johnston of Rockville.

Commander-in-Chief Walker of Indianapolis, with members of his staff and department officers and distinguished guests, visited each camp fire during the evening, a short address being made at each place by Mr. Walker.

The seventeenth annual encampment of the G. A. R. was also the occasion of the conventions of the Indiana Department, W. R. C., and the Indiana Department, Ladies of the G. A. R.

The business session was held Thursday. Assistant Adjutant General Smock's report showed the total membership in good standing at the close of last year was 20,952, against 21,918 at the close of the preceding year. The total on the rolls is 27,215. Relief was extended to 350 comrades during the year and to 285 other veterans. The amount thus expended was $3,678.17. The number of posts in good standing in the State Dec. 31, 1895, was 504, a loss of four. Posts have been organized in Jerome, Paragon, Dale, Monon, Carbon, Bloomington, Martie, De Soto. Posts were disbanded during the year as follows: Eugene, Monroe City, Wolcottville, Burlington, Mooney, Orland, Birdseye, Summitville, Land Mestin, North Indianapolis, Mount Auburn, Eminence. During the year $5,000 was turned over to the soldiers' home committee, reducing the assets to $5,349.96.

MRS. CRISLER.

Receipts for the year were $5,537.45, which, with cash on hand a year ago, amount to $6,952.34. Expenditures for the past year were $5,213 of department proper, and $60.36 by the orphans' home committee and $124.49 by the soldiers' home committee.

Election of Officers.

H. M. Caylor, of Noblesville, was unanimously elected department commander; Elmer Crockett, South Bend, senior vice-commander; John G. Harrison, of Converse, junior vice-commander; Dr. J. H. Rerick, Lagrange, medical director; Rev. B. J. Parrett, Frankfort, chaplain; R. S. Robertson, Fort Wayne; Benn Starr, Richmond; H. B. Snyder, Indianapolis; C. B. Brodrick, Elkhart, and J. W. Senior, Madison, council of administration. There are many very active contests for those offices not filled.

An attempt to reconsider a resolution adopted recognizing the ladies of the G. A. R. as an aid failed. A resolution thanking the citizens for their hospitality was adopted. Richmond was selected for the next meeting place, and the encampment was ended. The veterans were well pleased with the generous treatment accorded them.

Comrade Caylor.

The election of H. M. Caylor, of Noblesville, was virtually a foregone conclusion. Although he made no active campaign for the honor, yet the fact that he was defeated on two former occasions won him the sympathy of scores of veterans, and for the past month his candidacy had been indorsed by posts in all parts of the State. His war record is unexcelled. He was with Sherman on his march to the sea, fought at Ringgold, Chattanooga and Chickamauga, assisted in capturing Lookout Mountain and was a conspicuous figure in the battle of Missionary Ridge. Comrade Caylor is a practical business man, who is well equipped for the position.

Comrade Shively's Record.

Comrade H. B. Shively, of Wabash, retiring department commander, is one of the well-known soldiers of the State. He is a native of Ohio by birth, in 1844, and he served with Company B, Fortieth Indiana, during the war, participating with his regiment in the battles of Shiloh, Perrysville, Stone River and Missionary Ridge. In the last named engagement he was severely wounded, and being unable to perform further service, he was honorably discharged in April, 1864. After his return he took up his educational course, finally graduating from the law department of the University of Michigan. He entered upon the practice of law at Wabash in 1871. In 1890 he was elected judge of the Twenty-seventh judicial circuit. In 1872 he served as prosecuting attorney, and in 1882 he was sent to the Legislature. In 1896 he was re-elected circuit judge. He was elected department commander one year ago, at Muncie.

Mrs. Eliza J. Crisler.

"Mrs. Eliza J. Crisler, of Greenburg, retiring president of the W. R. C., has led the van in organizing the work of patriotic teaching in Indiana, and she has been the pioneer among the W. R. C. organizers the country over," says the National Tribune. "It was through her personal influence in appearing before the State Teachers' Association and the State Board of Trustees that she secured their co-operation in placing a flag in every school room in the State. As a speaker, she has rare persuasive powers, and she handles the pen of a ready writer." Mrs. Crisler is a native of Switzerland County. On her mother's side she is descended from Presidents John Adams and John Quincy Adams; on her father's side she is of German nobility. Prior to her marriage with William J. Crisler she was a teacher.

John Williams, a well-known farmer, near Waterloo, was called from his home late Thursday night by two men, who said his grandchild at a neighboring village was very sick. Williams came out and was struck with a sledge hammer on the head and face and terribly cut up. The men then robbed him of quite a sum of money and escaped. Williams' recovery is doubtful.

White caps Saturday night took Oscar Franklin out, tied him to a tree and administered a sound whipping at Clear Creek. Several small things had been stolen in the neighborhood and these had been traced to him. He had been employed by Dr. Judah, who attempted to rescue him, but was warned not to do so. He was given three hours to leave the county.

Bill Hardee, a Coffee County (Georgia) negro, was hanged to a limb and his body riddled with bullets. He had cruelly whipped a white boy.

When the curfew bell rang for the first time in Peru, after passing the ordinance, residents at first took it to mean a fire. As soon as it was understood, boys were seen running for dear life towards their homes. No arrests have been made so far, but many have been ordered off the streets.

Isaac Bumgarner's brick block, in the village of Walton, burned, entailing a loss of $15,000, with no insurance. The records and furniture of the Maccabees, Masons, G. A. R., W. R. The Forepaugh-Sells Brothers' show has a damage suit on its hands in Frankfort. While James Clendenning, aged 77, was passing along the street a gust of wind blew over a heavy bill board, which knocked down the old gentleman, breaking his right hip. The injury is pronounced a permanent one, and suit for damages will be filed against the owners of the bill board.

During a severe thunder storm which passed over Farmland, lightning struck the barn of John Switzer, knocking senseless four horses which were in the stable. His son, Charles, age 14, was also severely shocked and remained unconscious for over two hours. The building was badly wrecked. The horses finally recovered and were with difficulty rescued from the debris.

Patrick and Richard Luncheon, extensive owners of Kankakee marsh land at La Crosse, Laporte County, sold to John Ross, of Lafayette, Ind., 7,200 acres of what was once considered worthless land for $200 000. The owner will at once begin cultivating this land on a large scale. The draining of the Kankakee River and dry seasons have made this one of the most fertile in Northern Indiana.

A syndicate of Indianapolis business men has purchased the Sylvester Hamilton and John W. White land and unsold lots in Shirley, and expect to locate factories and boom Shirley. They have 5,000 acres of gas and oil leases, and have negotiations pending for factories. Shirley is the crossing of the Cincinnati, Wabash & Michigan and the Peoria & Eastern Railroads. It is believed Shirley will prove a good oil territory.

George Lee, a prisoner confined in the sick ward at the county poor farm at Logansport, who recently confessed to having burglarized the residence of Eugene Wheeler in Chicago during the World's Fair, has escaped. Lee claimed to have buried about $5,500 worth of diamonds on the banks of Wildcat Creek, near Pyrmont, in Carroll County, and a watch is being kept on the vicinity to see if he will return to dig up his treasure.

W. J. He is to report to Indianapolis and his name has been placed on the salary list. He has made this business a study and has so systematized his method of keeping reports that he can tell the condition of the weather on any day since 1880.

Prosecutor Lincoln Guynn, of Wabash County, has forwarded to Governor Matthews a petition signed by members of the Wabash bar asking the pardon of Thomas Arnold, convicted of complicity in wrecking the Bank of South Whitley, owned by James Arnold & Co. It is represented that he was not the principal in the crime; that he is in frail health, and that a year in the penitentiary will kill him, and that he has suffered enough already. Persons at South Whitley hostile to the Arnolds are bringing pressure to bear on the Governor to dissuade him from granting clemency, but friends of the family at Wabash and North Manchester are yet hopeful that it may be extended.

CHAPTER XVIII.

All that day Constance kept to her room. The duke was amazed at this, and late in the afternoon presented himself in his wife's boudoir. After all, fortune favored him; Alice was there alone.

"Where is the duchess, Miss Greybrook?" he asked quietly.

"She is in the adjoining room," returned Alice, uneasily, "and I—I think she is asleep. Shall I call her?"

"No," returned the duke, "it is to you I wish to speak. You know, Miss Greybrook, in what high esteem I hold you."

"Your grace, I——"

"I should never have left my wife alone," he continued, "above all in London, if I had not found a holy person like yourself to place by her side, to counsel and direct her. Miss Greybrook, you have never yet hidden the truth from me."

"Never, I——"

"You merit some heavenly recompense," continued the duke, watching her very intently. "Let me beg you to accept this holy cross, brought by me from Rome."

He opened a small packet which he held in his hand and revealed a handsome crucifix. With a smile half of command, half of entreaty, he held this holy gift toward the girl. She hesitated.

"For me, my lord?"

"Pray take it," said the duke.

She held forth her hand, then with a shudder attempted to draw it away.

"No, no; I am not worthy," she cried. "My lord, what are you doing—what do you want?"

"I want the truth," returned the duke, who had seized her hand, and was looking almost fiercely into her face. "Miss Greybrook, tell me the name of the man who met the duchess at the ball last night."

With a cry which was half a moan, Alice shrunk away.

"If I speak," she murmured to herself, "she is lost; if I lie, I lose my soul. Father in heaven," she cried aloud, "what shall I do?"

"It was the Earl of Harrington!"

The interruption was so sudden and unexpected that they both uttered a cry. The duke dropped the girl's hand, turned in the direction whence the voice had proceeded, and saw Constance. She was very pale, but quite composed.

The duke's face was black as night.

"Then, madam," he said, "you have met that man again?"

"Yes," returned Constance, quietly. "I have met my cousin again, and you might have learned the truth without putting Alice to the torture."

"Whom else could I question?" said the duke, sternly.

"Me!" returned Constance, proudly. "No one knows better than you, my lord, my frankness and my sincerity. Listen, my lord. I will give you a further proof of my candor; take me away from England, for, although duty reigns supreme in my heart, the love within it can never die. Do not expose me to temptation; do not compel me to pass through fire, lest at last my spirit fails. But take me away."

The duke drew himself up proudly. "It is impossible!" he said.

"Remember," cried Constance, "it is for your sake I plead. I am your wife; there is peril here for both of us. Will you take me away?"

At that moment a servant entered with a message from Feveral.

"I will come to him," said the duke, and with a low bow to his wife and her friend he left the room.

"Alice," cried Constance, "you see now that what I told you was right. This Mr. Feveral, who calls himself the duke's secretary, is the duke's spy. I am certain now it was he who told the duke of my first meeting with Frank; he has spoken again, and exposed me to this torture. Well, I know him now, and in future I shall be upon my guard."

There was a hurried knock at the door.

"Come in," cried Constance, and the door opened admitting Feveral.

At sight of him Constance seemed to turn to stone, but he came hurriedly and anxiously forward.

"Madam," he said eagerly, "I must speak to you."

"I will not listen to you," she cried; "leave me, sir, for I know you; you tried at first to corrupt me by sending me anonymous letters warning me against the duke. I have cheated you this time. I myself have told the duke the truth. Now, sir, go; and do not dare ever again to enter my apartments."

"Madam!" cried Feveral, who had been utterly taken aback by this unexpected attack; "let me speak; as you love your life, I conjure you to listen."

Without another word she summoned her maid, and when the girl appeared she said very quietly:

"Show Mr. Feveral down."

CHAPTER XIX.

For several days Constance, under the pretense of illness, kept to her own apartments, but one evening both Constance and her friend presented themselves at dinner. Alice, who had dreaded the meeting between husband and wife, was somewhat relieved when she saw the duke walk forward and courteously take his wife's hand. There were several guests present, and Constance welcomed them all. The dinner passed off well—so well, indeed, that after the last guest had departed the duke repaired to his wife's room to thank her for her share in it.

"I am more than pleased," he said. "If you will preside equally well at the reception I shall be delighted."

"The reception, my lord?" asked Constance, coldly.

"Assuredly," returned the duke. "On Tuesday evening next you give a grand reception; the cards have all been issued, everything is prepared, and for yourself I particularly wish you to look your best that night."

The days passed on, and the eventful Tuesday arrived. The reception was to commence at half-past nine o'clock, and when the clocks were striking nine Constance and Alice sat alone in the duchess' boudoir. The house was brilliantly illuminated, and the great drawing room was filled with choice flowers. Both Constance and Alice were dressed for the occasion.

Suddenly Constance uttered the room with a letter, which she handed to her mistress.

Constance took the letter, opened and read it, then she looked up into the wondering eyes of her friend.

"A letter from the duke; he has gone away!"

"Gone away!" exclaimed Alice.

"Yes. Listen, dear; this is what he says: 'I am summoned at once to Paris to meet the Spanish Embassador. I am taking Palmatos and Feveral with me. I have made Palmatos communicate with all our guests and put off our reception of this evening.' What can it mean, Alice?"

"I don't know, dear; is that all he says?"

"No, there is more," replied Constance, and lifting the letter again, she continued: "'For yourself, let me beg you not to spend the evening at home, but to go to Lady Mortimer's ball. I have asked Lady Seafield to call for you. Therefore rest quietly at home until she comes.'"

"Oh, Constance; what shall you do?" cried the girl in terror.

"Do?" returned Constance, with a look of fixed resolve. "I shall obey the duke's command to the letter. At last he has honored me with his confidence, and I shall not betray it."

The first thing to be done was to have the lights extinguished and stay all preparations for the reception. This Constance proceeded to do. When the servants, having received their instructions, had retired, she sat down and looked again at the duke's letter.

"Constance," said Alice, eagerly, "do you really mean to go to Lady Mortimer's ball?"

"Certainly, my dear, since the duke wishes it."

"But—do not be angry with me—should your cousin be there?"

"Do not fear for me, Alice," said Constance, stroking the girl's brown hair. "To-night, remember, I am the representative of my husband, and I will try to do him some slight service. I am going to the ball for my husband's sake, at his wish. It is strange Lady Seafield does not come," she added, "it is getting so late. Alice, dear, will you send one of the servants to inquire for Lady Seafield? Perhaps she would rather have me call for her."

Alice nodded, and went at once to do as her friend wished, while Constance sank down into a chair beside the window, and remained looking out upon the moonlit park. She fell into a reverie, from which she was aroused by the reappearance of her friend. Alice looked paler than usual, and her manner was full of fear.

"Well, dear, have you sent to Lady Seafield?"

"No. I took the carriage and went myself."

"Went yourself! Why did you do that?"

"I was terrified lest something should go wrong; I am glad that I went; the countess is in deep trouble; her father has fallen suddenly and dangerously ill! She was never asked to come for you; she has received no invitation to the ball! Constance, everything has been done to keep you at home to-night. I see it all now; you would have waited and waited for the countess and never gone forth at all; there is danger for you here, I am sure of it; I now implore you to go!"

"To go!" said Constance, "but who will take me? I cannot go alone? Ah, I have it, Monsieur de Santa Fe! He is the duke's oldest and nearest relation. Send to him, dear, at once."

"I will not send; I will take the carriage and go myself."

"Very well, dear. I will remain quietly here until you return."

But she was by no means composed. The moment she was alone she walked excitedly up and down the room; wondering whether or not Alice's suspicions could be correct. Could it be possible that the duke had deceived her? and if so, for what motive?

"It will be always the same," she cried, "suspected, watched, mistrusted. Oh, who will deliver me from this life of misery and degradation?"

With a sob she threw herself down upon the couch and covered her face with her hands; at that moment the door of her boudoir opened, and the footman announced—

"The Earl of Harrington!"

CHAPTER XX.

Trembling violently, scarcely able to believe the evidence of her senses, Constance rose and looked toward the door. It was no dream, no delusion; there stood Frank, faultlessly attired in evening dress, but looking almost as bewildered as she was herself.

"Frank," she said in a voice the trembling of which she vainly strove to control, "tell me, what does this mean?"

"Why," he cried. "I came to your reception!"

"To my reception?"

"Certainly," said Frank, who was growing more and more amazed; "did you not send me the invitation?"

"I send to you to come here?" she cried. "Oh, Frank, you are mad—or dreaming!"

"Constance," he cried, "I tell you it is true. I received an invitation to come here this evening. If you did not send it, it came from the duke."

He drew from the breast pocket of his coat a card, which he held toward her. She took it, and saw that it was a formal invitation to her reception, written by Count Palmatos, the duke's nephew.

"It was cowardly, contemptible," she cried; then, turning her flashing eyes upon her cousin, she continued, "I see it all, Frank; it is a trap."

"Impossible," said Frank; "a trap would be more cunningly laid. If I accepted a formal invitation, where would my offense be, or yours?"

"I tell you I am right; the whole thing has been planned to entrap us. Leave this house, Frank; I am going out."

"So soon," said Frank, "and, Connie, do you send me away like this?"

"Oh, do not speak so," she cried; "I tell you the ground is undermined beneath us. Frank, I entreat you," she cried, growing more and more excited. "See how late it is getting. Alice has gone to fetch Monsieur de Santa Fe to take me to a ball. They will both be here directly, but I will pass you through that door and no one will see you go."

She looked at him, but he did not answer her. His face was ghastly pale; he pressed his hand against his side and seemed about to faint.

"What is the matter?" cried Constance in alarm; "Frank, are you ill?"

"Yes, I am a little faint," he gasped; "my wound."

"Your wound?"

"Yes; did you not know? I was stabbed in the fray the other night; some ruffian had his clasp knife at the throat of a youth. I interposed and was stabbed in the breast—that is all. Constance, give me some water.

The pallor of his face grew ghastly. Terrified, scarcely knowing what she did, Constance rushed from the room, returning with a glass of water and a bottle of cologne. She held the water to his lips, then she took the scent, and gently bathed his forehead. When he opened his eyes he saw that she was crying.

"Connie," he cried, "what is the matter?"

"Frank," she said, "it is nearly midnight. Do not linger now. Since every moment is precious, and Monsieur de Santa Fe does not come, I shall go to the ball alone."

"Alone?"

"Yes; I shall slip in unannounced, and no one will know I went without an escort, and I shall, at least, have fulfilled the duke's commands."

"Don't speak of that man, Constance," Frank cried, "unless you want to drive me to distraction. Ah! I see, your love is dead. I am nothing to you now. Well, perhaps it is better so. Good-by!"

Without another look, without a pressure of the hand, he turned and would have left her. She watched him, and as she did so her heart seemed torn in two.

"Frank," she cried, "do you wish to kill me? Do you not see what tortures I suffer? Have you no pity?"

"Then tell me that you still love me," he cried passionately. "Only once and forever avow your love for me, and I will go in peace."

"In peace?"

"Yes, and happy, even though I leave you forever, your words the solace and memory of my life."

She drew back as if he had struck her. Then her breast heaving with emotion, her eyes blind with tears, she looked the love she felt; but he staggered back, and, with a wild cry, fell upon the couch. She rushed wildly to his side.

"Frank!" she cried, "what ails you? Speak to me! Ah, how pale he is! Frank, can you not hear me? How dreadful he looks, and his eyes are fixed. Frank! He is dead, and I have murdered him!"

OLD BIRDS' NESTS HAVE VALUE

Many Feathered Creatures Use the Same Ones Year After Year.

"That common expression for worthlessness, 'It has no more value than a last year's bird's nest,'" said a bird fancier to a New York Press reporter, "is often far from correct. The majority of our birds do leave their nests after raising a brood, but many do not, and their nests are used through a succession of years. I have known some birds to use their nests ten years in succession, and so persistent are they that many times the female will return even after the nest has been robbed and the mate killed. Among those users of perennial nests are the wrens, some of the swallow family, bluebirds, great crested flycatcher, some of the owls, eagles, chickadies and some woodpeckers.

"They repair to the nest each year and often build it over. A little wren has made its nest in a hole in a tree in my garden and has occupied it for the last eight years. Each year it has piled on new stuff till the hole is almost filled up. Some say that as soon as it becomes crowded the birds will clean it out. I know of a bluebird's nest that has been occupied for several years. It is the same female year after year, for she has two black wingfeathers and is lame.

"Birds that build in exposed situations, like hangbirds, always build anew each season, and some others build anew for every brood. Some never build; they either lay in the nests of other birds or in the sand. The eagle and the owl make a framework of sticks and slight repairs are needed. Many birds' nests that you find have never been used. For instance, the marsh wren builds several with the idea that in the case of disturbance the male will attract attention to the nests other than that in which the female is brooding and so shield her from enemies."

Running Up a Modern Building.

An example of rapid erection of structural iron and steel work for skeleton fire-proof buildings is the Siegel-Cooper building, at 18th and 19th streets and 6th avenue, New York City, the setting of the frame work of which was completed Jan. 29. The foundations for the building were delivered complete to Milliken Bros., of New York, contractors for the iron work, on Nov. 1. During November the owners offered the contractors a bonus in consideration of anticipating the contract time requirements for the erection of the frame work, including the roof tier complete. Notwithstanding the strike on the building, from Nov. 18 to Dec. 18, the contractors were enabled to complete the setting of the last beam, column, bolts and tie-rods on the roof tier on Jan. 28, the time in which they were to complete this work in order to win the bonus being Feb. 1. Excepting a portion of the columns and beams in the first tier, which were put up by hand owing to the previous incompleteness of the foundations, the work has been entirely erected by machinery, the actual working time being exactly nine weeks since the foundations were finally completed, deducting the strike period. In this time seven complete tiers of work, amounting to between 7,000 and 8,000 tons of material, have been erected.—Engineering News.

How to Clean Silk.

Silk should never be ironed, as the heat takes all the life from it and makes it papery. The silk may be sponged and then smoothly rolled on large wooden rollers that come for the purpose, or, if a roller cannot be obtained, spread papers over the carpet and pin the silk, right side up, to the carpet, drawing it smooth and firm. Let it remain until thoroughly dry.

A Long Journey on Stilts.

About two years ago a Frenchman made a bet that he would walk from Paris to Berlin and back again on stilts, the stipulation being that he should not once, while on the actual journey, get down from his pedestal. He took his food and his sleep leaning up against the walls of churches and of houses, and, strange to tell, he won his bet.

It is very easily regulated, and the matter of attendance is reduced to a minimum, which is no small consideration. There is no circulation of dust, which is the inevitable concomitant of hot-air heating. To get the very best results a hot-water plant should be installed in a new house, planned with this in view. Hot-water heating is estimated to require one-fourth more radiating surface than steam, and of necessity there must be more and larger radiators; these can be placed where they will not be obtrusive. They can be adjusted beneath the windows and encased, and arrangements can be made for the passage of a current of fresh air over the radiators, thus contributing admirably toward the ventilators of the house. The very latest application of hot water to heating is in combination with hot air, and in many ways this is the most perfect system of all. Both sources of heat are in the same furnace, which need be no larger than if either system was used by itself. The furnace is like the ordinary hot-air furnace, except that a hot-water drum occupies the central part of the dome.

Those rooms that can easily be reached by a direct current of hot air, are heated by registers, while those further away from the furnace are equipped with radiators. This system is particularly well adapted for large and rambling country houses, which, from the very nature of their construction, can never be thoroughly heated by hot air alone. In so far as the consumption of fuel is concerned, the combination system is as economical as any other; perhaps, indeed, a greater amount of heat can be obtained from a fire of the same size. With proper care on the part of architects in arranging inlet ducts for fresh air to accelerate the draught, any desirable degree of ventilation may be secured. Such arrangements should, however, be studied in advance, from principal elements in the design of a building instead of being wholly subordinatel (as is commonly the custom) to less important architectural features. The design presented with this is arranged for the use of the combination system (hot air and hot water). A brief description we make, as follows:

General dimensions: Width, through library and dining-room, 31 ft. 10 in.; depth, including veranda, 52 ft. 10 in.

SECOND FLOOR.

FIRST FLOOR.

Height of stories: Cellar, 7 ft.; first story, 10 ft.; second story, 9 ft.

Exterior materials: Foundation, brick; first store, clapboards; second story and gables, shingles, roof, slate.

Interior finish: Hard white plaster; cellar ceiling plastered one heavy coat. Soft wood flooring throughout. Trim in hall and bed-room, oak; in library and dining-room, cherry elsewhere, soft wood. Main staircase, oak. Picture molding in principal rooms and hall of first story. Panel backs under windows in parlors, library and dining-room, bath-room and kitchen wainscoted. Front entrance doors, oak. Interior woodwork finished with hard oil; soft wood stained to suit owner.

Colors: All clapboards and sashes, buff. Trim, including water-table, corner boards, casings, bands, rain conductors, also front and rear outside doors and outside blinds, Tuscan yellow. Veranda ceiling and floor, oiled. Brick-work, dark red. Veranda columns, all moldings and balusters, buff. Pedestals of columns and top and bottom rail of balusters, Tuscan yellow. Wall shingles dipped in and brush-coated with sienna stain.

Accommodations: The principal rooms and their sizes, closets, etc., are shown by the floor plans. Cellar under the whole house, with inside and outside entrances and concrete floor. Laundry under kitchen. Furnace cellar under library and dining-room. Vegetable cellar under parlor and hall, separated by brick partition walls. Atic floored but unfinished; space for three rooms and storage. Sliding doors connect parlor, library and dining-room. Open fireplaces in parlor, library, dining-room and two bed-rooms. Hat and coat closet off vestibule.

Three thousand four hundred and fifty dollars is the actual cost to build this house, not including heating apparatus, and a fair estimate for a system of hot-water heating giving indirect radiation downstairs and direct radiation in the second story would be about $450. Radiators should be placed as near the windows as possible in parlor, dining-room, library and hall down stairs, and in the three larger bed-rooms and bath-room in the second story. The estimate is based on New York prices for materials and labor. In many sections of the country the cost should be less.

Name for the New Process.

"Scotograph" is likely to stick as the popular term for portraits taken by the Roentgen process. It means "shade picture," and its analogy with photograph, which is a "light picture," is sufficiently manifest to help on its vogue. It happens, however, that the word scotograph has already been in use a number of years to designate a writing instrument for the blind, and it is pronounced as if derived from the proper noun "Scot." But it will be the simplest matter in the world for the new meaning of the word to oust the old in popular acceptance, for that is a general law of language. And despite the dictionary the first "o" will be long, as in photograph.—New York World.

Important Correction.

Under the "Terror," in France, people learned to be excessively cautious in all they said, and still more cautious in what they wrote.

An old letter is said to be in existence of the revolutionary period, in which the author had at first written to a friend, "I write under the reign of a great emotion."

Then, apparently reflecting that it was dangerous to speak of "reigns" at such an epoch, he amended the sentence thus:

"I write under the republic of a great emotion."

COLONY IS A SUCCESS.

Old Soldiers at Home in Their Southern Garden Spot.

For several months past the industrial, sanitary, financial and other conditions existing in what is known as the Old Soldiers' colony, at Fitzgerald, Ga., have been under investigation at the hands of interested parties, and it is stated that intelligently applied industry and perseverance are working far towards making of one of the favored garden spots of the South an ideal home for survivors of the war. The plan of the community was devised by P. H. Fitzgerald, of Indianapolis, in 1884. Connected with the pension service for years this gentleman incorporated a company with a capital stock of half a million dollars, interested veterans and others, and purchased 34,000 acres near Tifton. A town site was laid out, parcels of ground allotted, and 9,500 people now live within its five-mile radius. Of the heads of families recorded on the books of the company 2,625 are old soldiers. Letters and applications now on file indicate that there will be a great influx this fall, and a population of 30,000 is not improbable. Another colony project is now under way to establish a village at Evergreen Landing, nine miles east of Fitzgerald, to consist solely of residences and hotels and to be a pleasure resort.

The site of the city of Fitzgerald is in Irwin County, Georgia, 117 miles south of Macon, and 130 miles west of Savannah. The country is geatly rolling, with numerous small creeks, and is known as the "wire grass" belt of the State, having an elevation of 480 feet above the sea level. There is a home market for all soil products, ample transportation facilities, the colonists are contented, and those coming from the West declare themselves benefited by the change in climate. One thousand acres comprise the foundation of the future city. It is a perfect square, one and one-fourth miles each way. In it are 5,008 business and residence lots. Six months ago the place was a forest of pine trees. Now, there are a thousand houses, most of them unpainted, and as yellow as when the lumber left the saw mill. The stumps of the cut-down trees still mark the site of the forest. People have been too busy to burn them out. Stumps still stand in many of the streets—the road simply flanks them; style in houses is entirely subservient to utility. No time has been wasted in frills of any kind. The present rate of building is three houses a day.

The original plan to provide veterans with a cheap home, where they could by a little labor, in addition to their pension money, acquire comfort and independence, bids fair to be carried out successfully. Those living on the farming tracts can readily raise profitable produce, and many of those in the adjacent city of Fitzgerald can engage in light outside occupation, or start a small store or shop, there being 218 business enterprises already in operation, including mills, agencies, lumber yards, factories, markets, offices and little shops of various kinds.

The selling of stock by the colony company began over a year ago. Purchasers were first privileged to pay for their holdings in installments of $1 per month per share (no one being permitted to hold over ten shares), but this plan was soon abandoned, it being decided that a subscriber to five shares who could not pay $50 down was not a desirable member of the colony. At the time of subscribing for stock the holders indicated the class into which they desired to be put; whether they wanted a residence or a business lot in the new town, wherever it might be, or a five, ten, twenty, thirty or forty acre tract just outside the town site. These various tracts were to be in tiers, the town site being surrounded by a strip of five-acre tracts, these in turn by one still larger, and so on to the limit of the 100,000 acres. Lots or land were to be charged up to stockholders at the purchase price and fully paid for at the end of the life of the colony originally estimated at six years, but since cut down to two. It was and is now expected the dividends arising from the sale of lands not allotted to colony members will take care of these payments.

While the town is comparatively new the people must of course be fairly liberal buyers, for they are in no sense producers, but these conditions are destined to an inevitable change. Gardens are being made and crops are being planted on many of the larger tracts which have already been cleared.

In many respects the conditions are not those found in any other kind of a colony. There are some 600 old soldiers in Fitzgerald, and at a moderate estimate some $10,000 is distributed monthly in the shape of pension money. No one man is paid oftener than quarterly, but they are paid through so many different disbursing offices that a considerable number of the colonists have money to put in circulation every month. Every merchant figures on getting a certain proportion of this fund.

Fitzgerald has been a "boom" town, against the wishes of its founders, and is so still.

Speculators have come in, and, while they form an undesirable element, they have helped advertise the place and build it up. Living there is at present rather high, butter selling for 35 cents a pound, coffee 45 cents, and milk is extremely scarce at 10 cents a quart. When the primitive stage is passed, however, it is certain that prices and supply will be adjusted to a far more equitable and satisfactory basis.

Don't let a fool annoy you; work him. In case you can accumulate a little sense yourself, a fool is a great blessing.

COURT.

Work began yesterday briskly and cases were called up and such preliminare steps taken as were needed. The trial about the "late horse" between Evanson and Showalter, is set to be tried before Judge Adair, as Judge Peufield had been a counsel in the case when it came up before. The Jackson township cases over matters connected with the business of ex-trustee Walter, may be tried before a referee, as it is claimed it would simplify matters and entail less expense than to have a regular jury trial.

In the afternoon the grand jury got at work, and witnesses were examined in the matter of the robbing of Wm. Wise and Tom Leeson up in Troy township. This happened about a year ago. Mr. Wise had just gone to bed that evening, and his daughter, a young lady, who has kept house for him since his wife died some time ago, was at work in the pantry. Suddenly three strangers entered, and covered Mr. Wise with a revolver, and ordered him to lie still. He made no outcry, but insisted on sitting up in bed. He told the men he had but a little change, and this they got. They then took what the young lady had, and an old watch. But she managed to save a gold watch she had. They at once left, and went to Thomas Leeson's. Old Mrs. Leeson resisted their demand for money, but they knocked her down and were beating her, when Mr. Leeson came to her aid. Though about 80, he attacked the fellows, and got one of them down, and would have pounded him in good shape, but the other two, struck him on the head and hands till he had to let go. Both the old folks were now helpless, and the thieves took all the money they could find—nearly $30. Since then but little has been learned about them, till now it is believed they have the right men. The hope is, that the grand jury may be able to get at the truth and the scoundrels be punished.

To-day there was an unusal number of attorneys from outside the county, in attendance. They were: Judge Morris, Judge Ninde and Judge Chapin of Fort Wayne: Judge Hammond and W. V. Stuart of Lafayette: Robert P. Barr of Kendallville, H. G. Zimmerman of Albion, Hon. W. F. McNagny and Hon. A. A. Adams of Columbia City, Hon. Wm. M. Brown and F. S. Roby, of Angola.

Mean if True

It is rumored that a man in the west part of town played a practical joke on his wife the other day. On retiring at night she placed her false teeth on the bureau, and when he came home a little later "from the lodge" he saw them. A bright (?) idea came into his head. He removed the teeth and and put a horse shoe in the same place. The next day his wife complained that her teeth did not fit. They had biscuit for dinner and she took a big bite out of one of them. The big swath cut by the toe cork of that horse shoe gave the whole thing away. There may be an extra divorce case in court this term.

Committee Meeting!

As noted in brief Saturday, the democratic committeemen met in Auburn that afternoon, May 16, to settle the time and place of the county convention. Chairman Fredericks and Secretary Wagner were present, and the former called the meeting to order in the court room at two p. m. The roll call showed a few absentees, but all the townships were represented except Butler and Stafford. Later on Butler was represented under the usual rule, that any democrats present from a given township could represent the township in case the regular committeeman was not present. It was also decided that a part of a township's committee could cast the full vote. It was decided that ten votes, or a fraction of a half that number or over, as cast for secretary of state at the election of 1894, should be the basis for choosing delegates. The location of the convention was fixed at Auburn, by a vote of 21½ as against 13½ for Garrett, and the date fixed at June 20. On all these questions there were lively debates by Kelham, Fredericks, Picker, Gengler Moody, McEnterfer and several others. There was a large attendance and the feeling was good. The chairman will probably issue the call in a few days, as well as the call for the delegate caucuses.

BUTLER.

Mrs. Hannah Dickerhooff, of Garrett, Sundayed with her daughter, Mrs. Ellen Hollinger.

Mr. Fanning, the temperance lecturer, with his troupe of singers, and stereopticon views, has held nightly meetings in Butler during the past week. While their efforts have been of a high order and eminently worthy, they have been but meagerly patronized. They closed their efforts last Monday night before a good house. The temperance cause, second only to that of religion, seems to be lagging in interest, while the saloon is as noisy as ever.

Geo. Geddes has assumed almost entire control at Stone's drug store on account of Mr. Stone's delicate health.

Apportionment.

Since our item a few days ago, as to the result of the apportionment suit, we have read the full opinion on which the result rested. The court holds, that if the apportionment law of 1885, should be held unconstitutional, there would be left no apportionment law on our statute books. For all apportionment laws since that date have already been declared unconstitutional, and also the one before it, that of 1879. And we could not go back and use the acts on this subject previous to 1879 because they were all based on an enumeration "white voters" only, and this "white" in the constitution was wiped out by the constitutional amendment of 1881. So the court will not say the law of 1885 is bad, because if that should be wiped out, there would be no law under which a legislature could be elected, and without a legislature to make appropriations etc, the other branches of state government would fail. The framers of the constitution never intended that such a state of things should be permitted to arise. And as to the other part of this suit, which was to compel the governor to call the legislature together, the court held that there was no law by which he could be forced to do this, as it was plainly left to his discretion. He could call it together, or refuse to do so, as he pleased. And one branch of the state government, (court,) could not coerce another branch (the governor,) in a matter over which he alone had control. So, without saying whether the law of 1885, was constitutional or not, they do say that even a defective law is better than no law at all. So the elections this fall will be under the law of 1885 and the twenty-five hold-over senators will be allowed their seats. So we elect twenty-five new senators, and 100 representatives. And as the COURIER has often shown, this next winter is the only legal time to make a state apportionment. A congressional apportionment can be made any time.

—Here is a bit of information that will be of interest and great value to all our readers. Inasmuch as frost has been predicted for this month it would be well for the people to know just how to save their grape vines. Mr. Hirons says that if people will spray their grape vines with cold water before the sun comes up in the morning the frost will have no effect upon them. This is a very simple remedy and will be well worth trying.

Hon. J. B. White is going about declaring that business will not be good, till we have more silver dollars. Wouldn't more paper dollars, or more gold dollars do the business as well as silver? We already have fifty-two times as many silver dollars, as we had previous to what is claimed to be the demonetization of silver in 1873. If one silver dollar before 1873, made good times, surely 52 silver dollars now ought to do some good. The trouble must be looked for at some other place. And now we think if it. J. B. White owns a national bank, and we venture to say those who borrow money of him have give to notes payable in gold. Preaching is so much different from practice.

A New York newspaper mentions George Munro, founder of the dime novel, in the same breath with Dante, Homer, Burns, Milton, Keats and Poe, as "one of the benefactors of the human race." Who did Munro ever benefact other than the venders of bowie knives, Winchester rifles, sombreros and war paint?

An Ohio man shut himself up in his office safe in order to avoid the solicitations of a life insurance agent. The latter was patient and remained in the office over an hour, and when he departed it was discovered that the man in the safe was unconscious. He is in a very critical condition and liable to die, and his family are very sorry that the life insurance man didn't catch him for a big policy. We expect to see this story in the repertoire of every enterprising life insurance man.

The New York Sun takes an extreme illustration to bring into disrepute the methods for "spelling reform" that are being urged by Funk and Wagnalls. Rule 1 is all the Sun was asked to subscribe to and this rule is: "Change final ed to t when so pronounced; and, if a double consonant precedes, drop one of the consonants." An unadorned refusal would have filled all the requirements of the case, but instead the Sun takes this passage: "He pressed her to his bosom and asked her to be his bride. Without a word she suddenly bussed him on the mouth." And declines to aid the reform because the rules would make the passage read: "He prest her to his bosom and askt her to be his bride. Without a word she suddenly bust him on the mouth." This is trifling with a great movement. The situation would not arise that would make this passage possible. In such a case she would not buss him on the mouth, but invite him to do the bussing. But even if she bussed him, a man who defers asking her to be his bride until he has pressed her to his bosom deserves to be bust.

A recent Colorado bank failure was due, as a great many others have been, mainly to the fact that the officers were devoting themselves largely to outside speculation instead of attending strictly to business. It does not pay to have too many irons in the fire. Some of the largest and most influential operators learn the lesson by bitter experience. Not long ago a big Chicago packer saw Stock Exchange operators were paying 9 per cent. interest for carrying and transferring trades around the end of each month, and so he thought he saw a good chance to profitably employ some capital. He went into the money-lending business on a large scale, but soon found that in giving necessary accommodations to traders he was getting excessive interest part of the time and no interest at all a part of the time, and it did not take him long to see that it was not such a snap as it had looked from the outside. It is always so. Some other fellow's business, of which one can only see the showy side, always looks inviting, and people are continually enticed into placing their money into things which, if understood as well as their own affairs, they would never touch. Experimental losses are made continually by men of great wealth, but they can usually stand it, whereas the small fry who tail on after them "go broke" over and over again.

One hundred years ago in Franklin, Mass., Horace Mann was born. His life was too full of devotion to humanity for him to be forgotten. "Be ashamed to die until you have won some victory for humanity," he said to his graduating class at Antioch College. This was the keynote of his own existence, and, actually by his own hard experiences in the way of knowledge, he left the greatest impress of his time upon the cause of education. As student, lawyer, educator, abolitionist and politician he remained always close to his charge, and while secretary of the Massachusetts State Board of Education he did perhaps his fullest work. He said of this time, between June, 1837, and May, 1828, when he tendered his resignation to the board: "I labored in this cause an average of not less than fifteen hours a day; from the beginning to the end of this period I never took a single day for relaxation, and months and months together passed without my withdrawing a single evening to call upon a friend." In these busy years his influences for education were impressed upon the statutes of the old Bay State; he instituted the normal school; he established county educational conventions; he did much to abrogate corporal punishment in schools, and by his lectures and writings he awakened an interest in education such as never before had been aroused. Observances of such anniversaries as this of Horace Mann are not only commendable, as in keeping with the influences of the man's life, but in this particular case the observance appeals to a young generation which is more susceptible to the spirit of gratitude and quicker to respond to its benignity than are many of larger growth.

Another story of oriental intrigue and treachery is put on record with the death of the Shah of Persia at the hand of a revolutionary fanatic. The assassin who sought his life found him entering a shrine near Teheran and killed him instantly. Nasir-ed-Din, Shah, who was not a Persian, but a Turk by descent, was the fourth sovereign of the Kajar dynasty, the ruling family in Persia for over 100 years. He entered upon his reign in 1848, and, considering the absolutely despotic powers which he wielded, it must be conceded that he was a fairly humane and responsible ruler. The entire governing system of Persia embraces a series of autocrats, ranging from the Shah to the head men of the small villages. Each potentate is a law unto himself, the only check upon his actions being the fear of the greater potentates above. Over all these the Shah is absolutely supreme, and the one restraining influence upon him is the necessity of preserving some sort of standing in foreign opinion. The shrewdness of the dead Shah was shown in the fashion in which he observed European customs on his various incursions into lands of modern civilization and the way in which he imbibed the lessons of diplomacy. The Shah, with all his vagaries and shortcomings and his semi-barbaric manners, is conceded to have been one of the firmest and least tyrannical rulers Persia has had, and there will be considerable doubt whether his successor will prove to be so satisfactory. The heir apparent, who, by the way, is not the eldest of the Shah's sons, is Muzaffer-ed-Din. He was born in 1853, and in accordance with Persian custom has been kept in partial sequestration. It is doubtless due to this fact that Europe has heard so many various stories as to his mental incapacity and unfitness for rulership. The Hon. George Curzon is authority for the statement that the young heir is in reality a man of considerable intelligence and breadth and a capacity for adopting European ideas. However this may be, a change of dynasty in Persia, with the immemorial Oriental habits of intrigue and assassination is never accomplished without some disturbance, and the young Shah's path will not be without difficulties. He has neither the experience nor the range of observation which enabled the dead Shah to govern Persia with reasonable success.

HAS BUT TWO LEGS.

Remarkable Specimen of the Canine Family in Pennsylvania.

One of the most remarkable freaks ever seen is that of a two-legged dog, the property of Ed Lindsey, living near Bellefont, Pa. This wonderful specimen of the canine family has excited much curiosity. The freak is perfectly formed in every way, with the exception that where the front legs should be there are only small tufts of hair. The parents are both well developed and perfectly formed.

It looks not unlike the kangaroo when walking, but when lying down there is no distinguishing appearance from any other dog. Half rat-terrier and half whiffet, it is now almost full grown and weighs perhaps fifteen pounds. It is in excellent health and lively and frisky as a dog could well be. Its manner of locomotion is very much kangaroo-like, though at times, when frightened, it attempts to walk as the other dogs, and then its body is propelled along the ground by its abnormally long hind legs, and at such times the shoulder blades which seem well developed, are seen to work with great rapidity.

A Lee-Metford Bullet.

Prof. Boys, of London, recently delivered an illustrated lecture in which he showed photographs of the Lee-Metford bullet as it passed through a quarter-inch sheet of glass. Just before the bullet touched the sheet the air wave cut a disk of glass about half an inch in diameter clean out. At the same time the glass around the hole was crushed into powder and driven back at an extremely rapid rate. The glass stuck to the bullet for a short time after it had passed through, the disk being driven out in front of the "bow wave." In this experiment the waves caused by the vibrations of the glass were plainly shown. A photograph of the bullet after it had cleared the glass by nine inches showed the remainder of the glass intact, but when the bullet had proceeded another sixteen inches the sheet of glass was seen to break and fall in fragments.—Philadelphia Record.

FEEL A WIND'S FURY.

DESTRUCTIVE CYCLONES SWEEP MANY STATES.

Storms Accompanied by Lightning Create Heavy Damage—Residences, Trees and Crops Mixed Up in Confusion—A Farmer Rides the Tempest.

Long Drought Is Broken.

TORNADO and cyclone held high carnival Tuesday afternoon, and many localities felt the wind's destructive fury. At Lincoln, Neb., a terrific storm of wind, needing only the rotary motion to make it a genuine cyclone, prevailed between 4 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon. The force of the wind was terrific, registering for five minutes a velocity of eighty miles an hour. Houses and barns were wrecked or damaged all over the city. Many persons were hurt, but no lives were lost. The heaviest property loss in the city was sustained by the Merchants' Hotel, the roof being blown off, windows shattered and the whole building flooded by the rain that followed. The roof of the Burr-Muir Block was blown off and part of one wall demolished. Heavy boards from the roof were carried across 9th street through the heavy plate-glass windows of the State Journal Building. At the hospital for the insane the electric light plant was razed and is a total wreck. Houses all over the city suffered the loss of roofs and other damage. These were broken off or uprooted and fences leveled, making many streets for two or three blocks almost impassable. Following the wind the rain fell in torrents.

A terrific hail and wind storm swept over Omaha. Rain fell almost incessantly for forty-eight hours, but the downpour Tuesday was the heaviest in recent years.

No considerable damage resulted, but cellars were inundated, small buildings toppled over, small streams overflowed, trees broken and sign boards and chimneys blown away.

A destructive cyclone struck near Elkhorn, Neb., the same afternoon. A funnel-shaped cloud shot downward from the storm center, and a general stampede of citizens for caves and cellars ensued. At the schoolhouse the children fled panic-stricken to the furnace-room. The scene at the schoolhouse was one of the wildest confusion. The cyclone struck the ground in a pasture just north of the town. Its course was northwest. The path of the storm was from 200 to 300 yards wide, and everything in its path was razed to the ground. Carl Johnson had a team attached to a wagon, and behind the wagon led another team. Before he was aware of it the storm was upon him. He endeavored to skirt it by driving onto a meadow to the westward, but before he could lash his horses out of the way of the rapidly approaching hurricane he was caught in its vortex, and man, horses and wagon were carried through space, together with fence boards, posts, wire and other debris. Mr. Johnson escaped serious injury.

After traversing a distance of about two miles the funnel-shaped cloud arose as suddenly as it had shot down to the earth and at a point five or six miles farther to the northwest dropped again to the earth. Following the tornado was a heavy fall of rain.

Residences Torn to Splinters.

At Worthington, Minn., the new residence of W. M. Guise was completely demolished. The family were at supper when the storm struck. A little boy was struck on the head by flying debris and severely hurt. This was the only instance of injury to people living in the path of the storm, but there were many narrow escapes. The residences of P. B. Curtis and Stephen Mack were also demolished, and the damage was completed by the heavy fall of rain that succeeded the wind storm.

A storm visited Racine, Wis., between 8 and 9 o'clock in the evening which developed into a cloudburst. It lasted fully two hours and vast quantities of rain fell. In many places the water was even with the curbing on the main streets, and in low lands it was three feet deep. Cellars were flooded and altogether it was the greatest downpour known in years. It was accompanied by thunder and lightning, and the Engel brewery, on Douglass avenue, was struck and entirely consumed, entailing a loss of $3,000.

A cyclone passed five miles north of Sterling, Kan., in the vicinity of Cow Creek, coming from the southwest and demolishing almost everything in its path. The houses of Logan Zerbe, Levi Wagner, Robert Deemer and others were badly wrecked. It is believed no one was killed. Considerable stock was killed.

A heavy windstorm passed over Council Bluffs about 5 o'clock. One electric light tower was blown down, and the rainfall was the heaviest in years. Reports from the surrounding country say the storm was very destructive to fruit trees.

A small cyclone visited the eastern section of Illinois and Western Indiana Tuesday night. The heaviest rainfall accompanied by hail that ever visited the district is reported.

SECOND CITY ON EARTH.

That Is What the Legislature Has Made New York.

The bill which is intended to enlarge the municipality of New York and make it the second largest city in the world has received the signature of the Governor and is now law.

The Greater New York bill provides for the consolidation of New York city, Kings County, Richmond County (Staten Island), Long Island City, Newtown, Flushing, Jamaica and part of the town of Hempstead. This territory embraces a population of over 3,000,000. The bill establishes a commission, to consist of Andrew H. Green and Mayor Strong of New York, Mayor Wurster of Brooklyn, Mayor Gleason of Long Island City, State Engineer Adams, Attorney General Hancock and nine other persons to be selected by the Governor, who shall be residents of the Greater New York territory. This commission is to prepare a charter for the great municipality and submit it to the Legislature before Feb. 1, 1897, with such bills as will, upon their proper enactment, make Greater New York an established fact. Meanwhile, and until Jan. 1, 1898, the local administration and government of the several cities, towns and villages to be embraced in the enlarged municipality shall remain unchanged. A mayor and other officers for the Greater New York are to be elected in the fall of 1897. It is intended that the official existence of the municipality shall begin Jan. 1, 1898. The present county organizations shall continue within the territory of Greater New York.

The bill was introduced early in the present session of the Legislature and passed through the Senate and Assembly as a Republican party measure. When submitted to the Mayors of New York, Brooklyn and Long Island City for their approval, Strong and Wurster, Republicans, vetoed it, while Gleason, Democrat, approved of the measure. Last week the Legislature again passed the bill over the vetoes, and now Gov. Morton has affixed his signature.

FLYING MACHINE FLIES.

Professor Langley of Washington Succeeds in Startling the World

A flying machine that flies is the latest achievement of science. No less a person than Prof. Samuel P. Langley, secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, Washington, is the inventor of the successful and wonderful machine, for which the world has been watching and waiting all these years. Prof. Alexander Graham Bell was associated with Prof. Langley in the secret test which is now made public, and these two eminent men startle the world by the remarkable statements they make. The machine is called an "aerodrome." It is the result of years of experiment made by Prof. Langley, who always has been a firm believer in the eventual practical use of aerial vehicles. The eminent scientist for a long period has been making his experiments near Occoquan, Va. Last Wednesday Prof. Bell was present when the climax came, and he realized the tremendous importance of the success of Prof. Langley's experiment.

The aerodome, or flying machine, has no gas to lift it, as in the case of a balloon, but on the contrary, is about 1,000 times heavier, bulk for bulk, than the air on which it is made to run and which sustains it somewhat in the way in which thin ice supports a swift skater. The power is derived from a steam engine, through the means of propellers.

A VETERAN BASE-BALL PLAYER

Adrian C. Anson Has Probably Played His Last Game.

It is probable that one of the landmarks of the national game has stepped down and out. Adrian C. Anson, the old ball player and young actor, has, if the news is true, played his last game of baseball. After a quarter of a century on the diamond he has gone to the bench. The lovers of the game will be sorry to hear this. The big first baseman, although gruff and sometimes stubborn, was always as straight in his dealings as a "yard of pump water." No one can pick a flaw in his record. He is the soul of honor, and is a credit to the national game. Although his colossal form will perhaps never again loom up on the right-hand corner of the diamond and the pitchers will no longer fear Anson's turn at the bat, he is not out of the game entirely. He will be with his Chicago Colts through thick and thin. He will be in the game every day in the capacity of an active manager. Anson is the last of the old guard to give up the diamond. Not one of the players that started out as professional ball players when he did is now in the business. Anson saw hundreds of players come and go from the league, but he held on so tenaciously that people came to think that he was to go on forever. The reports say that he has decided to retire in favor of a younger and more active man. Here is hoping that the game will be blessed with many more Ansons.

The British fruit steamer which went ashore off Highland light was the Forest Home from Mediterranean ports. She was floated without damage.

AMAZING MENDACITY.

DISPROVED CLAIMS OF REPUBLICANS.

That Party Has Been One of Extravagance, Repudiation, and Panic-Breeding Financial Stupidity—Protection Leads to Inevitable Disaster

Historical Indiana Whoop-'er-Ups.

Indiana Republicans are singularly successful in epitomizing what they ask people to believe is the history of their party. "From Lincoln to Harrison," they say, "under a wise policy of protection and reciprocity, we steadily decreased our bonded debt, resumed specie payments, maintained the public credit, kept unimpaired the gold reserve, increased the wealth of the whole country and added to the comfort and happiness of the people to a degree unparalleled in the history of nations."

"We" Republicans did all this, of course. The industry, skill, enterprise and inventive faculty of the people irrespective of party do not count. It was the "wise policy of protection and reciprocity" that did it all. And, strangely enough, the reciprocity, which was not thought of until 1890, and then only as a vote-catching device, is, so far as it goes, the diametrical opposite and contradiction of protection.

"We" steadily decreased our bonded debt. But who increased that debt from a mere trifle in 1860 to more than $2,700,000,000? "We" maintained the public credit. But who brought it so low that greenbacks were worth at one time no more than 37 cents on the dollar and bonds were worth no more than greenbacks? "We" resumed specie specie payments. But who suspended in 1862 and continued the suspension for nearly seventeen years, even repudiating the promise to give bonds for the irredeemable greenbacks? "We" kept unimpaired the gold reserve. But where was that reserve before 1878 and who sent it flying in 1890?

The Indiana epitome of Republican party history if it had been put forth in 1877, after the party had been in full control for sixteen years, would have been regarded as the work of a bitter enemy, full of broad irony and derision. Indiana Republicans now send it forth in all seriousness, trusting to the short memory of the American public.

This historical work is equaled in the wild whoop for McKinley with which the Indiana platform ends. In this the Ohio Napoleon is described as "one who, at 17, fought with Hayes and Crook and Sheridan at Antietam and in the Shenandoah in the defense of our flag against foes within, and for fourteen years in Congress contended against our country's foes from without, beating back British free trade and aggression."

It appears from this that the Indiana Republican idea of foes from without is that of people who offer to sell us things that we want to buy. In like manner the German landlords look upon us as foes from without because we offer to sell beef, pork, wheat and some other things that the people of Germany would be glad to buy from us because we offer to sell at prices they can afford to pay.

The British people buy from us more than half of all the products we sell to foreigners and more than they buy from the people of any other one country. According to the Indiana Republican idea, we are their worst foes from without, and if they were to serve us as McKinley would serve them we would have a great deal of stuff left on our hands for which we now have a good market. How would the Hoosier Republican statesmen like that? Would they not howl louder than ever for a tremendous navy wherewith to batter down the walls and open British ports to American products? There's not a doubt of it.

False Protectionist Claims Exposed.

The McKinley organs are claiming that the repeal of the duty on wool has caused a large reduction in the number of sheep in the United States. As proof of their assertion they quote from a recent report of the Department of Agriculture, which shows a decline of about four million sheep during the year 1895, as compared with 1894. This is alleged to have been wholly due to the Wilson tariff, and the wool growers are urged to vote for protection and restoration of the duty on wool.

While it is true that there has been a falling off in the number of sheep during the past year, it is not true that the decrease was caused by the Wilson tariff. The business depression which prevailed throughout the country in the last two years of the McKinley law, was chiefly responsible for the low prices of wool and mutton which led to a reduction in the wool-growers' flocks. The revival of business which followed the adoption of the tariff of 1894 has not yet had time to bring about the better conditions in the wool industry, which will undoubtedly come with the rapidly increasing demand for wool. If trade and manufacturing are left undisturbed by high tariff agitators, the American sheep-raisers will soon be more prosperous than under McKinleyism. To show that the number of sheep in any one year does not depend upon wool duties, it is only necessary to give the official figures during certain years when protection was in full force. Thus, in 1884 there were in the United States 59,626,600 sheep. In 1887 there were only 44,759,314, and by 1889 the number had fallen to 42,599,079, a reduction from 1884 of over eight million. Will some high taxationist explain this great falling off while there was a heavy duty on wool? Why did American sheep growing decline so rapidly under the alleged stimulation of taxes on foreign wools? If it is free trade which has caused the decrease in sheep during the past year, what caused the greater reduction in years of Republican protection?

To Whom McKinley Is Indebted.

McKinley has not yet won, the Boston Transcript (Rep.) says. "We are yet to see, as the race narrows down, just how much fighting power exists in the ranks of those who believe that there are other Republicans far better fitted to meet the present emergency than the Ohio politician, whose reputation for statesmanship is altogether inflated and artificial. This must be said of Mr. McKinley, that he has had for eighteen months past an active corps of astute and well-drilled workers in all parts of the country—men who ordinarily don't work for patriotic love of the country solely. And a question of considerable importance for the country connects itself with that fact, viz.: How are these men to be paid, by office or legislation?"

Another Republican Gone Wrong.

Ex-Mayor Charles A. Schieren, of Brooklyn, one of the largest leather manufacturers in the country, was recently interviewed by a New York Tribune reporter in reference to the attitude of business men on the agitation for a higher tariff. Mr. Schieren's reply was brief but emphatic. He said: "What business needs now most of all is to have the tariff left severely alone. I am convinced that our industries have nothing to fear from foreign competition. With our highly skilled workmen and improved machinery we can compete with the products of any part of the world."

This is the impartial testimony of a practical business man, who three years ago was elected the Republican Mayor of the fourth largest city in America. He certainly cannot be accused of being a Democratic partisan, and his sensible views should therefore carry weight with merchants and manufacturers everywhere. As a large exporter of leather he knows what he is talking about when he says we can now compete with other countries. He also knows that if McKinley is elected President he must, if consistent with his promises of protection to farmers, see that a tariff tax is imposed on foreign hides which now come in free. This would be a serious blow to our leather industry; would practically kill our export trade in leather, and would greatly injure our manufacturers of boots and shoes. This is a prospect which has no charms for Mr. Schieren, so, although he is a good Republican, he joins the Democrats in opposing the agitation for McKinleyite tariff tinkering. Is his counsel not wiser than that of the office-seeking politicians and monopoly organs which are howling for higher taxes?

Free Wool for Japan.

A new danger confronts us. Those terrible Japanese have put wool on their free list! Taxing wool, of which it is impossible that any nation should ever be able to supply itself with all desirable varieties, is one of the barbarities long ago abandoned by the more civilized nations of Europe. In this country wool was taxed for political reasons. It was thought that the farmer, robbed in every direction by tariff duties on the articles of his consumption, might be placated and silenced by a tax on imported wool. When the farmers began to study the tariff question, and to measure their tariff advantages against their tariff disadvantages, the wool was literally pulled from their eyes.

The acute Japanese have been swift to see the disadvantage of taxing a raw material. It is a most striking commentary on the political and commercial tendencies of the time that at the moment when these remarkable people are striking down the shackles of trade a powerful party in the United States should take up the cudgels to restore them!—Philadelphia Record.

Buncoing a Green-Goods Gang.

The wire nail trust has been the victim of a heartless bit of jobbery. The jobbers, it appears, have been getting the nails for export at a dollar a keg less than the American citizen who basks in the sunshine of protection has to pay for them, and have accordingly been shipping them to Hamburg, where they have been reshipped to this country without unloading and sold in the home market for $1.90 a keg, or 55 cents less than they would cost a mere American at the factory. The moral is that nails are not sufficiently protected! If the present tariff can give them such an export and import trade, a tariff twice as stiff would evidently double it. —Philadelphia Record.

Factions Alone Threaten Democracy.

The results of the town elections show that the Democrats of Indiana have every reason to buckle on their armor and go in to win this fall. If factional disturbances are pushed aside there is no reason why Indiana should not go on record against a restoration of McKinley taxes and the perpetuation of a Congress which does nothing except for the benefit of the privileged classes.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

Foraker's Loyalty Rather Leaky.

Since Mr. Foraker's visit to Mr. Platt there is a growing belief out in Ohio that his "loyalty" should be deposited with some reliable cold storage company. It is to be hoped that the knife will not drop out of Foraker's sleeve while he is nominating McKinley.—New York Journal.

BAD FLOUR DETECTED

PROCESS OF MOST SCIENTIFIC EXACTITUDE.

The "Tester" Can Tell if Their Is a Slight Change in the Manufacture of the Flour—Is an Analyst, a Miller and a Baker.

A Test Made Each Morning.

In a building in Minneapolis is a man who has the power to say that this flour can be manufactured and this cannot. He is the flour inspector, and each morning gives some attention to the samples that are brought to him to test. He can tell when the slightest change has been made at the mill, and often orders a mill not to manufacture a certain kind of flour. This inspector of necessity is an analyst, a miller and a baker.

It is the duty of this tester or "inspector," as he is technically known, to take these samples of wheat each day and ascertain first what proportion of gluten light and dark, what proportion of pure starch, and what of mixed starch and gluten they contain. The germ at the center of the kernel is the vital life principle; the gluten is the most important commercial as well as economic element, that which makes for wealth of purse and health of body, and mind as well.

In the inspector's room at one hand is a tiny roller mill, run by electricity, a duplicate, in miniature, of the grinding machinery of the large mill. The wheat from one of the sacks is ground in this mill, the steel rollers crushing the kernels into a flaky dust. Below the rollers are silk sieves which separate the bran from the flour. When the flour has been secured it is washed thoroughly—so completely that the starch and the gluten are wholly separated. There must be not less than 46 per cent. of gluten in the flour to keep up the required standard, and the inspector knows when he has finished his washing, by the amount of the gluten residuum, whether the wheat of the day is up to the required standard in this respect or not.

The gluten thickens or solidifies into a little patty, about the size of a toothsome marshmallow, and about the color of a maple sugar caramel, but having more nutriment in it than all the candy you could eat in a month. It is very nearly the color of the wheat kernel as it lies in a round disc on the piece of silk where it has been collected.

But not only must the inspector know by color, weight and consistency as to the quality of the gluten—he must bake it as well.

The inspector carefully weighs out sixteen ounces of flour. It must be exact to the fraction of a gram. He mixes this with water in a white earthen bowl, ten ounces of water to the sixteen of flour. He is planning for a pound loaf, and when he turns it out of the tin fully baked it will be such a one—if the flour is what it should be. He does not knead the flour at all—singular statement to a housewife—he pulls it, as candy is pulled. Fifty pulls mixes it thoroughly.

THE ELECTRIC OVEN.

At the end of sixty minutes the loaf is found to be baked through and through, with no trace of dough or heaviness. Then it must be weighed and measured. It must be so many inches high, so many long; so many inches around it one way, so many the other. This loaf of bread is subject to iron-clad rules from the time it enters the tiny mill as wheat until it stands before the inspector as a finished loaf.

When the loaf is cooled it is cut open for inspection. It must be of just the right hue, inside as well as out. If the inspector finds it has a peculiarly white interior, he knows that there is too much starch, too little gluten. Your ideal flour does not make the chalky white bread so many people have come to consider the best.

All around the inspector's rooms are shelves on which are glass jars of samples of each day's flour. Each sample is labeled with the details of the various tests. The jars are kept six months. If in that time a dealer in Liverpool or Havana, or New York, or some little Iowa town for that matter, reports that his patrons complain of the flour ground on a certain date, a request is made for a sample of the flour.

When it is received the inspector subjects it to precisely the same test he gives to all his flour. Then, after he has washed and baked and color-tested it, he takes the little record jar showing what the flour of the mills was like on the day of the manufacture of this particular lot of flour and compares this record with that of the test of the flour under suspicion. Immediately he knows from the agreement or the disparity of the two flours whether the consumer has made groundless complaint or whether some unscrupulous dealer is trying to palm off an inferior grade of flour upon the consumer Electrical Dentistry.

Electricity is now employed by dentists in extracting teeth. To the battery are attached three wires. Two of them have handles at the end, while the third is attached to the forceps. The patient grasps the handles, the electricity is turned on suddenly, and the dentist simultaneously applies his forceps to the tooth. The instant the tooth is touched it, as well as the surrounding parts, becomes insensible to pain. A jerk and it is out.—Popular Science News.

BACKACHE.

A Very Significant Indication of Organic Derangement.

The back, "the mainspring of woman's organism," quickly calls attention to trouble by aching. It tells with other symptoms, such as nervousness, headache, pains in loins, and weight in lower part of body, blues and "all gone" feeling, that nature requires assistance, and at once. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for twenty years has been the one and only effective remedy in such cases. It speedily removes the cause and effectually restores the organs to a healthy and normal condition. Mrs. Pinkham cheerfully answers all letters from ailing women who require advice, without charge. Thousands of cases like this are recorded.

"I have taken one-half dozen bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it has relieved me from all pain. I cannot tell you the agony I endured for years; pains in my back (Oh, the backache was dreadful!) and bearing-down pains in the abdomen extending down into my limbs; headache and nausea, and very painful menstruations. I had grown very thin, a mere shadow of my former self. Now I am without a single pain and am gaining in flesh rapidly."—MATTIE GLENN, 1561 Dudley St., Cincinnati.

LADY PAUNCEFOTE AT HOME.

THE wife of the British ambassador at Washington is deservedly one of the most highly esteemed among the women of the diplomatic circles. Lady Pauncefote does not look the "grande dame" that one is led to expect, for she is not tall and is stoutly built; but she has the air of ages of high-bred ancestry about her, and ably is she aided in the discharge of her official duties by her four charming daughters, all of whom are in society. Her ladyship is essentially a home-abiding woman, and by no means enamored of society life, though she entertains delightfully, but no oftener than diplomatic etiquette demands. She has no desire whatever to mingle in politics, as so many English women do, and believes that her duty to her position and that of her husband is discharged when she sees well to the appointments of her home, and extends a hearty welcome to their large circle of friends. She thinks that a mother has a very serious duty to perform in rearing her family to become good citizens, and that she has very nearly discharged her duty to society when the rearing is well accomplished.

There are no "official" frills about Lady Pauncefote; she is too high-bred for such snobbishness as that. She believes that a lady is a lady always, no matter what her position, and that unless she is really liked by the people nothing that she might do in an official capacity would assist her husband or make her own position any securer. Lady Pauncefote is somewhat imbued with the English idea that birth and breeding have much to do with making the lady and defining social position, and that unless there are disagreeable traits of character developed in a woman she may rest secure in whatever position she may be born. Her idea of "helping" her husband support his official position, which is one of the highest in the gift of the Queen of England, is to make his home charming for his friends and to receive his guests with courtesy and kindness.

Girls and Boys at War.

Ten young ladies belonging to the best families of the town of Baden, Beaver County, about twenty miles from Pittsburg, have organized a boycott against the young men of the place. The girls have organized what they call the "Trilby Club," have vowed "never to marry men, and won't even go with the horrid things."

The cause of this strange action on the part of the ten girls is a grievance they have nursed. It seems that the boys of the town expected the girls to make some use of their leap year privileges. The girls, on the contrary, wanted the boys to be as attentive as ever. The upshot was that indignation meetings were held, and ten of the most determined young ladies formed the "Trilby Club," and took a solemn oath never to wed.

While the weaker of the girls go on as usual, the ten members of the club have remained out of young men's society. Instead, they hold meetings at their own homes. The club is about to purchase bloomers and wheels, and enjoy life without masculine aid.

A Phosphorescent Tea.

A phosphorescent 5 o'clock tea was recently given in Paris at 8 in the evening, at which no lights were used, the light coming from the ceiling, carpets, chairs, pictures, teacups and flowers. The ladies wore phosphorescent dresses, and their faces, shoulders and arms gleamed with light. M. Henry, of the Academie des Sciences, has invented a phosphorescent starch, which was used on the occasion, and which, employed as face powder, "lends a moonlight radiance very becoming to some."—Philadelphia Record.

Taking Care of the Feet.

Low shoes should be worn instead of high ones whenever practicable, as the low shoes allow a much freer ventilation to the foot than a high boot can possibly do. Some of the most impure matter from the body exudes through the perspiration from the feet, and for this reason they should be well ventilated and washed daily with scrupulous care. The neglect of the hygiene of the feet in the matter of bathing and incasing them in close shoes, through which there is no chance of ventilation, has more to do with corns, bunions and other afflictions of the feet than the worst shoes ever invented. The perfect fitting of stockings is a very important matter, the neglect of which has much to do with the complaints of sore and tender feet that one so often hears in summer. A stocking that is too long is sure to create somewhere and irritate the foot.

Circles Around the Eyes.

The orbit of the eye is filled with cellular tissue and fat, with many blood vessels. The skin under the eyes is extremely thin, and if for any reason the blood vessels are relaxed, the venous congestion is made manifest by the dark circles under the eyes. The remedy would be, of course, to find the cause and remove it. An effort should also be made to improve the local circulation, which can be done by massage treatment. Relief may also be found in hot fomentations over the eyes; for this purpose apply flannel cloths folded into smooth, compact strips, and wrung out of water so hot that the hands cannot bear it for any length of time. Many a nervous headache, caused by close application to sewing that must be finished in a given time, may be relieved in this way.

The Bloomer Garb Must Go.

The present season will see the passing of the bloomer costume for women who ride a wheel. Leading dressmakers have set the seal of their disapproval on the bloomer costume, and therefore its days are numbered. Already the fact of the condemnation is noticeable. Society women have ordered costumes in which the bloomer has no part, and the woman of lesser note will not be slow in following their example.

A Woman Hermit.

In the northern part of Lyme, near the boundary line of Salem, Ct., in a lonely clearing, surrounded by woods, stands a dilapidated old house of the seventeenth century style, with a stone chimney on the outside at the gable end. This old house is the home of Miss Desiah Wilcox, a maiden farmer, who resides there alone. In former years she used to keep oxen and cows, and till the soil, but she is getting past heavy work, and her stock now consists of a horse and a flock of sheep. The only income derived from the farm is the annual clip of wool and what little hay or timber she may dispose of, which amounts to very little. She has lived alone since the death of her parents, and seems perfectly contented and happy.—Boston Herald.

Paralysis Follows Bloodlessness and Nervous Prostration.

A PATIENT WOMAN AFFLICTED FOR YEARS.

She Tells How at Last She Was Permanently Cured.

From the Press, New York City.

For more than fifteen years, Mrs. A. Mather, who lives at No. 43 East One Hundred and Twelfth street, New York, was a sufferer from anaemia, which, in spite of the treatment of physicians, gradually developed into nervous prostration until finally marked symptoms of paralysis set in. Mrs. Mather gladly gave the reporter her experience.

"For many years," Mrs. Mather said, "I was a constant sufferer from nervousness. It was about fifteen years ago that my condition began to grow worse. Soon I became so affected that I was prostrated and, until about two years ago, was a part of the time unable to leave my bed. I employed several physicians from time to time, my bills at the drug store for prescriptions sometimes amounting to as much as $50 a month, but all the doctors did for me did not seem to help me at all. My blood became greatly impoverished and after years of suffering I was threatened with paralysis.

"When I walked I could scarcely drag my feet along, and at times my knees would give way so that I would almost fall down. Feeling that doctors could not help me, I had little hope of recovery, until one day I read in a newspaper how a person, afflicted almost the same as I was, had been cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I purchased a box and began taking the pills. The effect of this first box pleased me so much that I bought another. Before I had taken all the pills in the first box I began to experience relief and, after the third box had been used, I was practically cured. It was really surprising what a speedy and pronounced effect the medicine had upon me.

"I always keep Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in the house now, and when I feel any symptoms of nervousness find that they give me certain relief."

When Mrs. Mather talked with the reporter she was dressed for the street, intending to go out for a walk. She looked the picture of health, far different than she did before taking the Pink Pills.

Mrs. Mather's daughter, Miss Anna, corroborated her mother's account, and told how she herself had been cured of chronic indigestion by these pills; and, too, how her cousin had been cured of anaemia in same way.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Med. Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

Borrowed Him Awhile.

A genial Philadelphian, who for obvious reasons does not care to give his name, secured a parlor car on an express train for Reading a few days ago, and as he was about to pass through the gates was surprised to hear himself accosted in a feminine tone with the question:

"Please, mister, could I borrow you for a little while?"

Looking around he found two buxom women, who hesitatingly explained that the were riding on a pass made out in the name of a gentleman and his wife; and, as the gentleman was not present, they wanted the genial-looking citizen to place his bought ticket at the disposal of one lady and take the other under his wing, while he personated the absent owner of the pass.

"Which is my wife?" he inquired with an inward qualm, lest his own absent better half should ever hear the story.

"You can take your choice, sir," said the lady in search of an escort.

He promptly did so by tucking the arm of the youngest fair one under his own and leading her into the car. The couple proved to be right jolly traveling companions, and the citizen's only regret in the transaction was due to a fear that the story might leak out and get home ahead of him. But it didn't.

RIPANS TABULES

In Machias, Me., lives Mr. E. F. Gould, who is employed as a candy maker by the firm of Means & Gardner, of that place. Speaking of Mr. Gould, his friend, Mr. E. W. Mitchell, recently said: "I have known him for some years, and until very lately I always heard him complaining about his food distressing him, and feeling more or less badly about all the time. He's work naturally keeps him confined a good deal, and he has very little chance for exercise. Lately, having heard less complaint, I thought I would call and see to what he credited his improvement. He said to me," said Mr. Mitchell, "'for years I have been troubled with indigestion and dyspepsia. At times would be dizzy and my head very dull, especially after eating. Then would have distress and palpitation, caused by gas in my stomach from food fermenting. The only thing I could find that would give me any relief was soda, and from that I got no lasting benefit, but now I have struck it rich. A Musical Education
FOR A DOLLAR.

The above heading will of course appear to most people as the height of absurdity, yet the absurdity is mose apparent than real. It goes without saying that a finished musical education in the regular course cannot be had for a dollar, or even with several hundred additional dollars, but can it be truthfully said that the person with a sufficient knowledge of music to play accompaniments readily on the piano or organ, to all the populor and standard songs of the day has no musical education? Assuredly not. A musical education sufficient to enable one to play correctly accompaniments to the song sung in the home frequently gets, and gives more pleasure from the modest accomplishment than does many on whose education hundreds of dollars have been expended.

To the more modest musical education the above heading applies. Such an education the DAILY COURIER is now enabled to offer its music loving readers for a dollar, believing that it is the greatest benefit it can give to its subscribers.

This ready made musical education consists of Pratt's Chart of Chords for the Piano and Organ, which is the nearest approach to a ready made knowledge of music yet attained by science.

It is a short cut to harmony, and is to music, what the multiplication table is to arithmetic, A quick method of learning to play the Piano or Organ without a teacher

With this chart anyone can with but a small amount of practice become an expert pianist. It is a complete self instructor, enabling anyone to play the piano or organ at sight and to play without difficulty brilliant accompaniments to any song ever written. It is valuable to the well advanced masician, as well as the beginner, embracing nearly every major and minor chord used in music, and is endorsed by teachers and musicians everywhere.

This chart is the practical result of years of study by Charles E. Pratt the noted American composer and musican, who so compositions have world-wide popularity and a larger sale than those of any other American comsoser.

Believing that the educational value of this Chart cannot be over-estimated the DAILY COURIER has arranged with the publishers to supply Pratt's Chart of Cards to our rearders at $1.00 each, and in addition to the Chart of Cards, the publishers have kindly agreed to send without extra charge a copy of the Giant Album of Songs containing 184 Songs with words and melody. Many of these songs are old time favorites long out of print, that can be obtained in no other way.

Every home that has a piano or organ, especially where there are children should have Pratt's Chart of Chords.

This offer is made for a short time only and DAILY COURIER readers should avail themselves of it without delay. Address,

Tapped the Till

While the Proprietor was out in the Ice House.

Another daylight robbery occurred at the south end yesterday afternoon. The meat market of Leighty & McNabb were losers this time. Mr. Leighty of the firm had just driven to the up town market with a load of ice and Mr. McNabb left the market at the south end a few moments to go to the ice house to pack the ice down. He was not gone long but when he returned found the money drawer had been opened and all the change taken out, $5 or $6 in all. A young fellow was noticed about and was seen in the market by Mrs. Jas. Farmer who had entered to get some meat. The young man asked her if she was after meat too, she replied she was. and he remarked that he had been there twenty minutes waiting on the clerk. Mrs. Farmer concluded she would not wait and left the fellow in there alone, supposing, probably that he was a new clerk or a friend who was waiting for Mr. McNabb. As soon as the news was given out that the money drawer had been robbed Mrs. Farmer then learned that the fellow was not a clerk and a search commenced at once for the man. Sheriff Stroh and Marshal West were notified and somewhere near the Wabash tracks two tramps were captured. They were led up to the residence of Mrs. Farmer for her identification, but they were not the right fellows. She described the man as being a light weight with a long mustache. And up to the time we go to press he has not been captured.

How And Why.

(Shelby Democrat)

Last week in the senate Sherman declared that his silver act of 1890 was presented and accepted as part of a mere bargain to procure the support of the silver interests for the McKinley tariff bill. He confessed that the passage of a free coinage bill was imminent and that he accepted the compromise as a settlement of the whole affair. The plea that the silver purchase bill was passed to prevent the passage of a free silver bill has been often made. It is a confession of a trick and makeshift. There was a republican majority in both houses. and Harrison was president. The fact is the Sherman act was passed to relieve Harrison from the duty of voteing a free silver bill which would have alienated the silver vote at the then approaching presidential election.

How to Treat a Wife.

(From Pacific Health Journal.)

First, get a wife; second, be patient. You may have great trials and perplexities in your business, but do not therefore, carry to your home a cloudy or contracted brow. Your wife may have trials which, though of less magnitude, may be hard for her to bear. A kind word, a tender look, will do wonders in chasing from her brow all clouds of gloom.—To this we would add always keep a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy in the house. It is the best and is sure to be needed sooner or lator. Your wife will then know that you really care for her and wish to protect her health. For sale by Davenport the Druggist. 22

It was sent east, over Europe, to Asia, and from Takio, Japan, was sent to San Francisco, and thence to New York where Depew was. Edison was a few feet away and received the return message just fifty minutes after Depew had sent it. They way it went, took nearly 29,000 miles.

Protect Fruit.

So important has this become, that Michigan, the leading fruit producer of the Central States, has undertaken to control it by law. The law went into effect this spring and compels every man who owns fruit trees, to spray them with some poisonous stuff that will kill insects etc. A commissioner is appointed by each township board, whose duty it is, to see that the provisions of the law are carried out. If any owner fails to spray his trees and vines properly, a written notice will be served on him, and then if he still neglects it, the commissioner must have it done at township expense, to be charged over to such owner. And the owner must be proceeded against, and in case of conviction, he can be fined as high as $50, or imprisoned sixty days, or both. Besides this law, there is a separate one already in force, in regard to the disease of peach trees, etc, called "yellows," and all trees, so affected must be destroyed by fire.

In view of the many orchards in this county, now turning brown and black, and dying at the top, it would be well for our farmers, to get ready for a similar law for Indiana.

Lost Editor.

The editor of the Lagrange Democrat, D. A. Fawcett, is lost; lost to his family, lost to his party, lost to his paper, and worse than all the rest, is lost, totally jost, to his numerous creditors. He left home two or three weeks ago, and has not been heard of since, as appears from items in several papers. He came to Auburn about that time, and called at this office, but said nothing that would induce anyone to suppose he was on his way to the "dark continent." It seems he has never got fully into the good graces of his people since he had the scandal with a young lady who was his clerk in the postoffice. He had been appointed against the wishes of a large number of the patrons of the office, and soon after the the scandal, he was removed. Then he bought back the newspaper office, which he had sold to a couple of young men. But now it is in the hands of the sheriff, on claims parties have against it. Editors ought to be good, like those in Auburn.

In His Sleep

ANGOLA, IND., May 15, 1896. (Special)—Wm. Snyder, a well known attorney at Fremont, Ind., got up in his sleep last night and walked out of his room window over Chadwick & Dewey's store, falling to the stone pavement, a distance of twelve feet. He was found at 1 oclock this morning in an unconscious state. Dr. H. D. Wood of this place was called and administered to his wants but up to six o'clock this morning he had not regained consciousness. It is hard to tell how bad Mr. Snyder is injured.

Home Markets.

Nail makers are now selling nails to customers at home, at $2.30 to $2.55 but they sell the same goods to foreign dealers, at 70 to 85 cents. Now American buyers are getting hold of the scheme, and have a foreign agent buy of the nail makers here, then pay 20 cents per 100 to have the nails shipped across the sea, then without breaking bulk, they are shipped back at a cost of 20 cents per 100 more, and goods so returned pay no duty. So the keen witted Yankee dealer gets his nails at $1.10 to $1.25 per 100, the same goods he would have to pay $2.30 to $2.55 for. Two things are here plainly shown: If the nail maker can afford to sell his goods cheap to foreigners, he ought to sell cheap to home dealers. If he can undersell the foreign maker, he does not need a tariff to protect him against "the pauper labor of the old world." If the nail maker cannot afford to sell to foreigners at these prices, he is evidently making up his losses by charging home dealers too much. It is a bad state of things and should be corrected. If the tariff is too high it shoud be made lower, not higher.

Case Reversed.

The case against Wesminster Seminary for damages for the death of Miss Diebold came up in court again this week and the News says:

A few week ago Henry Diebold secured a judgment of $2,500 against the Westminster Seminary association on account of the death of his daughter who was fatally burned in an explosion of gas at that institution a year ago. Mr. Diebold sued as administror of his daughter's estate, and yesterday Judge O'Rourke set aside the finding of the jury and gave the seminary association a judgment for the costs. The court holds that being an adult the father was not entitled to damages for the death of his daughter, since he suffered no pecuniary loss from her death. He was not dependent upon her for support, no one else shared her earnings and therefore no one has sustained a loss on which the verdict of the jury could stand.

Attend Sunday School

Here is still another reason why everyone should attend Sunday school. An exchange says:

Last Sunday some boys attended a Sunday school in the neighborhood and found the missing animal penned up in an outhouse. She had probably entered the building and the door had closed behind her.

Nervous Prostration

Cured by Dr. Miles' Nervine.

Prolonged derangement of the nervous system not only affects the brain and mental powers, but develops disease in some of the vital organs. The most dangerous of these indirect results is when the heart is affected. This was the case of the Rev. N. F. Surface, Farm River, Mich., who writes under date of Feb. 14, 1895:

"Fourteen years ago I had a slight stroke of paralysis. Overwork brought on nervous prostration. I was exceedingly nervous and the exertion of public speaking caused heart palpitation that threatened my life. I used two bottles of Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure for my heart trouble, and two of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine for my nervousness and feel better than I ever expected to feel again. I can speak for hours without tiring or having my heart flutter as it formerly did, and I have you to thank that I am alive today."

LADY ATTENDANT.

How we Stand

Our lively corresdondent at Corunna, asks, "How is the silver question?" We answer, . The republicans, east and west, are likely to vote the straight republican ticket, no matter what their platform may say on the silver question, or what their own beliefs may be. Their leaders have them in better control, than is the case with the democrats, and have made them understand there is not much in the question for the people in this part of the Union. On the other hand the democrats, while no worse divided in opinion are likely to be divided in their voting. The silver democrats all over the country, are threatening——at least their papers are——to bolt, if a free silver plank is not put into the national platform. The anti-silver democrats so far have made no threats, but there is a serious danger that if a free silver plank is adopted that they will lose interest in a campaign that has for its chief aim, a scheme to compel the government to pay wealthy mine owners 100 cents for each 52 cent worth of silver they have to sell. So, we admit frankly, that democratic prospects, as far at least as the national ticket is concerned, are not very flattering. There is a prospect however, that there will be a silver plank in the state platform and a union of all elements opposed to a single gold standard. This would easily bring in most of the democrats and populists, as all democrats who do not believe in free silver at 16 to 1 without waiting for other nations, still do believe in an abundant use of silver, and even of free silver, if we can get the other nations to unite with us, as we did when we changed the ratio from 15½ to 1 to the present ratio of 16 to 1 in 1837. At that time we "waited" to have the South American nations and Spain to unite with us. When democrats come to see that this has always been the democratic way, perhaps, the factions will each agree to come half way, and unite. If we can keep fairly well united we may even win the national ticket. But as we said before it is likely that all the free silver and partially free silver elements will get together in Iudiana, on a modified free silver basis. It may be that Indiana will adopt something like the national platform of 1892, which was as fair a statement of the party belief as ever was made. In any event democrats must be prepared to make concessions to each other. This is more especially needed in the national platform. With free silver, we would lose New York, New Jersey and Connecticut, and possibly lose Maryland. We could hold these states and probably Massachusetts on a gold platform, but would lose most of the southern and western states. The most of the western states we cannot carry on any platform, and those who are trying to make people believe a free silver democratic platform would carry Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Colorado etc. are greatly mistaken. If the democrats can secure a union of all free silver elements in Indiana they can carry it, and there the matter substantially ends. This is the outlook to-day, May 22, as gleaned from all sources, all over the Union.

TWO PRISONERS ATTEMPT TO BREAK JAIL BUT ARE DISCOVERED.

Friends on the Outside Furnish the Tools but Now the Sheriff has Them.

Friday Sheriff Stroh and his deputy Neal Platter got onto a scheme by which the imprisoned train robbers were hoping to get free of their present enforced citizenship in Auburn. For some days there had been a suspicious condition of things about the jail. There were evidences that the prisoners on the lower floor were staying up a good deal at night and there had been noise not easily accounted for The three men on this floor were two of the men who were arrested at Breman for holding up a Chicago butcher on a B. & O. train just after it had left Garrett. Gaylor, the one who was shot at the time of the arrest has been kept on the second floor and is nearly well. On the lower floor were his two pals, Charles Reynolds and John Moore or, "Anderson." With these two toughs was rooming a man from Garrett, Dan Edgemond, who is in jail for refusing to come before the grand jury when called. It appears that Edgemond knew what the other two were doing, but hated to give them away. However, he did not like to be confined in their company and may have been a little afraid of them. He had requested to be taken away and put into another room but did not succeed. And when he told the sheriff his story that morning and asked to be removed, he was not at first believed as it was thought he was merely making this an excuse to get away from his disagreeable companions. But the officers investigated and soon found what had been the trouble. Two of the upright iron bars of the grating between the room and the outside corridor were found to be cut off at the top, only enough being left to hold them in place. Then they had tied a string around the cut made by the saw to conceal it. The room was carefully searched and a small steel saw was found snugly hidden out of sight where only the most thorough search could have found it. So the Garrett man was right and has been removed to another room. Of course if the men had not been discovered they were all ready to get out into the corridor. But when they had got there, there would have been another set of bars to cut off and a more public place to do it in. So they would not probably have succeeded in getting away. Sheriff Stroh says he has had his eye on them and knew what they were doing from the start. They are evidently a tough lot and the saw was no doubt passed in to them by a friend on the outside. It is believed that one or two of their pals have been hanging about town several days. The saw is a small, fine steel one such as are used by machinists, and was probably stolen from some shop in town. In the hands of a skilled man it would soon cut a bar off.

Currant Worm.

The most successful remedy yet discovered for this insect is white hellebore. Dust a little of the powder over the infested bushes while they are damp, either early in the morning or just after a shower. If this is done promptly, before the worms have spread all over the bushes, one or two applications will usually be sufficient.

Brutal Murder.

Word comes from over near Swan, in Noble county, of a most brutal murder that occurred there Saturday afternoon. There has for years been a feud between two families there, the Warners and the Badgers, growing out of some old trouble. Warner suddenly disappeared and was never heard from, and it was claimed that Badger had killed him. Saturday the two Badger boys were clearing some land, when one was suddenly shot down, dying without a word, and a second shot broke an arm for the other. A third shot struck him in the body and he fell. He was discovered by a man named Preston and cared for, but so far has been able to give only these meager particulars. There is a belief that the deed was done by a son of Warner, the man supposed to have been killed years ago, and that he fired the three shots at the distance of about 100 feet. The latest is that Warner has been arrested and is in jail at Albion.

Save $100,000

The State Supreme Court, a few days ago, decided the state tax law passed by the legislature of 1891, to be sound. It was the case with the Western Union Telegraph Co. They had been paying in the entire state, before that about $1,200 a year on their immense business. Under the new law they would have to pay about $35,000 a year and they refused. The present decision will bring into the state treasury over $100,000 at once. Of this, DeKalb should get nearly $1,000 we suppose. The two legislatures of '89 and '91 passed many strong laws in the interest of the taxpayers.

A. P. A. N. G.

Albion, Neb. Argus.

The editor of the Sanborn (Iowa) Sun has announced himself as the only sugar cured and sun dried lover in existence. The fact that he has a wife and six children does not deter him from telling this one: "A fool fellow down in Kentucky who belonged to the A. P. A.'s became engaged to a Catholic girl, but discovered that he was oath bound not to marry a Catholic. He would not give up the girl, and yet he could not marry her because of the A. P. A. oath and so killed himself. Poor simpleton! If we loved a girl and she was red headed, freckle faced, pigeon toed, knock kneed, with a turn up nose, snored, had the itch, and was a pagan, we'd break all the oaths from Adam's fall to Oshkosh, smite all the priests from Jerusalem to Jericho and set at defiance all the A. P. A.'s outside of hades or have her. That's the kind of a night blooming cereus this reminiscence of a lily white youngster we are."

Two Lives Saved.

Mrs. Phoebe Thomas, of Junction City Ill., was told by her doctors she had consumption and that there was no hope for her, but two bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery completely cured her and she says it saved her life. Mr. Thomas Eggers, 139 Florida St., San Francisco, suffered from a dreadful cold, approaching consumption. He tried without result, everything else, then he bought one bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery and in two weeks was cured. He is naturally thankful. It is such results, of which these are samples, that prove the wonderful efficacy of this medicine in coughs and colds. Free trial bottles at Robbins & McCord's drugstore. Regular size 50 cents and $1. 5 for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

The fac-simile signature of Chas. H. Fletcher is on every wrapper.

DECLINES TO REPLY.

President Says It Would Not Be Compatible with the Public Service.

Responding to the resolution adopted by the Senate on the 16th instant in regard to the treatment of American citizens in Cuba, and requesting copies of the correspondence of the State Department upon this subject, the President has sent to the Senate a message declining to furnish the correspondence and saying that he considered it incompatible with the public service to do so at the present time. He forwarded literal copies of the original text of the protocol of conference and declarations concerning judicial proceedings of 1877, signed by Caleb Cushing on behalf of the United States, and Seno Collantes as the representative of the Spanish Government, which are requested by the same resolution.

BOOK 325 YEARS OLD.

Heirloom Handed Down from the Time of Queen Bess.

Ex-Mayor George Hathaway, of Bridgeport, Ohio, is the possessor of a valuable family relic in the form of a commentary which is 325 years of age. It was printed in England in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, about the year 1571. The book has been handed down through successive generations of the Sharp family, the last of that family owning the book being a grandmother of Mr. Hathaway, who resided at Warrentown until her death a few years ago. During the big flood in 1884, the book was damaged some by water, but it has been well preserved. It is printed in the old Roman letters and the binding is of good leather.

"The Heathen Chinee."

San Francisco special: At last the United States secret service authorities have struck a lead to the source from which have come the thousands of almost perfect half dollars circulated throughout the Pacific coast. It is believed that the counterfeits, which absolutely defy detection except when under a powerful magnifying glass in the hands of a clever expert, were made by Chinese in their native land, and brought to this country last summer by the members of the troupe of Chinese actors who came to America to perform at the Atlanta Exposition. Almost the entire troupe is now in this city, having been filling engagements in Chinatown theaters since returning from the East.

World's Fair Wreckers.

The wreckers who have for nearly three years been removing the remains of the great World's Fair of Chicago have completed their work and will formally turn over the grounds to the Jackson Park Commissioners. The only things which remain as a reminder of the grandeur are the Art Palace and La Rabida Convent, both of which are well preserved, the dilapidated German building and the badly soiled Statue of Liberty. The Park Commissioners will at once begin to restore the desolate ground to its former beauty as a park.

A Baptist Controversy.

Judge Smythe, in the New York Supreme Court, is trying the suit of the New York Central Baptist Mission Society to foreclose a mortgage of $88,000 on the Tabernacle Baptist Church. John D. and William Rockefeller, who are among the members of the society who are bitterly opposed to Rev. Daniel C. Potter, the pastor, declare that even the nominal interest of one dollar yearly on the loan has not been paid. Dr. Potter contends that the mortgage can never be foreclosed so long as the building is used as a Baptist Church.

Embargo May Be Raised.

A dispatch from Madrid, Spain, says that as a consequence of the representations made by the American Government, the Spanish Cabinet will try to induce Capt. Gen. Weyler to reconsider his prohibition of the exports of leaf tobacco to foreign countries. The edict has been welcomed in Spain and Havana as a clever blow dealt at the American people, who are considered to be the chief abettors of the insurrection.

Stole an Orchard.

Thieves stole an entire orchard from Isaac Rogers, a farmer living near Lodi, Ohio. Rogers had taken great care of the orchard of 100 trees and this year expected a fine crop. The trees were located on an isolated part of the farm and Rogers only got to see the trees when he made a special trip, so knew nothing of the theft of trees until he discovered that the whole orchard was missing.

Educators Indicted.

The grand jury returned indictments against the heads of Illinois College and the Catholic and Parochial Schools of Jacksonville, Ill., for not having flags on their school buildings.

The Child Murderer to Die.

London special: The woman Dyer, who has been on trial on the charge of murdering numerous infants intrusted to her care, has been sentenced to death. From letters found in possession of the woman it seemed apparent that the parents of the infants consigned to Mrs. Dyer's care were aware of the fate intended for them.

Twenty-Year Sentence.

Elmer Branagan of Columbus, who shot and killed his wife some months ago, was found guilty of manslaughter and sentenced to twenty years in the penitentiary.

War Terrapin.

A land terrapin was captured near Corinth, Miss., with the following cut on its shell:

"George Thompson, 38th Reg., Ind. Vol., 1862."

A few of the letters on the most exposed places were worn off or partly so, but enough remained to make it legible. The owner intends to take his capture to Shiloh on May 30, where it can be seen by many veterans.

Said They Were Innocent.

John Rutherford and Joe Goodson were hanged at Denison, Texas, for the murder of Thomas Dwyer. They died protesting their innocence.

MASSACHUSETTS' FIRE.

Its Line Is Fifteen Miles Long and Five Miles Wide.

Plymouth (Mass.) special: The biggest fire Plymouth has seen since 1870 is burning in the south part of the town. It started in Wareham and ran into Plymouth. Many thousands of acres were turned over. The line of the fire was fifteen miles long and in some places five miles wide. The wind blew hard and the flames burned everything before them. The damage to cranberry bogs is great, and many bog houses were burned. A number of summer cottages were saved. The loss cannot be estimated, but it will reach thousands of dollars. The rain greatly checked the flames.

The Trade Outlook.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says: The waiting condition which seems to some people nothing better than stagnation, still continues. But there is a difference. Thousands of orders and contracts are merely deferred because they can be more safely given a little later. There is nothing exciting in the speculative market for exportable products and the stories about damage to wheat have been numerous, but the general belief regarding the future supply is fairly reflected in the decline of 1.62 cents per bushel. Cotton speculation lifted the price a fraction for a day or two; it declined again, and such movements are always easy at this season when stocks can be easily controlled. The European and American mill supplies with commercial stocks still exceed maximum consumption for the crop year and the promise for the coming crop is decidedly good.

Awful Calamity.

A section of the Seneca street front of Brown's building, Buffalo, N. Y., collapsed, burying a score of people in the ruins. George Metz, a barber, and Jennie Griffith, cashier in the barber shop, are dead; William P. Straub, a contractor, is known to be in the ruins and a dozen others are more or less injured, one of whom will probably die. Iron columns were twisted as though they had been soft wire. Heavy wooden beams were torn to pieces like paper. Pillars of brick crumbled to pieces, not strong enough to resist the strength of the weight that had fallen upon them. Here and there could be seen people who had not been caught in the falling debris, rushing to a place of safety. The outer walls fell into the street, burying those who had not had time to escape.

Chinese Boys Coming to America.

New York special: The Chinese Government has awakened to the fact that the recent defeat by its smaller, but more highly educated, neighbor, Japan, was due entirely to the inculcation in the latter nation of Western methods. In view of possible future complications the Chinese have decided to recognize the superiority of foreign training. As a result twenty Chinese boys, ranging in age from 10 to 12 years, will soon make their appearance in this country. Unlike their predecessors, these new visitors come as children to become skilled in mechanical arts.

Deserting President Santa Lucia.

Havana special: It is reported that President Santa Lucia has been deserted by Calixto, Garcia and Jose Maceo, who refused obedience to the President. The insurgents made an attack at several points on the Mariel military line, and from the nature of the wounds received by countrymen, it is claimed that the insurgents are using explosive bullets.

The Hessian Fly.

Detroit special: Reports of the destruction of growing wheat by the Hessian fly are alarming. The insects have made the heaviest ravages in the most prolific of the wheat growing regions of Southern Michigan, but their operations extend all over the peninsula. It said half the wheat crop of the State will be destroyed.

Took Two Lives.

At Portersville, Ind., Warren Wagner, a prosperous farmer, murdered his wife by cutting her throat with a razor, and with the same weapon he took his own life. The only witness was their 6-year-old child. Wagner was about thirty years of age. Jealousy was the motive.

Senator Wallace Dead.

Ex-United States Senator William A. Wallace of Pennsylvania, died at 170 West Eighty-eighth street, New York. Mr. Wallace had been seriously ill for several months, and for a month past he has been unconscious for a greater part of the time.

Gas Explosion.

At Coffeyville, Kan., a gas explosion wrecked two two-story brick buildings in the center of the city, causing the instant death of one man and the fatal injury of two other persons and the wounding more or less seriously of thirteen others.

Gail Hamilton Prostrated.

Miss Abigail Dodge (Gail Hamilton) has been taken suddenly ill at Salem, Mass., with an attack similar to that which caused her protracted illness at Washington about a year ago. Her friends are considerably alarmed.

Negro Lynched.

James Dazzelle, colored, was taken from the jail of St. Bernard Parish, La., and lynched. He was arrested for attempting to outrage a white lady near the Poydras plantation.

SAFE FOR M'KINLEY.

GEN. GROSVENOR CLAIMS 592 VOTES ON FIRST BALLOT.

In Any Event He Says the Ohioan Is Sure to Receive the Nomination, and the Point of Interest Is Who Will Be His Running Mate.

Twenty-nine States for Him.

The naming of delegates to the Republican national convention has closed. The great body of "kingmakers" has been completed and a conservative analysis of its composition shows, to a Washington correspondent, that McKinley will have more than enough votes to nominate him on the first ballot.

Gen. Grosvenor, of Washington, the chief spokesman of the McKinley campaign, gave out his final bulletin at the capital the other evening. It was as follows:

"Last week closed the election of delegates to the St. Louis convention, and McKinley was indorsed by all the States that expressed an opinion during the week—Washington, Wyoming, West Virginia and North Carolina. The free silver States refused the indorsement of McKinley, and their delegates are uninstructed as to persons, but they have received very peremptory orders as to principles. There are now elected 918 delegates, but four in Arizona, four in New Mexico and four in Oklahoma must depend upon the future action of the national convention for seats in that body, the official call authorizing them to elect only two delegates in each of the territories.

"The following States have elected either solid McKinley delegations or delegations with a majority of McKinley men, so that it may be conceded that McKinley's following will control these States, to wit: Alabama, Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Arizona, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, New Jersey, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, Wisconsin, Wyoming and the territories of New Mexico and Oklahoma. Only three of these States have contests for the entire delegations, and, throwing them out, there would be left twenty-nine McKinley States and territories to elect members of the committee on credentials."

The shaded portions of the above Map show the territory whose delegates to the St. Louis convention McKinley managers now claim for their candidate.

The delegates elected are as follows:

Alabama	20	Ohio	46
Arkansas	10	Oklahoma	4
Arizona	6	Oregon	8
California	18	Pennsylvania	4
Florida	8	South Carolina	17
Georgia	22	South Dakota	8

CURES LUNGS WITH AIR.

Elgin Physician Has Perfected a Remarkable Inhaler.

A form of artificially saturated medicated air is the apparently successful cure for lung trouble now being offered by Dr. W. A. Shepard of Elgin, Ill. The air is charged in that manner in recognition of the fact that rare air of mountainous regions is beneficial to persons afflicted with weak lungs. The doctor took the cue for the remedy he says he has worked out from that truth, and his announcement of his method is it multiplies several times over the benefits received from a trip to the mountain districts.

The prospective patient who enters Dr. Shepard's office is introduced to a brass and nickel-plated, queer-looking cylindrical-shaped apparatus about eighteen inches high, to which are connected two tubes for the purpose of inhaling and exhaling. The physician considers the latter as important a duty on the part of the consumptive as the former, and he has attached a mechanical contrivance which registers in cubic inches the lung power shown. The healing air passes through a bottle partly filled with a medicinal solution and from it receives the charge which is to do the good to the lungs.

The composition of this solution, however, Dr. Shepard guards. Its strength and intensity vary with the condition of the patient. That is all the information he will give to inquirers. He has worked for approximately six years in developing this branch of the profession, and not until lately, though, has he reached a point where his labor has brought him success.

BACK TO THE ERMINE.

William Lochren Quits Office of Commissioner of Pensions.

The President has sent to the Senate the following nominations: William Lochren, of Minnesota, to be United States district judge for the district of Minnesota, vice Rensselaer R. Nelson, resigned; Dominic J. Murphy, of Pennsylvania, now first deputy commissioner of pensions, to be commissioner of pensions, vice William Lochren, resigned; Napoleon J. T. Dana, of New Hampshire, to be first deputy commissioner of pensions, vice Dominic J. Murphy, nominated for commissioner of pensions.

Judge Lochren was appointed commissioner of pensions at the beginning of the present administration. He was then a district judge in Minnesota. Judge Nelson, whom he succeeds, was appointed in 1858 by President Buchanan, and had seen the longest service of any judge in the United States courts.

JUDGE WILLIAM LOCHREN.

Ever since Judge Lochren's appointment as commissioner of pensions it had been the desire of his friends to have him promoted to the bench in case Judge Nelson would resign. It has been known that his preference has been for the bench rather than an executive position. Leading lawyers in Minnesota have petitioned for his appointment as United States judge. Mr. Lochren was indorsed by the Minnesota Legislature unanimously for the position he now holds. The successor of Judge Lochren, Mr. Murphy, was chief clerk of the pension office during the first administration of President Cleveland. To him has been largely intrusted the details in the office and much of the executive management. He was first deputy before Judge Lochren was appointed and was active in the reorganization of the office.

WARNING TO THE ARROGANT SPANIARD.

UNCLE SAM—"DON'T FIRE! IT MEANS WAR!"

HARRISON M'KEE'S ILLNESS.

His Condition Remains Unchanged—His Fame as "Baby" McKee.

The condition of Benjamin McKee, ex-President Harrison's grandson, who is suffering with what is believed to be pneumonia, was unchanged at last reports. Master McKee's serious illness recalls the literature current about him when he was a baby. He is the son of J. H. McKee, who married Mr. Harrison's daughter, and "Baby McKee" was ever a favorite with his distinguished grandfather. When Mr. Harrison went to live in the White House his precocious grandson shared with him the brunt of all the personal gossip that usually follows a presidential election, and "Baby McKee" became as much of a national character as any Senator or Congressman or member of the cabinet. During the campaign of 1888 little McKee was as much written about as anybody, and the pet name given him by the press stuck to him even after he had grown up to be a big boy. He is an interesting child, and his illness is the concern of all of Gen. Harrison's friends.

IS NOT A POLITICAL MACHINE

Commander Walker Warns Members of the G. A. R.

Commander-in-Chief Walker, from the headquarters of the national G. A. R., calls attention to the fact that some posts have engaged in political work, and some officers have been using their official positions to further the interests of certain candidates. Among other things the order says: "The country is entering upon a season of political excitement, when partisans will try to exert every influence for their friends. Such action and violation of our rules and regulations, if permitted to go unrebuked, is liable to breed dissensions in our ranks, and the good of the order demands that it be discontinued."

DEATH CLAIMS SIXTY

NORTHEAST TEXAS SWEPT BY AN AWFUL STORM.

Victims at Sherman Number Sixty—Over Fifty Houses Dashed in Ruins Upon the Occupants—Other Towns Suffer Severely in Life and Property.

Ruin at Sherman.

The city of Sherman, Texas, is a hospital and the dead, unidentified and all, will reach something like sixty persons. About 4:15 Friday afternoon a storm cloud came with a mighty roar and from the southwest could be seen flying timbers and houses. The death-dealing storm struck the west portion of the city, coming up a ravine and Post Oak creek, crossing a portion of the cemetery. For half a mile along the creek there were negro homes mostly. No fewer than twenty or thirty people were killed outright along the creek and scores were injured. Some were crushed under falling buildings, struck with flying timbers and a few men were found in the creek drowned. At one place in the country a child was found in a tree. In another a woman was blown half a mile from home. The city received a shower of ruins, mud and sand where the storm did not strike. For hours vehicles were coming in with the dead and the people were busy in assisting the wounded and preparing the dead for burial. The Sherman court house was insufficient to hold the dead and wounded.

Came Without Warning.

The storm struck Sherman without warning on the southwest corner of the city and cleared a path 100 yards wide along the west end of the town. The negro part of the town suffered the most severely. There are probably thirty negroes killed. Ten bodies were picked up in Post Oak creek. The flood of rain which attended the storm was severe. The town was a mass of mud and floating ruins.

Terrific Force of Storm.

From the point where it seems to have first descended to where it suddenly arose from the ground, just north of the city, it left terrific marks of its passage, not a house in its pathway escaping, not a tree or a shrub left standing or that is not twisted and torn out of shape. Fences are gone. The iron bridge on Houston street was completely wrecked and blown away, notwithstanding its hundreds of thousands of pounds of steel and material. The number of persons wounded will reach not less than 100. At least fifty houses were totally wrecked, most of them cottages, except in Fairview and Washington avenues, where the handsome residences of L. F. Ely, Captain J. C. Stalter, Mrs. Pat Mattingly and James Falls also succumbed. The loss will reach at least $150,000, and but little, if any, of it was covered by cyclone insurance.

Caring for the Injured.

The Mayor called a mass meeting, and everything was done for the homeless and injured. Physicians came from Denison to assist. Two thousand dollars was raised at the court house in a few minutes. A permanent relief committee, consisting of C. H. Smith, C. B. Randell, C. B. Dorchester and Col. George Murphy, was organized and will take cash donations. Denison responded nobly, nurses and physicians from that city rendering great assistance. All railroads running into the city placed special trains at the disposal of the local authorities and brought help from all neighboring cities.

Other Towns Suffer.

At Carpenter's Bluff on Red river it is reported that six persons were hurt, five seriously. Buildings and other structures in the way were demolished. At Howe the path of the cyclone was a quarter of a mile wide. Ten farm houses and as many barns were wrecked. Eight persons were killed outright and many injured. Bark was ripped from trees and much stock was killed. Six persons were injured, one of them fatally, near Mound Ridge. At Gribble Springs four persons were killed and five others fatally wounded. The property damage is great. At Justin, one was killed and seventeen hurt.

Storm in Pennsylvania.

Smithton, Pa., a mining town on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, was visited by a wind storm and cloudburst Friday afternoon. Three bridges were wrecked completely and 100 miners who were at work were compelled to flee for their lives. The loss is estimated at between $50,000 and $75,000.

Fatal Fire at McDonald.

A fire entailing the loss of two lives in the Cadamire family, and the probable fatal burning of five children occurred at McDonald, Pa., Friday. The cause of the sad tragedy was the fatal oil can, the contents of which the mother was using to hasten the fire in the kitchen stove. She was just in the act of pouring the oil in the stove, when a terrific explosion followed, and in a flash the entire room was like a roaring furnace.

Disaster on the St. Paul.

A wreck occurred on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul road Friday evening two miles south of Waldo, Wis., in which three train men were killed and two seriously injured. The time freight, which leaves Green Bay at 6:30 p. m., pull through Waldo at the rate of about thirty-five miles an hour, and when it struck the pile of ties with which train wreckers had obstructed the track it was completely wrecked, demolishing the engine and derailing most of the cars. This is the culmination of a number of attempts to wreck the time freight, the passenger trains not having been molested, and seems to point to an organized gang of train wreckers who have a grudge against the St. Paul road, as the wrecking is evidently not done for mercenary purposes.

HOMAGE TO THE CZAR

RUSSIAN RULER ENTERS THE EMPIRE'S OLD CAPITAL.

Nicholas Is Hailed by Booming Cannon and Pealing Bells—In Dazzling Cavalcade—Royalty and Nobility Journey from the Petrovsky Palace.

Day of Joy at Moscow.

The czar and czarina made their triumphal entry into Moscow amid the thunder of batteries of artillery, the clanging of countless bells and the cheers of a vast multitude of loyal Russians and equally enthusiastic visitors from all parts of the world. Probably never in the history of nations has there been such an assemblage of peoples. Possibly the gorgeous scene may never be repeated in its grand entirety. In anticipation of the coming of the czar, the entire route from Petrovski palace, about three miles on the road to St. Petersburg, to the Kremlin was so densely packed with people that movement except on the outskirts of the immense crowds was out of the question.

The signal for the commencement of the day's movements was a salute of nine guns from a battery outside the city. This was followed by the dull booming of the big bell of the Cathedral of the Assumption and the assembling of the troops at their various mustering points.

Then the countless high dignitaries of the empire and of foreign countries began to gather at the Petrovski palace, to take their places in the gala equipages or to escort on horseback the carriages of their imperial majesties. The grand dukes and grand duchesses, the princes and the princesses, the Asiatic potentates, the innumerable representatives of every country under the sun assembled there to do honor to the czar of all the Russias, the ruler of the mighty empire which half encircles the globe. Generals with their staffs, aids-de-camp riding at breakneck speed, orderlies galloping furiously were to be seen everywhere. The clash of arms resounded on all sides, and most impressive was the gathering of the hosts of the mighty emperor.

CZAR NICHOLAS.

At 2:30 o'clock there was a further thundering of the cannon, this time from the direction of the Petrovski palace, and that living mass of men and women gave a great sigh of relief, for it was the signal that the czar had started on his journey to the Kremlin.

Reception of the Czar.

After leaving the palace the czar was received by the commander-in-chief of all the troops at Moscow and in its neighborhood, the Grand Duke Sergius, and then the latter, with a most brilliant staff, joined in the procession. At the Resurrection gate the czar dismounted from his horse and the empresses descended from their carriages in order to worship at the shrine of the Iberian Madonna, the most sacred of the many holy symbols in Moscow. At the shrine their majesties were received by the grand vicar of Moscow, who presented them with the cross and sprinkled them with holy water. Their majesties entered the chapel and knelt in prayer before the image. At the conclusion of their devotions the czar remounted his horse and the czarina re-entered her carriage and they passed through the gate into the Kremlin, where they were received with all the ecclesiastical pomp possible.

At the moment their majesties entered the palace of the Kremlin an artillery salute of 101 guns was fired and throughout the journey of their majesties the bells from all the belfries from Moscow were tolled. The czar and czarina will remain at the palace in partial seclusion until the ceremony of the coronation of the imperial standard, which always occurs three days before the coronation.

Cost of the Fetes.

The Russian Government is said to have spent over $20,000,000 on the fetes up to the present, and the city of Moscow is understood to have expended nearly as much money and more expenses have to be met. The illuminations cost several millions of dollars to the Government alone, without counting what the city contributed toward this portion of the expense. Besides the expense of the Russian Government and the city of Moscow, the expenses which grand dukes and grand duchesses, foreign princes and ambassadors, etc., have been put to is really enormous, one authority going so far as to estimate that there was about $100,000,000 worth of jewelry alone in the procession.

The French Government especially has been put to a very great expense for the coronation fetes. The cost of the supper which their imperial majesties attended under the auspices of the French delegation cost over $100,000, and the carriages used by the French envoys were the property of the Emperor Napoleon, built especially for the christening of the late prince imperial. Ex-Empress Eugenie allowed them to be sent to Moscow for the use of Comte De Montebello and General De Boisdeffre, the representatives of France.

HALF A CROP IS SOWN.

Wheat Season in North Dakota Is Greatly Delayed.

Grain receivers in Duluth, Minn., have received reports during the past week from the entire wheat country in North Dakota. A consensus of interviews obtained indicates that the area sown to date in that State is equal to less than 50 per cent of the acreage sown a year ago. The reports range from 3 per cent in the Red River Valley to 70 per cent south of the international boundary. A correspondent, who has been personally investigating the situation in the flooded counties of Minnesota and North Dakota, bordering on the Red river, sends an exhaustive report, showing that the conditions are unfavorable for the wheat crop. Large areas are under water, and farm work has been so badly delayed, or entirely prevented, that not more than 60 per cent of the usual acreage will bear wheat. The eight counties in question had last year a yield of 30,000,000 bushels, and this will be cut down at least 10,000,000 bushels. As an instance of the condition of affairs, one can go in a rowboat over open prairie from Warren, Minn., forty miles north to Hallock, and it would be dangerous to venture with a wagon more than three miles from the Great Northern tracks between these points. The streets of most of the towns are flooded and impassable.

PERISH IN THE LAKE.

FIVE OF A SCHOONER'S CREW DIE IN THE WAVES.

The Mary D. Ayer Sinks as the Result of a Collision with the Steamer Onoko—Vessel Floats Helplessly for Hours a Prey to the Gale.

Collision Off Racine.

The schooner Mary D. Ayer collided with the steamer Onoko, in Lake Michigan, off Grosse Point. Eleven hours later, while the steamer City of Duluth was trying to tow it ashore near Racine, the schooner sank, and five of the crew were drowned and the remaining two were saved and taken to Chicago.

From the time of the collision until she was picked up, the Ayer drifted a distance of forty-five miles. The spot where she was taken hold of by the City of Duluth was about fifteen miles from shore.

There was a dense fog on the lake at the time, and with but an instant's warning the schooner loomed up directly ahead of the steamer. The long jib-boom of the Ayer ran into the pilot house of the Onoko, barely missing the wheelman, and then tore its way out through the end. The rail from bow to quarter was torn from its fastenings by the jib-boom, and at last that spar gave way. The bows of the schooner were broken in by the impact of the collision, and her master immediately ordered her anchor overboard.

The Onoko, which is one of the few iron boats on the lake and belongs to the Minch fleet of Cleveland, was coming up Lake Michigan loaded with iron ore for the Illinois Steel Company at South Chicago. The Mary D. Ayer, one of Ed E. Ayer's fleet of cedar vessels, was bound down the lake light from Chicago to Alpena. Rain had been falling heavily all the evening, making it impossible to see any distance.

STRICKEN BY CYCLONE.

Three Counties of Kansas Are Devastated by a "Twister."

Nemaha, Marshall and Cloud Counties were swept by a death-dealing cyclone late Sunday afternoon. Dismantled buildings mark the path of the fierce storm, fourteen persons are known to have been killed, from forty to sixty are reported injured, several of whom will die, and scores of families are homeless. The small number of casualties is accounted for by the fact that nearly all of the people fled to their cellars and cyclone caves.

Seneca, the county seat of Nemaha County, appears to have been the chief sufferer. One third of the resident part of the town, according to a dispatch, is in ruins, five persons were killed and fifteen badly injured, and 500 people have no roof to shelter them. The property loss at Seneca is estimated at $100,000. Sabetha, also in Nemaha County, according to report, was a severe sufferer. A brief dispatch states that twenty or twenty-five persons received injuries more or less severe, and that at least three or four of the victims will probably die. Twenty families lost all their worldly possessions and are temporarily dependent upon charity for subsistence. Sabetha is a small place north of here, near the Nebraska line.

After leaving Sabetha the cyclone took a narrow path toward Falls City, uprooting trees and dismantling farm buildings in its furious progress. In Frankfort, in Marshall County, the entire western and northwestern part of the town is in ruins. The property damage was far greater than at Sabetha, but the number of human victims of the storm's fury is happily considerably less. As far as heard from there was no loss of life there, and the number injured was hardly more than a dozen. Probably three-score of buildings were razed to the ground. Some of the best residences of Frankfort were blown to atoms, and reports from the surrounding country, where heavy damage has been done, will materially swell the loss. Many head of horses, cattle and other stock were killed.

Two couriers reported that everything in the village of Reserve was demolished by the cyclone, and that six people were killed at Reserve and many others injured. The little hamlet of Bodaville, in Riley County, was entirely swept away by the cyclone. At Spring Valley, some six miles south of Barnes, it tore down a church, in which 150 people were worshiping. Many were injured.

GIRDLED THE GLOBE.

Message Sent Twice the Distance Around the Earth.

A message around the world by telegraph was the feature at the national electrical exposition in New York Saturday evening, and on that occasion Dr. Chauncey M. Depew delivered an oration on "Progress and Future of Electricity" to 10,000 people. The message was written by Dr. Depew and addressed to Edward D. Adams, president of the Cataract General Electric Company. It was transmitted over the lines and connections of the Postal Telegraph Cable Company, from New York via Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Vancouver, Winnipeg and Canso, to London, and back via Boston to New York. The message was started at 8:34 o'clock, and was received by Thomas A. Edison at 8:38 o'clock.

The Western Union Company and connections also transmitted a copy of the message from New York through Mexico, down the west coast and up the east coast of South America, thence to Spain and back to New York, the time occupied being two minutes.

DEBS FOR PRESIDENT.

Chicago Labor Congress Names the American Railway Union Leader.

Eugene V. Debs was named for the presidency of the United States by the Chicago Labor Congress at its regular meeting Sunday afternoon. The resolution, introduced by Victor B. Williams of the printers, provoked a discussion which consumed nearly three hours, but it finally was adopted. It was recited in the resolution that as the corporations, syndicates and trusts are seeking to have presidential candidates nominated who are in sympathy with the existing order of industrial things, labor, organized and unorganized, should be equally solicitous that a man be nominated who is known to be friendly to workers and wealth producers. The congress expressed the belief that Eugene V. Debs is best fitted to become the leader of the industrial classes.

CHAPTER XXI.

It seemed, indeed, that Frank was dead. His face was rigid, and though Constance spoke to him imploringly again and again, he did not seem to hear her. He lay cold and motionless as stone. Wild with terror, she placed her hand upon his heart; it seemed to have stopped beating. The awful stillness of the room suddenly became oppressive—she gasped as if for air; she staggered to the door as if to procure assistance—she opened the door, and fell like a stone.

When she opened her eyes Alice Greybrook was bending over her. After one wild look in her friend's face, Constance staggered to her feet and gazed wildly around.

"Constance!" cried Alice, "for heaven's sake what is the matter? I did not reach the marquis' house until very late, and I found that he had gone to the ball. Constance, what is the matter?"

"The matter!" cried Constance. "Oh, Alice, look!"

Tremulously clinging to her, Constance dragged her into the room, and to the side of the couch where Frank was lying. With a cry Alice started back.

"A man!" she said—then, recognizing him, she added with a shudder, "Lord Harrington!"

"Yes," said Constance, still holding her tightly by the arm, "it is Frank. Look at him, Alice, quickly. Has he fainted? Is he asleep? Look!"

Conquering her terror, Alice bent forward and touched his face and hands; then she reverently drew back.

"He is dead," she said.

"No!" cried Constance, clutching wildly at her friend; "not dead! It is false—it cannot be! Heaven would not be so cruel!

Suddenly Alice started, went to the window, and looked out. When she turned again to Constance her face was as white as that of the man lying upon the couch.

"It is a carriage coming up the street," she said. "If it should be the duke! Constance, if, as you say, this is a trap, it must be the duke, and he will kill you!"

A moment later a knock and a voice without cried:

"Open quickly!"

Without more ado, Alice opened the door and the newcomer entered the room.

It was Mr. Feveral.

"Pardon my intrusion at this hour of the night," he said, "but I come on urgent business. The duke——'

"Is he with you?" asked Constance.

"He will follow almost immediately."

"Your message?"

"Is simple. I come to warn you."

"Indeed," she answered with a bitter smile, "even you come too late. Let us understand each other, Mr. Feveral," she continued, while Alice stood tremblingly by. "I am the Duchess d'Azzeglio and you are the duke's spy. The duke's departure for France was a pretense, your coming here to-night is a ruse. Well, sir, your work is done; we have fallen into the trap which you and your master laid for us. You have secured one victim—look!"

She pointed to the couch on which Frank was lying. Feveral started with a cry.

"The Earl of Harrington—dead?"

"Yes, dead!" repeated Constance, who seemed to have turned to stone. "Brought here by your master's deviltry, while still weak from his wounds he fainted and—died. Now, go to the duke; bring him here to look upon his work. I am prepared to meet him."

"Madam, you wrong me," said Feveral earnestly. "As I am a living man my wish is not to betray, but to save you."

"Constance," cried Alice, clinging to her, "trust this gentleman, and do as he advises. I believe he is your friend."

"And if I trust him—what then? This is the chamber of death. My husband will soon return and find——"

"Leave that to me," said Feveral. He took off his traveling cloak and covered the body, which lay there looking so ghastly in the lamplight. "Madam," he continued, turning to Constance, "I will help you all I can."

"Come, dear," said Alice, putting her arms about her, "let me take you to your room."

"Well," she returned, "take me where you please, I do not care. It is all a dream, Alice—a fearful dream, and I seem to be crawling forward to my grave. I only know that all I love is dead, and that my heart is broken."

Sobbing hysterically, she fell upon the girl's neck, and was gently led from the room.

CHAPTER XXII.

The moment she was gone Feveral's manner changed. He removed the cloak, and made a careful examination of the body.

The pulse beat feebly, and the blood still flowed from the wound. He did his best to staunch the bleeding; then he administered certain restoratives, which partially brought Frank back to consciousness. Alice Greybrook returning, gazed in amazement upon Frank's face.

"He is not dead," she said.

"Not yet," returned Feveral, quietly. "I told the duchess I should be able to help her. I can, Miss Greybrook. Remain here watching beside the couch. I must go to seek assistance. The help of a surgeon is necessary now." And he took his departure, leaving Alice alone.

While this was going on Constance was lying in her room in a kind of stupor. Suddenly she rose and passed at once into her boudoir. She glanced eagerly at the couch, and saw that Frank still lay there. With a cry of mingled despair and pain, she hurried forward, but Alice caught her in her arms.

"Constance," she whispered, "do not speak or cry. It is not so bad as we thought, dear. Heaven has been good to us; he is not dead."

Constance clasped her hands and sunk down sobbing beside the couch. Feveral returned with the surgeon and found her there. When she heard that a surgeon had come, she mechanically obeyed Feveral and allowed him to lead her from the room; nay, more, she took the composing draught which Alice pressed upon her, and very soon sunk into a deep sleep.

When she recovered her senses it was broad day; she lay still listening, but could not hear a sound. What had happened, how long had she been lying there? Had those strange events really taken place in the night, or was it all a wild dream?

She rose languidly and entered the adjoining room. Trembling violently, she turned her eyes toward the couch. Scarcely knowing what she did, she rushed forward to raise the cloak and look again upon Frank's dead face—when a mysterious and detaining hand was laid upon her arm, and looking up, she saw her husband.

Yes, it was indeed the duke, pale, cold and stern as usual. At sight of him Constance uttered a cry.

"You here?" she exclaimed.

"As you perceive," he returned. "But you are pale. I have startled you. You did not expect to see me so soon?"

"No, I did not," she answered, mechanically.

"I had not gone far from London," continued the duke, carelessly, "when it occurred to me that I had forgotten other business of an even more pressing nature than that which hurried me away. I hastened back. I am here to give you an agreeable surprise, and myself the unexpected felicity of your society."

"I—I cannot listen now," exclaimed Constance, wildly. "I cannot stay here——"

But the duke, the expression of whose face had grown strangely forbidding, laid a detaining hand upon her.

"You must stay," he said. "Let me request you to remain seated, madam, and listen to me. A certain husband pretended to leave home. In his absence his wife received her lover. Imagine their rapture! Feveral, are you listening?" for the latter had softly entered the room.

"My lord, I am all attention."

"Returning unexpectedly," continued the duke, "the husband found his wife temporarily absent and the lover stretched insensible on a couch. He touched the sleeping man and found him dead."

With a half-smothered cry, Constance rose from her seat, and again staggered a few steps toward the door, but the duke detained her.

"The husband instructed a certain trusty spy, who was devoted to him, to carry the dead man forth and leave him near his own door. The police, on recovering the body, would think he had died there, and not here."

He paused; with a wild cry Constance tottered to the couch, and lifted the cloak. The body was gone.

All restraint departed now. With a shudder, Constance dropped the cloak and turned to her husband, who, pale with passion, was quietly regarding her.

"Cast away into the streets!" she cried, wildly, "by you."

"No,' returned the duke, "by a trusty spy and servant."

"And you have murdered him," she cried; "perhaps he was not dead, and——"

"In any case I should have killed him!" returned the duke. "Still, having regard to the honor of my house, and wishing to avoid a public scandal——"

"You have doubly murdered him," she cried. "He did not come here of his own free will, but through a lying message from you. You have killed him; I am the most guilty; kill me, too. I am your wife in name only, for I loved my cousin with all my heart and soul."

In a fit of ungovernable fury, the duke rushed upon her, when suddenly a firm hand was laid upon his arm, and a voice said:

"Stay."

The duke turned fiercely and looked into the eyes of Feveral, who, perfectly self-possessed, continued to hold his arm firmly, and turned to speak to the duchess.

"Madam," he said in a clear, calm voice, "trouble yourself to utter no more self-accusations; you are as pure as snow, and you will live. My lord duke," he added, "stand aside, please. I object to your harming this lady!"

"Are you mad?" cried the duke, aghast.

"You shall judge of that later; but before I give any account of myself, let me inform this lady that the Duke d'Azzeglio, who is so covetous of his honor, is no other than——"

"Silence," cried the duke. "Sir, come with me," then turning to the duchess, he added: "Madam, I will return later, and finish what I have to say to you."

Without another word the two men passed out of the boudoir and went to the duke's study.

"Now, my lord,' said Feveral, "do you remember me?"

"No."

"Then I will refresh your memory. I am Arthur Clavering."

"Is it possible you are that man?"

"Most certainly; under that name I lived and traded in Venezuela. You made my home desolate, and when I raved of vengeance, I was thrown into a prison. When I came forth my wife was dead. You had vanished, but I swore to hunt you down. The time came, my lord, when you had a wife. I found her pure and noble, and I resolved to spare her, but I will not spare you!"

"I tell you, you are raving," said the duke; "I have no quarrel with you—I am not the man you seek!"

"When you tell me that, you lie! Yes, you are the devil through whose villainy I have been tortured for years. I demand satisfaction."

"What do you want?"

"Meet me; I wish to avenge my wife! You cannot refuse; there is no danger to you; I know well you are a practical duelist, while I——"

"We are in England," interrupted the duke, "we cannot fight here."

"Then come to France. If you refuse, I shall brand you as a coward, and proclaim your past life to all the world."

"I do not refuse," said the duke after some hesitation. "I will meet you as you wish."

CHAPTER XXIII.

After the two men left the boudoir, Constance remained like one in a wild dream, unable to think or move, then recovering herself a little, she crawled over to the couch on which the body of Frank had lain, and passionately kissed the spot where his head had rested.

What had become of Frank? she asked herself. Had her husband spoken the truth when he said that he was dead? If so, Feveral had again played the villain. Scarcely knowing what she did, she rushed to the door. On the very threshold of the room she was met by Alice.

"Constance," cried Alice, excitedly, "something terrible is happening, I am sure. The duke is locked in his study, and refuses to be seen. Mr. Feveral begged me to seek you instantly and deliver to you this letter."

Constance took the letter, opened it and read:

"Madam: When the duke said your cousin was dead he spoke falsely. The Earl of Harrington still lives; he will tonight be removed to the house of a great surgeon, who is willing to undertake the charge. The surgeon's address I enclose.

"RICHARD FEVERAL."

With a cry of joy, Constance kissed the letter.

Without a word of protest she resigned herself to her friend's care. The assurance of Frank's comparative safety brought a sense of happiness to her broken heart. She drank another composing draught, lay down upon the bed and slept.

"She must not remain here," said Alice to herself, "or she will die."

She rose from her seat at the bedside and returned to her own room. Once there she sat down and wrote to Mrs. Meason, warning the old lady not to be astonished if at any moment Constance were to arrive at Avondale Castle.

It was night when Constance awoke. The long sleep had refreshed her, but her head still felt heavy and painful. Foremost in her thoughts was the letter which Feveral had written. With a sudden impulse she rose, turned up the gas, and, without ringing for her maid, dressed herself hurriedly. Then she listened at the door; there was no sound, no sign of a living soul.

Grasping Feveral's letter in her hand, and thrusting a well-filled pocketbook into her breast, she descended the stairs, and passed from the house into the street.

It was very dark and raining heavily, but she made no attempt to turn back; she had a mission to fulfill, and she meant to see it through. Quickly calling up a hansom, she ordered the driver to take her to the address given in Feveral's letter. Thus it was that she paid that strange midnight visit to Sir John Priestly, described in the first chapter.

The interview with the doctor over, she returned to the cab and was rapidly driven back to Park Lane. She entered the house as quietly as she had left it, and, unseen by a soul, rapidly gained the solitude of her own room.

About an hour after Constance had paid her mysterious visit, Sir John Priestly again heard his bell ring. This time the mysterious patient had arrived. Frank was perfectly conscious now, but his face was as pale as death, and he hung his head as if in complete exhaustion. Feveral glanced at the doctor.

"The drive has been trying," he said.

"It has made my task an almost impossible one," returned the doctor gravely; "however, be so good as to assist me to carry him up to his room."

With morning came a great change; the torpor had passed away, and Frank was now not only insensible, but raving in delirious fever. The doctor tended him with the utmost care and secrecy. Feveral made a second call.

"Well?" he asked.

"Cerebral fever," said the doctor, "and the patient is in too low a condition to stand it long, I fear."

"Constance," moaned Frank continually. "Where is Constance? That man will kill her."

"Something is troubling him," said the doctor, "he might be better if his mind could be set at rest."

Feveral's face grew troubled; he sat down beside the bed and waited. Toward afternoon Feveral was still at his post, and Frank awoke from a deep sleep and knew him. His first words were:

"Where is Constance?"

"She is safe," replied Feveral, hurriedly; "her chief anxiety is for you. She knows you are here in safety and in good hands, and prays for your recovery."

Feveral rose. Frank turned his head and closed his eyes. Feveral beckoned the doctor from the room.

"I may not be able to call again," he said, "but I will now confide to you as a secret your patient's name. He is the Earl of Harrington."

(To be continued.)

What He Saw.

I was strolling over the mountain with the old man Robinson as he was familiarly known, when we came out upon a narrow ridge dividing a ravine as if it had been a natural bridge. On the east side there was almost a sheer fall of a hundred feet to the rocks in the bed of a creek; on the west side there were traces of an old path leading down into the dark ravine.

"I'll bet the moonshiners used to have a still down there," I said, as I pointed to the path.

"They did, fur shore," he replied.

"And if they posted their lookout man on that mass of rock over there what a show he had to discover the approach of any revenue spy and give warning."

"That's whar' he was posted fur over two years!" grimly answered the old man, as he shaded his eyes with his hand.

"If he knew the stranger was a spy," I continued, "he might draw bead on him."

"Yes; he mought."

"And a man struck in the breast by a bullet just here would throw up his arms, stagger backward, and go down on the rocks."

"Sartin' to, sah."

"And that would be his grave down there in the gloom, and unless one knew where to look he might hunt for a lifetime and never find trace of the missing man."

"That's how I figger, sah."

I laid down at full length and peered into the depths. By and by, when my eyes got used to the gloom, I made out something strange lying on a great rock at the bottom of the ravine. It looked to me like the figure of a man with his arms and legs outstretched, and I rose up and asked:

"Did you ever make your way down there?"

"I did once," he replied.

"And what did you find?"

"A dead man on a big rock—a revenue spy! Let's go on!"—Detroit Free Press

New York Money-Savers.

There are not only many money-earners but many money-savers in New York, according to the annual statement of the State Banking Department. This statement gives the condition of the savings banks and shows the total resources to be $783,078,580, the amount due depositors $691,764,504, and the amount deposited during the year $210,207,118, with $187,328,198 as the aggregate of withdrawals. The number of open accounts is 1,695,787.

THE EELS LIGHTHOUSE.

Novel Invention of a New England Sea Captain.

Members of the United States lighthouse board are considering an invention made by Captain Eels, a New England mariner, and are inclined to regard it as the best design ever presented for building lighthouses in the open ocean.

For three years engineers and scientists have been working on a mammoth design for a lighthouse on the outer shoal off Cape Hatteras, and at last they believe they have perfected a plan. It is estimated that it will cost at least $1,000,000 to carry it out. The design of the New England man provides for a light structure as high and as capable of displaying a light of the first order as any in the world, at a cost probably not exceeding $300,000.

In general appearance the lighthouse looks like an inverted funnel, and when in place the big end will be on the bottom, several feet in the sand, and the spigot end is to rise 100 feet, if necessary, to support the light. The drawing of the design submitted to the treasury department represents a lighthouse at least 150 feet high from the top of the lens to the bottom of the water, the height above the water line to be about 100 feet. The most remarkable feature of the scheme is the great diameter of the cylinder at the bottom and its comparative slenderness at the water line. The base represents a circle whose diameter is at least seventy feet, while a few feet above the water the structure is scarcely more than thirty feet through the center, and from that to the top of the light it continues to diminish until at the extreme top it is not more than twelve feet through. The big end of the funnel consists of two walls, one inside the other, with a space between of about eight feet at the bottom and graduating to four at the top, where the funnel meets the water line. This annular chamber is to be filled with masonry, of which enough to ballast the structure and keep it in an upright position is to be built in before starting for the sea. Steel composes the greater part of the structure, the framing and planting of the sides of the funnel being similar to the construction of a war ship. When the structure has been completed and towed out to sea and sunk, it is proposed to fill in the space between the inner and outer chambers with sand and stones, and thus weigh down the great inverted funnel to a firm hold on the bottom.

THE UNIQUE BED

In Which Mrs. Van Rensselaer Cruger Rests Her Weary Head.

There is a fad among New York society women at the present time for costly beds, and the price paid for some of these articles of furniture is fabulous, running into the thousands of dollars. There is a mania for imported bedsteads—beds that have been owned by French kings and queens and decorated by artists whose works are still famous on both continents.

Probably the most novel bed in New York is owned by Mrs. Van Rensselaer Cruger. It is shaped like a huge swan fashioned from her own design and made of white enameled wood. The curtains, of white muslin, are held in the swan's beak and draped at either side with broad white ribbons. The bed stands on a white fur rug and the canopy overhead is lined with ciel-blue satin. Since the creation of this unique bedstead "swan beds" are on sale by many of the swell furniture dealers of the metropolis.

An Apology.

A man who has a reputation for being very careless as to his toilet was elected town clerk in one of the small towns in this State some time ago, and the local paper thought it would be a good joke to announce that "Mr. Makeup will wash himself before he assumes the office of town clerk."

On reading the notice Mr. Makeup was furious, and demanded a retraction, which the paper accordingly made the following day, in this fashion:

"Mr. Makeup requests us to deny that he will wash himself before he assumes the office of town clerk."

And still Mr. Makeup was not pleased. How hard it is to satisfy some people!—Our Boys and Girls.

It Was a Fine Stream.

There is a "professional gentleman" in Portland who would make a successful horse swapper. Having a farm to sell, recently, this descendant of the Pilgrims advertised it, and soon afterward a gentleman called on him to speak about it.

"Well, judge," said he, "I have been over the farm you advertised and find it all right except the fine stream of water you mentioned."

"It runs through the piece of woods in the lowest part of the meadow," said the judge.

"What! that little brook? Why, it doesn't hold much more than a spoonful. I am sure if you would empty a bowl of water into it it would overflow. You don't call that a fine stream, do you?"

"Well, if it were much finer you couldn't see it at all," said the judge, blandly.—Portland Express.

THEIR FIRST BOAT RACE.

It Is Seventy Years Since Oxford and Cambridge Tried Conclusions.

The first boat race between the universities of Oxford and Cambridge took place on June 10, 1829, the course being from Hambledon lock to Henley bridge, BOAT RACE—THE CAMBRIDGE BOAT.

a distance of two and a quarter miles. The race was rowed in the evening, the Oxford crew appearing in blue check dress, the Cambridge in white with pink waistbands. The Cambridge men won the toss for sides, and chose the Berkshire shore. At the start the Cambridge coxswain steered out into the stream, and the Oxford coxswain, holding his course, a foul ensued. Thereupon the umpires decided that, as there was plenty of water on the Berkshire side, both boats should be allowed to row in it. The boats kept well together for some distance, but ultimately Oxford pulled ahead, and though the Cantabs made an excellent struggle they were unable to save the race, and the Oxford boat shot under Henley bridge several lengths to the good. The Cambridge boat had no chance at any time after it was seen from Henley bridge, but the crew displayed great skill and resolution, and certainly had no reason to be ashamed of their efforts. There was a magnificent display of fireworks in the evening, and everywhere the utmost enthusiasm prevailed. Several of the men in both crews afterward distinguished themselves, notably Dr. Charles Wordsworth and Dean Merivale and Bishop Selwyn of Cambridge. The boat in which the Cambridge crew rowed on this occasion was of the kind known as "Noah's ark," a heavy tub, differing as much from the slight outrigger of the present day as a smart up-to-date gunboat differs from one of the old wooden men-of-war. The race occupied 14:20.

One in a Million.

Dr. Abernethy, the famous Scotch surgeon, was a man of few words, but he once met his match—in a woman. She called at his office in Edinburgh one day and showed a hand, badly inflamed and swollen, when the following dialogue, opened by the doctor, took place:

"Burn?"

"Bruise."

"Poultice."

The next day the woman called again, and the dialogue was as follows:

"Better?"

"Worse."

"More poultice."

Two days later the woman made another call, and this conversation occurred:

"Better?"

"Well. Fee?"

"Nothing," exclaimed the doctor. "Most sensible woman I ever met."—New York Mail and Express.

A Fruity Name.

Orange Vandever Lemon Harbour is the fruity name of the pastor of the Methodist Church at Russiaville, Ind. He was named Orange Lemon in honor a Scotch-Irish clergyman of that name, who was well known in Indiana in 1857, when Mr. Harbour was born, and his second name, Vandever, is the name of a fine variety of apples which grew in the orchard of Mr. Harbour's father.

against the whole British nation at the famous Henley regatta. Treadway is the biggest man in New England today, and if the United States were not so exceedingly large he would be one of the best known men in the country. Captain Treadway is the flower and pride of Yale's manhood. Handsome, athletic, with a back as flat as a board, muscles of iron and strong health beaming out of his face, he is likewise good-natured, open-handed and open-hearted, and born for a college leader. England's boast is the fine young men she turns out of her universities, but she will show no finer than Ralph Treadway on the Thames when the brawny amateurs come together. Just now the stalwart young Westerner is the lion of the East, and the newspapers of all the big towns of the seaboard are full of him. He carries it all modestly, attends in a business-like way to his diurnal preparation for the coming contest with the Britons, and on his skill and direction Yale depends for the success of her colors abroad. But, although Treadway pays strict attention to his men and himself, he never loses sight of the fact that he is a student, and improves his mind. Before entering Yale he spent two terms at the University of Iowa.

The Gravel Road.

The following are the accepted bids for building the grade and graveling the Leighty & Shutt gravel road from Spencerville up past St. Joe as let by Superintendant E. Case, yesterday. It is official being furnished to this office by J. J. VanAuken, who is the engineer. It will be noticed that two jobs are let in each case, the "subgrade" means the leveling up, cutting down and filling the road bed to agree with the engineer's plans, which means a good deal of work, as no grade is to be more than 3 feet in 100. The next job is for covering the road so constructed, with gravel. The allottments are from "0," the starting point, to "stake 26." The next is from 26 to 52, and so on. The left hand column shows the grading and the right hand column the graveling. The total sum of cost of this work is $4,269.49, being within $4.70 of the estimate made by Mr. VanAuken two years ago. This proves his skill as a civil engineer.

First Electric Lights

J. E. Rose was over into Illinois a short time ago, and while in conversation with one of their leading citizens, a man who had been a resident for many years, learned to his surprise that Aurora was the first city in the world to use electric lights. This seems a little strange, as it is still a comparatively small city, having about 25,000 inhabitants, or about half as many of Ft. Wayne. But it is no doubt true. The gentleman said that the lights would not, of course, compare with the lights now in use, being much more imperfect. Still they were used and served their purpose fairly well. It is an honor of which Aurora may justly feel proud.

Against A Hobo.

We Hardly Thought They were Tough Enough to Break a Bicycle.

Last evening just before the heavy rain storm, Clyde Apple was enjoying a bicycle ride on the cement walk around the court house square on Arba Healey's wheel. A traveling man (one who travels in box cars) had just taken a drink at the town pump and started south on the walk when Mr. Apple came in contact with him. As a result the wheel, which was nearly new, was picked up shapeless. The hobo who gave his name as Smith, said he made no signal whatever, but simply bumped him off the walk. This should be a warning for our bicyclists who use the walk to be careful, and ride slow. There will not be so much danger then of an accident.

A Reunion.

A reunion of relatives and friends were invited May 26, 1896, to the residence of J. M. Weeks in honor of him, it being his 82 birthday; Uncle Jim one of the most prominent and successful of the pioneers of DeKalb Co. Ind., lives on his farm in Wilmington township where he settled in June 1836. But few people live now on the land they entered from the government, Mr. Weeks is one of them. Just before dinner a very appropriate address was given by Rev. J. D. Brosy, after which the old uncle was escorted to the table loaded down with good things. There were 52 present, to spend a few happy hours with Mr. Weeks. There were present 3 nephews, George Russel, of Miami Co. Ohio, J. W. Platter and Ed. Weeks, of Auburn, and 5 nieces, Mrs. L. There together with the husbands and wives some of whom have already been mentioned. The neighbors and friends of the community remained until late in the afternoon, when the setting sun told them they must repair to their homes again, and listen no longer to the good old stories, of one of DeKalbs' Pioneers.

—Holden Bros. Comedy Company for one week commencing Monday, June 8, 1896. We guarantee this company to be as good if not better than any company that has played the house this season. Here are some of the cities they have played this season: Minneapolis and St. Paul two weeks each, Kansas City three weeks, Sioux City 3 weeks, Academy of Music, Chicago 3 weeks, Park Theater, Indianapolis 3 weeks. I have procured this company as they had intended to close their season at Indianapolis by giving them a large amount of money for the week. Tickets can be had of Bishop & Lackey, R. Shull, D. A. Hodge, John Kruger, also will be on sale at F. E. Davenport's drugstore four days before Monday, June the 8th. Remember the date Monday, June 8th, 1896. J. C. Henry

BUTLER.

Ethel Keller, daughter of Christopher Keller, aged 16, died at her home on east North street, last week. She was highly esteemed by all who knew her, and the funeral was largely attended. Her parents have the sympathy of all our people in the loss of their youngest and only unmarried daughter. Her death was caused by consumption.

Bowman's sawmill, owned by Geo. W. Squires, formerly of Edgerton, O., burned last Wednesday night. The whole structure was enveloped in flames when discovered, and proved a total loss. Loss is estimated at $2,000, upon which was $900 insurance in the Scottish Union and National. Some blame seems to attach to the night watchman in not having discovered the fire until the mill was about burned down, though in plain view from Broadway and Oak street crossing.

The writer visited St. Joe last week and found the little hamlet stirred from center to circumference by a sensational scandal. The courts may be called on to air the matter.

J. A. Campbell and Frank Brunhart were on the C., J. & M. excursion to Toledo last Sunday morning.

W. F. Campbell, of Ft. Wayne, spent Sunday with Butler friends.

Died, at her residence in Butler, May 20, 1896, in the 80th year of her life, Sarah (Nelson) Thomas. She was born in Chillicothe, Ross county, Ohio, Jan. 30, 1817, where she grew to womanhood, and where, in her 16th year she became the wife of George Williams. To this union were born three children, only one of whom survives her—John N., of Colorado. In 1836, with her husband, father and family, emmigrated to Indiana, settling in LaGrange county, where they remained but a short time. Mr. Nelson being of a rambling disposition, sold his lands at a premium, packed their effects and started for their old Ohio home. Their route lay through the unbroken forests where Butler now stands. Evening overtook them on the banks of Big Run, a short distance east of Butler, where they came upon the camp of John Jacob Gunsenhouser, now living one mile east of Butler, who with his young wife and family had cast their fortunes to ague stricken Indiana. They fraternized over night in each other's company, with the result that upon the following day Mr. Nelson entered the quarter section now owned by Frank Reynolds, and soon after, the old homestead cornering on Butler's public square, where she and her husband and family made their beginning in Indiana. Soon after this Mr. Williams and his wife parted. May 2, 1842, she became the third wife of Daniel Tomlinson. To this union five children were born, three of whom, William W., Herman and Charles, are living. Daniel Tomlinson died Sept. 27, 1857. Feb. 14, 1861, she became the second wife of Joseph Butler, who died Sept. 22, 1862. In 1880 she became the wife of Jonathan Thomas, a noted Methodist preacher, who survives her. One peculiarity of her life was that all her children were boys. Mrs. Thomas was a woman of marked physical and mental ability; masterly in her efforts in many ways. She became a member of the Methhdist church in early life, and her devotion to it is best known by our older citizens, who well remember her church activity in earlier life. She was a constant attendant at all its gatherings, and a liberal supporter of its cause until age and infirmity rendered her powerless. She leaves a memory that will remain green for many years to come.

WATERLOO.

Rob Patterson was at Indianapolis as a delegate to the state meeting of Oddfellows, returning Friday.

They have all the stone foundation walls up for the new buildings on the burned block.

The white brick block on the south side, that partly broke down a short time ago, has been braced up, and is being put in shape to get it repaired or to clean up for a new one.

Ex-Sheriff Phil Plum is "at home" in his new location and his grocery looks as neat as a pin.

Work has begun on the foundation for the Press' new building near the site of the old mill.

The celebration is over and gone and our people are generaly pleased with it.

Ex-Sheriff Jerry Plum was 84 years old May 15. And he is a pretty lively old gent yet. The flies don't light on your Uncle Jerry.

There were many little reunions among the older people who attended the "Centenial" as one man called it. Many met for the first time in severa years.

Adam Jackman and wife are visiting here now and may stay several weeks. Their present home is in Grand Rapids Mich., although they still own their farm in Oklahoma. They have rented the farm and may not go back there for several years.

Uncle John Leas gets up town once in a while. He is looking some better than he did a few months ago, though still far from being in good health.

MRS. MAGGIE MYERS.

Williamsport, Ind., writes: "I suffered for months of severe stomach troubles, caused by indigestion and constipation. My trouble seemed almost unendurable. I purchased a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin of Armstrong & Swank and as soon as I had taken its contents I was like a new person, and I now feel better and weigh more than I have for years." It is sold in 10c, 50c and $1.00 size at Robbins & McCord's. 22

TRUE MONEY.

T IS CLEARLY EXPLAINED BY COLONEL GREENE.

It Must Have Certain Properties—It Must Have Value—It Must Be the Most Adapted to Existing Conditions—Why Articles Were Demonetized.

In the opinion of some excellent judges the address of Colonel Jacob L. Greene before the Hartford board of trade on March 28, is one of the clearest statements of the true functions of money ever made. Colonel Greene is president of the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance company, said to be the largest moneyed institution in New England. We quote below a part of this most excellent speech:

Trade exists before money. Money is born of the necessities of trade, and is simply its instrument. And trade, no matter how complex its forms, how narrow or how wide its field, what the range of its objects or the number or character of its instrumentalities and incidents, is nothing else but the free, willing exchange of one man's property for that of another. The fundamental fact, and the everlasting moral element in such exchanges, is this: No man willingly exchanges his own valuable commodity, his property, except for another commodity, another piece of property of at least equal value to him.

But the direct exchange or barter of scattered commodities by their respective owners is a slow, laborious, costly and inconvenient process. The problem of trade is to bring the scattered owners of needed commodities and the scattered consumers of them effectively together as seasonably, quickly and cheaply as possible. All the manifold instrumentalities of commerce are merely devices to that one end. And the first necessity to that end is some form and kind of property so useful and desirable to all men, no matter for what special reason, and so uniformly and universally acceptable by them that they will everywhere among these producers and consumers readily exchange for it any item of property they wish to exchange, knowing that it will, willingly and without loss, be taken in exchange for any other item of property they may happen to want and whenever they may happen to want it. That kind of property for which all other kinds can be exchanged, which can buy and sell all others, men call money. To serve this use most effectively and economically, it must possess in the highest attainable degree certain qualities. It must have value, real usefulness in itself, for men do not willingly trade valuable for valueless things. It must keep its value, for men will not trade value for a valueless thing merely because it once had value. They must have the present substnace and not the mere tradition of value. It must be as invariable in value as possible—that, while it is kept on hand awaiting other exchanges, it may lose as little as possible of its power to buy other commodities. It must be as nearly imperishable and indestructible as possible consistent with sufficient abundance, both for convenience of handling and for safety and cheapness of carriage. It must be of a sort of equally valuable, equally desirable, equally acceptable wherever men trade, elsewhere its purchasing power is not everywhere equal, and its function so far fails.

Wherever men have advanced beyond savagery, they have by custom and common use adopted some then available form of property, possessing more or less of these qualities, as the medium of their exchanges. So long as, for any reason, that form has had a recognized value and acceptability as wide as the range of trade of that time, it has served its purpose, even if imperfectly. When its acceptability has ceased, or has ceased to be commensurate with the field of trade, it has dropped out of use. History is full of instances of disused and abandoned moneys.

Whenever a particular form of property has served as a medium of exchange, it has necessarily become a measure of the value of every item of property exchanged by its intervention. When cowries were the medium, everything else was valued in cowries. It was the same way with sheep, cows, cloths, hides, bunches of shingles, etc. So that intermediate kind or form of property, by first exchanging for which all other kinds of property are exchanged for each other, is for the time being both a medium of exchange and a measure of value of the things exchanged.

Whenever a money has been a kind of property which existed in natural units, like cowries, arrowheads, sheep or other like sort, the conventional unit of exchange has been the natural unit by which the count of quantity would be made. But when the extension of the field of trade and the changed wants of men have compelled such refinements in the quality, bulk and convenience of the instrument of exchange that the rarer metals were more acceptable for the purpose, some conventional unit of quantity and some universally satisfactory mode of its certification had to be found, and out of this necessity grew the various denominations of money, which are measures of the quantity of the property contained in such units, and also the coinage laws by which the quality and quantity of the property contained in such units, and also the coinage laws by which the quality and quantity of the property so used is officially ascertained and certified for the safety of those who would exchange their property therefor. This does away with the inconvenient scales and tests of the ancient merchant and allows actual quantity to be accurately ascertained by mere count of unworn pieces.

It ought to be a mere truism to say that coinage does not and cannot affect value; that it simply certifies the quality and quantity of a certain piece of property, for the information and convenience of that world of trade whose use and mutual agreement alone establishes the value of the property so certified. Coinage does not make copper silver nor silver gold, nor does it make two grains of one, nor affect in the least degree the rate of their exchange for each other in the open market.

When the coinage ratio of 16 to 1 was adopted, it was as nearly as possible the market ratio of silver to gold. The two metals were thus treated as nearly alike as possible. In order to get 1,000 silver dollars one had to take to the mint $1,000 worth of silver. But with free coinage at 16 to 1, with the present market price of silver and unlimited legal tender, I can take $500 worth of other property, go into the market and buy $500 worth of silver bullion, take it to the mint, have it coined into 1,000 silver dollar pieces and compel you to accept them in discharge of my previously incurred debt to you for $1,000 worth of gold or of any other equally valuable property which you had let me have in exchange for an equally valuable amount of property promised to be delivered to you at a future time. But do not expect to recoup yourself by taking that same $500 worth of silver in the 1,000 pieces and going into the market with it and buying $1,000 worth of other property with it, just because the law enabled me to compel you to take it, for the $1,000 worth of some sort of property which you had let me have on the faith or promise of getting another $1,000 worth in return. If it be otherwise, if a legal tender act can make 50 cents' worth of silver as valuable in the market as 100 cents worth of gold, it can work the same change in 10 cents worth of pewter. The value of the bullion, the property itself, is then no longer an element in the question of the value of a silver dollar, or any other dollar, and the question of the relative production and abundance of silver and gold, or of any other metal, is wiped out. Let us all get a few hundredweight of iron, pass a law requiring only a few grains of it in a dollar of full legal tender quality with free coinage and be rich.

The Society of Lady Embalmers recently had a big meeting in Indianapolis. This is a strange profession for a lady to adopt, yet it seems there were a large number in attendance.

The famous battle of Waterloo was fought June 8, 1815 and still there are three survivors on the French pension lists. Their ages are 102, 104 and 104 years. The last one named was discharged from the army soon after the battle as a consumptive. And still he lives.

—Senator Vest of Missouri, threatens to secede from the democratic party, unless they adopt a free silver plank at Chicago. Well, if he is no more dangerous than he was when he seceded and became a rebel soldier in 1861, he wont do much damage to anyone but himself.

Nobody in Auburn got the $1,000 for guessing how that story, "Sons and Fathers," came out. The nearest to this town, was Miss Georgia VanFleit, at Garrett, who got $10. Two Fort Wayne ladies, Mrs. G. Shulz and Mrs. Joseph T. Hanna were also in the ten dollar list. The $1,000 prize was won by a lady in Chicago.

The Elkhart Truth is certain that before Tom Taggart and the other democratic nominees get through with the republican state ticket, Mount will look Haggard Owen to his failure to Ketchum at the ballot box, and then he can continue to look after the farm for his Daily occupation.

—For every quarter in a man's pocket there are a dozen uses; and to use each one in such a way as to derive the greatest benefit is a question every one must solve for himself. We believe, however, that no better use could be made of one of these quarters than to exchange it for a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy, a medicine that every family should be provided with. For sale by Daveuport the Druggist. 22

J. A. Mount, the farmer who was nominated at Indianapolis Thursday, as a republican candidate for governor, has seven letters in his name. He was nominated on the seventh ballot on the seventh day of the month, was victorious by 763 votes, which is a multiple of seven, is fifty-seven years old, and wil do an exclusive farming business in 1897, whibh is also a multiple of 7.

—Mr. D. P. Davis, a prominent liveryman and merchant of Goshen, Va., has this to say on the subject of rheumatism: "I take pl asure in recammending Chamberlain's Pasn Balm for rheumatism, as I knew from peronal experience that it will do all that is claimed for it. A year ago this spring my brother was laid up in bed with inflammatory rheumatism, and suffered intensely. The first application of Chamberlain's Pain Balm eased the pain and the use of one bottle completely cured him. For sale by Davenport the Druggist. 22

A wild red squirrel gave some of the people in the east part of town, a surprise. As M. B. Masters went to step out of doors, he was astonished to see a squirrel flash by him and into the house. Then he perched himself up out of danger, and it took a good deal of strategy to get him to vacate. He was evidently scared, and perhaps had been chased, and took this way to throw his pursuer off the track.

As usual the small boys followed the clown during the parade. But to-day the clown got funny and whipped the mule which he was drawing with a club and ran over several boys. Three were run over with the wheels and one, Fred Refner, was tramped on by the mule. He was unconscious when picked up. His face was cut about the mouth and one tooth loosened. Just who was to blame is hard to tell. He is now resting easy at his home his hurts having been dressed. There is quite a bad scalp wound, and some bruises on his cheek and face, but nothing serious, it is hoped.

MY PATRIOT BOY.

Did I tell you, O friend, of a proud, sad day
When my beautiful boy went marching away
To a far-away battle-field?
When our country's call was heard by me
And all mothers whose sons were needed to fight
For God and our country and the cause of right,
But my heart stood still and it seemed that a pall
Wrapped me as the world is wrapped by the night.
And I thought as I wrought while the days went by—
And I prayed to my God, whose throne is on high,
And who careth for me to care for my boy,
To bless our land and give us joy
In the light of liberty's sun.
Then victory came, but 'twas purchased dear,
The bells pealed out from far and near,
And I heard loud shouts ring in the air,
And the feet of men rush here and there.
I called aloud: "Is there news for me? What news for me?"
My tear-dimmed eyes can scarcely see—
And I heard for answer, so like a knell:
"It is well with your boy. It is well."
And then I knew my child no more
Would come to me as in days of yore,
And thus the Father had answered my prayer
By taking from earth to the home over there
My darling child, so brave, so dear,
His sweet "My mother" I'll never more hear.
And yet 'twas a glorious death, and he Died for the life of our dear country,
And your children's children will peace enjoy,
Bought with the life of my precious boy.

WHERE THE BATTLE WAS FOUGHT.

"HOLD up your right hand, my man."

The witness held up his left hand, and the judge, believing that he was defiant, said with a show of anger:

"Hold up your right hand and take the oath!"

Again the left hand was raised, and the judge, turning to a deputy, shouted:

"Arrest that man for contempt of court. He refuses to hold up his right hand."

"Judge," said the man, a dilapidated specimen of humanity, "I can't hold up my right hand—I left it at Gettysburg a good many years ago. But I can swear all right with my left hand."

There was a sensation in court. No one had noticed that the artifically stuffed sleeve was tucked into the coat pocket at the wrist, giving the figure that defiant air that had aroused the anger of the presiding officer. Now when they knew that no hand was there, a thrill of sympathy ran through the crowd, and the judge was visibly agitated and even apologized.

"I did not know that you had been a soldier," he said gently, as if that fact were excuse enough for any lapse of duty on the present occasion.

"I am a soldier yet," said the man in the witness box; "once a soldier always a soldier, is my creed. I'm under marching orders and likely to join my regiment any time. It's many years since I first went soldiering. I was a likely chap then, judge."

"Yes, yes," said the judge, who had been staring fixedly at the man while his face, flushed and paled with some secret emotion, "but this is hardly the time or place for reminiscences. Your testimony in the case on hand is all that is required now. Counsel for the defense will examine this witness," and the judge turned to other business as if the subject no longer interested him.

But he had not done with it. When he went out of the court house on his way home, the one-armed soldier was waiting for him, and he stopped with an impatient air to hear what he had to say. It was evident that the man had been drinking, and his general appearance was more down at the heels than before.

"Judge," he asked, with tipsy gravity, "might your name be Shields?"

"Yes; my name is Shields. Have you any further business with me? I am in something of a hurry."

"So'm I, Judge Shields. I've been waiting over thirty years to ask you a question and get an answer. You don't happen to know me, judge?"

"No," came the low answer as the judge looked into the face of the soldier with a shifting earnestness, taking in the whole figure in that uncertain way, "I don't think I ever saw you before."

"Think again, my friend—you are my friend, ain't you—did you ever know a young man—a robust, strapping fellow—named Leonard Hurst?"

"My God, man, Leonard Hurst died during the war—he was killed in the battle of Gettysburg, and is buried up in yonder cemetery."

"Is he? That's news to me, Hiram Shields, and it's a lie. He had a friend—a young man like himself—no, not like him, for Leonard Hurst would have given his life for that friend, and thought it no sacrifice—but the friend didn't enlist. He stayed at home, and while Hurst was fighting the enemy at the front, Shields, his friend, won his promised wife away from him, married the girl Leonard Hurst had loved all his life."

"I'll hear the story at another time," said Shields, who was in a panic of nervousness over this strange recital.

"You'll hear it now," retorted the other man, swaying back and forth, yet speaking with the utmost distinctness. "Leonard Hurst went away with drums beating, and flags flying, and he was gone three years. One of those years he spent in a Southern prison—the fortune of war. He came home a wreck, to be nursed back to life and strength by those for whose sake he had suffered—he came home to find himself a dead man!"

"CAUGHT HIM BY THE THROAT."

The dry lips of the judge worked convulsively, but he said no word.

"His friend had buried him. A stone at the foot of his grave had his name and number, gathered from the prison hospital. He was dead and buried, and his friend had married his sweetheart."

"You are excited," said Shields, finding his voice; "come home with me and——"

"You haven't heard it all yet. Maybe you think it was hard to stand in front of a fire of shot and shell, and be torn asunder by cannon balls. Why, man, that was nothing, to the soldier, to what he suffered when he came home and found himself shut out of the ranks of living men—read his own name on a gravestone, and heard his friends talk of his death. And that was nothing to the fact that the girl who swore fealty to him had married his false friend. When he knew that, the bitterness of death had passed. It was there his first and last real battle was fought, when he conquered himself, and let the man live who had made earth a hell for him."

"Have you no pension?" asked the judge suddenly.

"Pension? Do they pension dead men?"

The judge was trembling violently. As the effects of the liquor wore off, the soldier became more excitable, and erratic lights flashed from his sunken eyes. His whole expression was a menace to the man who stood trembling before him. But when his strange companion with a sudden swift motion caught him by the throat, Shields made no resistance, and the other holding him thus a moment, threw him off contemptuously.

"Tell me to my face I am dead," sneered the soldier with livid lips, "you who robbed me of the dearest thing I had in life—and of life itself! Assassin! She, too, is dead—perhaps you killed her?"

"Hurst," said Shields, wiping the drops of ghastly fear from his pallid face, "if you are indeed a living man, listen to me.

"THE SOLDIER LIFTED HIS SHABBY CAP WITH REVERENCE."

It may be some satisfaction to you to know that Mabel never loved me, although she was my wife. She died with your name on her lips. She believed you dead, and kept your grave green with her tears."

"Say that again!" cried the soldier. "Oh, my God, it pays to have been dead and buried all these years, to know that after all she was true. I had it in my mind to kill you; yes, I meant it when I had my hand at your throat, but those words have saved you! God will settle the account between us!"

"He has settled it," answered Shields solemnly. "He closed the account when he refused me Mabel's love—when He took her from me as the worst punishment He could inflict. But I honestly believed that you were dead—that it was your shattered form I brought from the battlefield and buried up yonder."

"That gave you a right to love Mabel?"

"No"—Shields hung his head in bitter grief and shame—"I—I had tried to win her before that, but she would not listen to me—she never would have listened, but for your death—and, Hurst, that knowledge killed her. She was my wife in name, but her heart was with you."

The soldier lifted his shabby cap with reverence. He raised his eyes to the blue canopy of heaven, and his lips moved in prayer.

"I have fought my last battle," he said, extending his one poor hand to Shields, "we are friends from this hour, comrade."

"You have called me comrade," said Shields, his eyes filling with tears; "I am no soldier, but I know what that word means. We are comrades for the rest of the march—we will part no more. From this hour my home is your home."

Thus it came about that these two became to each other even as David and Jonathan, united by a friendship surpassing the love of woman. Nor is the unknown soldier who sleeps far from home and friends forgotten. On each Memorial day flags wave and flowers bloom over his dust and a white-haired man and a one-armed soldier sit there to talk over the strange enigma of his last resting place.

"Enough if on the page of war and glory,
Some hand has writ his name."

HORRORS OF WAR.

Scenes Among Women, Children and Wounded After Battle.

Shepherdstown lies near a bed in the Potomac river not far from Harper's Ferry, Martinsburg, Antietam and other places made historic by the civil war. It lies in the midst of the region where the hardest and bloodiest fighting of 1862 was done and, especially the Antietam battle, was a scene of horrors. The village houses had been turned into hospitals where the wounded were cared for and a woman who was a nurse in one of these thus describes the scenes witnessed in the village after McClellan put Lee to flight at Antietam:

"The Confederate army was in full retreat. Lee had crossed the Potomac under cover of the darkness and when morning came the greater part of his force had gone on toward Kearneysville. McClellan followed to the river and without crossing got a battery in position on Douglas Hill and began to shell the retreating army and, in consequence, the town. Panic instantly seized the people. The danger was less than it seemed, for McClellan was not bombarding the town, but the army, and most of the shells flew over us and exploded in the fields. The better people kept some outward coolness, but the poorer classes acted as if the town were already in a blaze, and rushed from their houses with their families and household goods to make their way into the country. The road was thronged, the streets blocked, men were vociferating, women crying, children screaming, wagons, ambulances, guns, caissons, horsemen, footmen, all mingled—nay, even wedged and jammed together in one struggling, shouting mass. It was pandemonium. The negroes were the worst, and with faces of a ghastly ash-color, and staring eyes, they swarmed into the fields, carrying their babies, their clothes, their pots and kettles, fleeing from the wrath behind them.

"Had this been all, we could afford to laugh now, but there was another side to the picture that lent it an intensely painful aspect. It was the hurrying crowds of wounded. Ah me! those maimed and bleeding fugitives! When the firing commenced the hospitals began to empty. All who were able to pull one foot after another, or could bribe or beg comrades to carry them, left in haste. In vain we implored them to stay; in vain we showed them the folly, the suicide, of the attempt; in vain we argued, cajoled, threatened, ridiculed, pointed out that we were remaining and that there was less danger here than on the road. There is no sense or reason in a panic. The cannon were bellowing upon Douglas Hill, the shells whistling and shrieking, the air full of shouts and cries; we had to scream to make ourselves heard. The men replied that the 'Yankees' were crossing; that the town was to be burned; that we could not be made prisoners, but they could; that, anyhow, they were going as far as they could walk, or be carried. And go they did, but how?

"Men with cloths about their heads went hatless in the sun, men with cloths about their feet limped shoeless on the stony road; men with arms in slings, without arms, with one leg, with bandaged sides and backs; men in ambulances, wagons, carts, wheelbarrows, men carried on stretchers, or supported on the shoulder of some self-denying comrade—all who could crawl went, and went to almost certain death. They could not go far; they dropped off into the country houses, where they were received with as much kindness as it was possible to ask for; but their wounds had become inflamed and angry, their frames were weakened by fright and over-exertion; erysipelas, mortification, gangrene set in; and the long rows of nameless graves still bear witness to the results."

Their Annual Reunion.

The Man of the Musket.

Soldiers, pass on from this rage of renown,
This ant-hill, commotion and strife,
Pass by where the marbles and bronzes look down
With their fast frozen gestures of life,
Oh, out to the nameless who lie 'neath the gloom
Of the pitying cypress and pine;
Your man is the man of the sword and the plume,
But the man of the musket is mine.

I knew him! By all that is noble, I knew

This commonplace hero I name!
I've camped with him, marched with him, fought with him, too,
In the swirl of the fierce battle-flame!
Laughed with him, cried with him, taken a part
Of his canteen and blanket, and known
That the throb of this chivalrous prairie boy's heart
Was an answering stroke of my own.

I know him, I tell you! And, also, I knew
When he fell on the battle-swept ridge,
That the poor battered body that lay there in blue
Was only a plank in the bridge
Over which some should pass to a fame
That shall shine while the high stars shall shine!
Your hero is known by an echoing name,
But the man of the musket is mine.

I knew him! All through him the good and the bad
Ran together and equally free;
But I judge as I trust Christ will judge the brave lad.
For death made him noble to me!
In the cyclone of war, in the battle's eclipse,
Life shook out its lingering sands,
And he died with the names that he loved on his lips,
His musket still grasped in his hands!
Up close to the flag my soldier went down,
In the salient front of the line;
You may take for your heroes the men of renown,
But the man of the musket is mine!

THEY ARE BROTHERS NOW.

The Spirit that Exists Between Veterans of Both Sides.

Although the horrors of war are the more conspicuous where the conflict is between brothers and the struggle is long and desperate one, the evidences are numerous that, underneath the passion and bitterness of our civil war, there were counter currents of kindly feeling, a spirit of genuine friendliness pervading the opposing camps. This friendliness was something deeper than the expression of mere human instinct; the combatants felt that they were indeed brothers. Acts of kindness to wounded enemies began to be noted at Bull Run, while in every campaign useless picket firing was almost uniformly discountenanced, and the men shook hands at the outposts and talked confidingly of their private affairs and their trials and hardships in the army. This feeling, confined perhaps, to men on the very front line culminated at Appomattox, where the victors shared rations with their late antagonists and generously offered them help in repairing the wastes of battle.

When the Union veteran returned to the North he did not disguise his faith in the good intentions of the Southern fighting man.

The spirit that moved Lincoln to say in his last inaugural, "With malice toward none," has continued its holy influence. That which must appear to the world at large a startling anomaly, is in truth the simple principle of good-will, unfolding itself under favorable conditions. The war, that is, the actual encounter on the field, taught the participants the dignity of American character.

Candidates and Age.

The ages of the Republican entries run as follows: McKinley, 52; Reed, 57; Cullom, 67; Allison, 68; Morton, 72.—Cincinnati Tribune.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

M'KINLEY'S NOMINATION.

Accepting as virtually a foregone conclusion that Major McKinley will be nominated at St. Louis next month, some important questions press for immediate attention upon the American people. The policy for which the Ohioan stands pre-eminently—the policy for which his enthusiastic supporters in every part of the Union clamor with brazen tongue—is revolutionary. It is a reopening of the great tariff war, the re-enactment of the so-called McKinley law, the granting of untold bounties and subsidies, the imposition of unheard-of prohibitory rates of duty upon imports, with all the business-disturbing, commerce-destroying, monopoly-fostering and currency-debasing consequences which experience has fully taught us resulted from the first McKinley tariff, and have always followed "protectionist" legislation. In 1892 the people rose and with tremendous indignation rejected this policy and proclaimed themselves for tariff-reform, if not for commercial liberty. This was nothing new in American history. In 1828, when John Quincy Adams ran the second time for the Presidency, he was overwhelmingly defeated on the "protection" issue. In 1844 Mr. Clay's splendid campaign for "protectionism" met with a like signal defeat, and in 1884 the Republicans, even with Mr. Blaine as their leader, were unsuccessful. It may therefore be asked, Has the country any new light upon the workings of a "protectionist" policy which will induce it in 1896 to approve what since 1828 it has so often condemned.

The favorite pretext for the new and furious tariff war which Major McKinley's followers are now stirring up is that under the Wilson law the revenue has not kept pace with the lavish expenditures of the government. But it has been shown over and over again that the Wilson tariff yields as much customs revenue as the McKinley tariff could possibly have yielded had the latter been in force during the last twenty months of trade-depression, currency troubles and war scares.

The people will look into this and several other like pretexts on which they will be asked to vote for a huge augmentation of the burdens of taxation, euphoniously styled "protection." It will not do for blind partisans to assume that the people can be always mystified by fine phrases. If the Republicans are wise they will guarantee the country a respite from business-destroying agitation of the tariff.—New York Herald.

A Shoddy Great Man.

Another type of the shoddy great man is McKinley, of Ohio. His delusion is that the people have gone crazy about protection, that they are madly eager to elect a high-protectionist, and that if his views on protection are only rabid enough he need have no views on any other subject. Accordingly he announces himself as prosperity's advance agent, and no doubt honestly feels that the accidental linking of his name with a high tariff bill that once wrecked his party will make him a great man. In his campaign methods he aims to combine the bluff, diffusive geniality of Blaine with the quiet, practical wire-pulling of Hill; and yet he has not a tithe of the ability of either man. Much less is he great. None but a man of hopeless mediocrity would try to escape a clear declaration upon the most vital issue of the day, and none but such could avoid seeing that the issue of to-day is finance rather than tariff. Yet he has chosen to stand upon a platform framed with intent to deceive both parties. Peffer, of Kansas, is a greater man than McKinley, because he has the courage of his convictions. He believes in making everybody rich by the simple device of issuing the money to do it, and he says so. If McKinley has any views at all upon finance he is too much of a coward to make them known, and he is quite stupid enough to believe he may win in spite of this cowardice. He would dearly like to be a great man, and if he knew just how to go about it he would be. But he doesn't know. He hasn't even learned that a truly great man is never afraid to say what he thinks.—Puck.

To Settle the "Cheap-Goods" Question.

There is a very easy way in which to test public sentiment in regard to the respective advantages of cheap versus dear goods. The Republicans as a class profess to believe that a low tariff is an evil, in that it lowers prices and enables the consumers to buy things cheaply. Major McKinley, the most prominent candidate for the Republican nomination for President, declared in a recent interview that he saw nothing good in cheap products, and his views have been enthusiastically endorsed by the protectionist press. On the other hand, the Democratic party stands for a policy under which goods of all kinds can be most cheaply and abundantly produced.

If the McKinleyites are really convinced that it is better to have things scarce and dear they should try the experiment on a small scale by having their village, town or city impose taxes of fifty per cent on all goods manufactured outside of its boundaries. This would at once put prices up higher than under the tariff of 1890, and would effectually do away with all danger of cheap goods. Then, according to the men who are afraid of cheapness, everybody will be far more prosperous than the natural condition of affairs. Why does not some Republican town or city show its faith in its political theories by abolishing cheapness through heavy taxes on all products brought within its borders?

McKinley's Strength and Weakness.

We are not questioning the genuineness of the popular enthusiasm in many parts of the country among the rank and file of the Republican party for McKinley. There is much enthusiasm—more that appears to be spontaneous than for any other candidate. But along with that are these other facts. Let us recapitulate them and in inverse order: 1. The independent voters and press are opposed to McKinley. 2. Very few of the leading party papers favor McKinley. 3. The more thoughtful and conservative men of the party either openly oppose McKinley's nomination or doubt its wisdom. 4. The most of the active, practical, experienced politicians of the party are working against McKinley.—Indianapolis News.

Unprecedented Exports.

The Bureau of Statistics of the United States Treasury Department furnishes the Herald's Washington correspondent some interesting returns which show that the exports of American manufactures are now far outstripping all previous records in our history.

The official data of the bureau show that during March last the value of our manufactured exports reached the unprecedented total of $19,125,785, or 25.85 per cent. of the gross exports. The phenomenal increase of manufactured exports began in 1895, and during last year they exceeded 200 millions. In March the flood of such exports was at the rate of 229½ millions per annum.

The striking increase, which began in 1895, has not been spasmodic, but has been steadily augmented. The Bureau of Statistics now reports that for the nine months ending with March last the manufactured exports amounted to $163,187,926, and were 24.57 per cent. of our gross exports.

The great significance of these figures can best be seen by noting that in no year before 1895, when the Wilson tariff went fully into effect, had the exports of our manufactures reached a total of $184,000,000. In the fiscal year 1891 the exports of domestic manufactures were only $168,927,315, or 19.37 per cent. of all exports of merchandise; in 1892 they were only $158,510,937, or 15.61 per cent., and in 1893, $183,718,484, or 21.24 per cent.

The present marked increase in exports of the products of American labor speaks much encouragement for our mills and factories and is an earnest of new and still larger conquests of foreign markets by our domestic fabrics.—New York Herald.

High-Tariff Absurdities.

Says a tariff paper: "Uncle Sam ought to charge enough for the privilege of coming into his market to yield him enough to pay all the expenses of the Government, with a handsome surplus each year to apply to the extinguishment of the national debt." How very nice that would be if you could only do two things: First, charge enough; and, second, make the "pauper" foreigner pay the charges. But it so happens that you can't do either. You can't make a tariff that will cover the cost of a Republican administration, to say nothing of surplus. If you could, not the foreigner but the American people would pay it to the last cent, and they would pay in proportion not to their abilities, but to the number of mouths they have to feed and backs to clothe. And, what is worse, they would have to pay from three to five times as much to enrich the Government's pet classes. Uncle Sam ought not to be guilty of any such monstrous injustice.—Chicago Chronicle.

Reed's Chickens Come Home to Roost.

The whirligig of time brings its revenges. When Speaker Reed made Major McKinley chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, and then jammed through the House without debate the monstrosity known as the McKinley tariff act—which was licked into a more tolerable shape in the Senate—he dug a pit into which he himself has tumbled. Instantly the country repudiated McKinley and his tariff act; but under the operation of one of those puzzling revulsions of popular sentiment which defy all precalculation McKinley has suddenly been pushed to the front and Reed remanded to the rear. And to make disappointment more bitter, the McKinley managers have had the assurance to ask Speaker Reed to play second fiddle.—Philadelphia Record.

Secret of Tanner's Nomination.

Tanner, the Republican candidate for Governor of Illinois, is said to be illiterate and strangely deficient in grammar. If he is "well up" in other matters this deficiency will, perhaps, not interfere with his efficiency as Governor, but as the Republican party has plumed itself on having exclusive possession of all the education and learning in the world, one is curious to know just how his nomination was brought about. "Bill" Chandler says the manufacturers chipped in and bought up sentiment for McKinley so as to effect his nomination, but what sort of rascality was used to secure Tanner's nomination?—Indianapolis Sentinel.

Reed Naturally Desires Retirement.

The Republican newspapers are beginning to protest against the political retirement of Speaker Reed, declaring him to be a man who is too able and too big for them to lose. This sort of talk comes rather late in the day. The humiliation Reed has received at the hands of his party very naturally leads him to seek retirement. No man with self-respect can view the Republican situation with complacency. When a party sets the barrel above the brain and puts aside men like Reed and Allison for men like McKinley it must expect important retirements from its leadership as well as from its ranks.—New York Journal.

A New Tail to the Ticket.

Henry Cabot Lodge is the latest vice presidential candidate on the McKinley ticket. Senator Lodge would doubtless prefer to remain a Senator from Massachusetts than to be vice president. Besides, the ticket of McKinley and Lodge would be an unsymmetrical one. The biggest man would be at the bottom of the ticket.—Boston Globe.

Why Platt Hates Ohio Men.

Mr. Platt's hatred of Ohio men in politics is not unnatural. Garfield, who had an important part in Mr. Platt's Senatorial career, was from Ohio, and so is William L. Strong, the present Mayor of New York.—Springfield Republican.

Sardou is now 64 years old; wrinkled and half bald, but in his elastic step and brilliant eye as youthful as a boy. He is said to have earned $1,000,000 from his plays. Yet his first play was a dire failure.

Rudyard Kipling was asked recently whether he enjoyed writing poetry or prose most. He remarked that the pleasure of creating a poem was the highest intellectual delight he had ever experienced.

At an auction sale at Sotheby's in London the first edition (1770) of Goldsmith's "Deserted Village," uncut, sold for £45, and will go to America; and the first edition of Milton's "Paradise Lost" (1667) realized £85.

The young poets of Paris have elected as successor to Paul Verlaine in poetical sovereignity Stephane Mallarme, translator of poems of Poe and author of "L'Apres-Midi d'un Faune," whose portrait by Whistler is a masterpiece.

It is said that Swinburne has a memory almost as wide-reaching as Macaulay had. Burne-Jones says that upon one occasion the poet recited verbatim several pages of Milton's prose, which he had read but once, and that twenty years before.

Maurice Maeterlinck is about to marry a young French woman, the sister of Maurice Leblanc, a celebrated Parisian journalist. M. Maeterlinck is now preparing a volume of essays on English literature, dealing chiefly with the English symbolists.

One of the amazing literary successes of the century is Spurgeon's sermons. The Westminster Gazette says that 2,596 of these sermons have been printed and sold and that the sum total of the sales reaches nearly 100,000,000, an average of about 35,000 copies per annum.

William Black, the novel writer, is also a portrait painter, an enthusiastic botanist and an all-around sportsman.

The most prolific writer in Russia is said to be Mme. Irma Fedossova, a peasant of the Province of Petrozawodsk, who has given to the world more than 10,000 poems. How good they are is not related.

Jacques La Lorraine, a Parisian writer of the Decadent school, has opened a cobbler's shop in the Latin quarter. He has tried for fifteen years to live by literature, but he could not make it go. Now, at 35, he has opened a shop, hired a cobbler, and set about learning the trade. He is said to be doing a lively business.

A Dentist's Parrot.

A parrot owned by Dr. C. M. Gill, which had an interesting history, died recently. It was about 50 years old and was purchased by the doctor's father.

Dr. Gill is a dentist, and he says that often when he had a patient in the chair Polly would laugh and call out "kick up old Harry!" If the person happened to cry out with pain Polly would do likewise. Many patients did not like this, supposing it was some person who was mocking them and when told it was a parrot they would hardly believe it.

The most annoyance caused by the parrot, Dr. Gill says, was to the congregation of Sharp Street Colored Methodist Episcopal Church which adjoins his house. On a bright Sunday morning Poll would be hung out on the side of the house, and if it happened that a preacher with a stentorian voice was in the pulpit, as soon as he would begin to preach Polly would shout and yell at him. If an orator of milder delivery was holding forth Poll would continually interrupt him by shouting "Amen."

Poll was not a large parrot, and a person would not think he was only 6 or 7 years old instead of 50. He was of a bright green color with a red topnot.—Baltimore Sun.

Old War-Time Vehicles.

Of the means of locomotion in Maine in pioneer days a Kennebec gentleman says: "Before the revolution there was not a four-wheeled vehicle in Maine. In 1762 two-wheeled vehicles were first seen in Portland, but they were used only on gala days. They excited about as much wonder as flying machines would now. Augusta had its first four-wheeled vehicle in 1800. People traveled on foot or on horseback in summer and used rude sleds in winter. Women had side-saddles or pillions for seats, being the men's saddles, and no considerable journey was made by them except in that way. Horse blocks for mounting and dismounting were a necessity and were found at nearly every man's door. Grain was carried to mill on the farmer's back or the horse's back, and it was a common thing to see a small boy perched atop of several bags of grain on the back of the family horse 'going to mill.' All not crippled were great pedestrians, and women thought as little of walking miles then as they do of furlongs now."—Lewiston Journal.

Nature's Sweet Restorer.

Lady Londonderry attributes her youthful freshness to the practice of spending one out of every ten days in bed. She sleeps until she wakes naturally, takes a warm bath and goes back again, where she partakes of a light breakfast, remaining in her resting while her maid reads a light novel until 6 o'clock. She then puts on a light robe and has her dinner served in her room, and reclines on the sofa until 10 o'clock. She will not allow anything to interfere with this program. A prominent business woman in this city, famed for her good looks and an authority on the care of the complexion, stated to a friend that from Saturday night until Monday morning she remained in bed, resting quietly, advising it as the only treatment to keep one's brain, nerves and strength in good working order.

Wheat in Manitoba.

Canadian Pacific officials estimate that there are still 8,000,000 or 9,000,000 bushels of wheat in Manitoba, much of which is still controlled by farmers. The price is also fair, compared with recent experience in the grain markets.

Oh, we are all so horrible when we are dead!

MELANCHOLY WOMEN.

AFRAID SOMETHING DREADFUL IS GOING TO HAPPEN.

How a Little Baby Girl Rolled the Clouds Away.

Of course a woman will naturally see the dark side of everything when tortured by some form of female disease, which her doctor cannot or does not relieve. No wonder she is melancholy when head and back ache, pains run through the whole body and loins, nerves are weak, stomach out of order, digestion poor, sense of fullness and bearing-down, poor sleep and appetite, always weak and tired, irregular menstruation, whites, etc.

She probably is not so fortunate as to know that all female ailments are indicated by these never failing symptoms, and are controlled by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; all female weaknesses quickly disappear by its use. It has been the thinking woman's safeguard for twenty years, and all druggists sell large quantities of it because it can be relied upon.

Still another woman speaks:

"I wish you would publish my name with your testimonials. I want every one to know that your Vegetable Compound has made me well and strong. I sing its praises all the time. When I was first married I was very weak and had female troubles badly; Oh, I was so weary, sick and melancholy, but the Vegetable Compound built me up, and now I have a dear baby girl, and I am so happy. No home is complete without a dear little baby and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to roll the clouds away."—MRS. GEO. CLAUS, 35 Danforth St., Buffalo, N. Y.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills, which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge, that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, laxatives or other remedies are then not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

RIPANS TABULES

Harry M. Conrad, of No. 1744 Twelfth street, Washington, D. C., says: "I can speak in the highest praise of Ripans Tabules. I have been for years troubled with night mare (an erroneous expression, but one that thousands are familiar with), and have suffered a thousand deaths, being caused directly by a torpid liver, thence stagnation of the blood. A short while after retiring I would experience the most terrible sensation that human can fall heir to, such as having heavy weights upon you, seeing horrible animals, burglars, etc., and being unable to get out of their reach. I have tried everything on the market that I could think would be of any benefit, but never struck the right remedy until I tried Ripans Tabules, and since that time nightmare with me is a thing of the past. I am fully convinced that Ripans Tabules are a good thing for suffering humanity, and I feel that I could not exist without them. And I will further say for the benefit of others (knowing there are thousands suffering in the same manner), profit by my experience and try them; you will never regret it."

Ripans Tabules are sold by druggists, or by mail if the price (50 cents a box) is sent to The Ripans Chemical Company, No. 10 Spruce Street, New York. Sample vial, 10 cents.

WOMAN'S TIME

REFORM STYLE IN COURTING.

THE shilly-shallying young man is destined to ostracism in Kansas if the somewhat startling scheme of an Atchison girl is put into practice. The young woman in question has given long and laborious thought to the present system of courting, and the result of her deliberations is a conviction that reform—radical reform—is necessary. She is at present engaged in writing a book designed to overturn the present state of affairs so far as this particular matter is concerned, and, r is fitting in a Kansas notion, her pla of revolution is something calculated to take one's breath away. Her contention is that under the present system when a young man goes to see a girl she cannot tell whether he means business or is just amusing himself. What she wants to do is to have an understanding that if a young man goes to see a girl a certain number of times it is to constitute an engagement, and she advocates having the Legislature pass a law making the young man liable to a damage suit if he breaks away after going the specific number of times. She proposes that the Legislature authorize the printing of blanks, or coupons, which every girl must keep at her house, and whenever a young man calls he must sign his name to one of them. When she has, say, ten signatures of one young man to ten different coupons she can consider herself engaged to him, and she can recover damages if he refuses to do the right thing. If a girl is willing to allow a young man to come and see her more than the number of times required by law and not consider it an engagement she must sign a release relieving him of all liability. The book will soon be finished, and she expects it to have a big sale. She believes that if her idea is carried out it will result in less trouble for the girls and be a blessing to society.

Shirt Waists.

Shirt waists are not only pretty but they are convenient. If women cannot afford to have them built at a fashionable haberdasher's they can be made at home after a good pattern. They should be made with but little fullness in the back having only a few gathers at the waist line. Cut the yoke with a slight point. Gather the fullness of the front widths into the neck instead of into the shoulders. Do not spread the fullness along the belt, but leave at least two inches plain before reaching the under arm seam. The sleeves should be after the bishop model and gathered into a narrow cuff. Nothing looks cooler than a wash-silk waist. They are made with more fullness, both in the front and in the back, with a box plait down the front to cover the buttons. The sleeves are full and set into a band cuff. The prettiest finish for the neck is the full wrinkled collar. Such a waist can also be worn with the linen collar and cuffs. Batiste shirt waists are all the rage. Nothing makes a smarter tennis or outing costume than white cotton or linen duck.

Art of Buttonhole Making.

Always mark the buttonholes, and be careful to accurately measure the distances they are to be apart, then cut the first one and pass the button through. Mark the size of the rest with thread or chalk and cut them with regular buttonhole scissors, then overcast the edges with twist, and bar each hole—that is, take a long stitch on each side, leaving the stitch apparently on the surface, about one-sixteenth of an inch from the edge. Begin at the back end of the buttonhole and work the usual stitch, drawing the twist evenly and firmly, but not too tightly, all along to the front end; work this round, almost as if it were an eyelet, very closely, then continue up the other side till you come to the back. This should be fastened squarely by several neat stitches laid loosely one on top of the other; then take all these up with buttonhole stitch, forming a strong loop that will hold the buttonhole firmly as long as the garment is wearable.

Call and Card Account Book.

It is much the best way to keep a book account for calls; that is, have a blank book wherein to write the name and address of all calling acquaintances. Farther on in the book write "Calls Made," and underneath put down the name and date. Still farther on make another list of "Calls Received," with names and dates. It is then very easy to see when you called on a certain lady and when she returned it. The hours for calling vary in different cities; from 4 until 6 is the appointed time in New York, but in smaller cities it will be perfectly proper to begin at 3 o'clock, especially if one has a long list.

Value of Pure, Cold Water.

Pure, fresh cold water is one of the most valuable disinfectants, inasmuch as it is a powerful absorbent. Every sick room should have a large vessel of clear water, frequently renewed, placed near the bed, or even beneath it. This not only absorbs much of the hurtful vapor, but in its evaporation it softens and tempers the atmosphere, doing away with the dryness which is so trying and depressing to an invalid, or even to persons in health, for that matter. It has frequently been shown, by actual experiment, that troubled sleep and threatened insomnia are corrected by so simple a thing as the placing of an open bowl of water near the sufferer's head.

Many Women Wear It.

Since the bicycle girl took to wearing sweaters her less athletic sisters have discovered what a valuable garment it is. The result is that every type of woman has taken to it from the most advanced new woman to the most fluffy of summer girls. Not only do the cycle, golf and tennis girls wear it, but for ocean voyages, yachting and overland traveling it is in much demand. The new sweaters are made much shorter than those of last season. Some of them reach only to the waist line. The sleeves above the elbow are large and generously puffed. All the most desirable sweaters button on the shoulders. The collar is generally straight, turned over slightly at the top, but in a few of this season's sweaters the deep sailor collar is in evidence. The best-looking sweaters, as well as the most expensive, are in a fancy design showing two colors.

SWEATER FOR ATHLETIC WOMEN.

For the Summer Girl.

Be sensible occasionally.

Be loyal to "him," if you are engaged.

Confine yourself to facts, even in your intercourse with men.

Put the shy young man at the picnic out of his misery if you can.

Show a little consideration for the hearts and purses of your victims.

Do by the girl who has told your her secrets as you wish her to do by you.

Remember that a display of jewels on an unmarried girl is distinctly vulgar.

Try to lay in a supply of health and nervous force for the winter campaign.

Remember that it takes more than nineteen gowns and four admirers to make a belle.

Ask yourself occasionally if you've shown any glimmerings of intelligence during the day.

Beware of the married man who sees in you all that is lacking in his life, and tells you so.

Try to profit by the "horrible examples" of life's failures to be seen at all large summer resorts.

Refrain from telling all the women on the hotel veranda just how Mr. Van Viverson proposed to you.

Resist the temptation to capture every man you see. There are other girls with rights and aspirations.

Remember that decollete gowns do not go well with sunburned faces.

An Ornamental Pin Cushion.

The pincushion here shown is just a dainty trifle of silk, leather, brocade, or what not, covering a thin layer of cotton wool, and prettily finished round the edges with a tiny frill of contrasting colored silk. This little cushion should be backed with the same material, and finished with a loop and bow of bright colored ribbon. The pins must be inserted all the way round at the edge and the silk frill will effectively hide the heads.

Sleeping on Either Side.

It is not desirable to lay a baby on its back when sleep is wished for. Either one side or the other is best, and, if possible, it is well to accustom it first to one side and then to the other, as this obviates falling into the habit of being able to sleep only on one side. But a child who is wide awake and of a happy disposition, so that it lies cooing to itself and watching the mysteries of its own ten fingers, is all the better for being laid on its back, as the spine is thereby kept straight and unstrained and grows on space, just as it does when a growing boy or girl is compelled, from accident, to spend a few weeks in a recumbent position, and finds, when allowed to get up, that none of its clothes are long enough.

A Fair Horse Thief.

A woman horsethief was arrested by the Sheriff of Nez Perces County, Idaho, a few days ago. She was found to be one of a gang which has been operating in that region for about a year. Four male members of the gang were caught with the woman. She is reported to be good-looking, 22 years old and of a fiery disposition. She was dressed in man's clothes, and rode her horse astride with great skill.

SERMONS OF THE WEEK

Real Religion.—Ceremonies, prayers and inspired books, miracles, special Providence and divine interference all belong to the supernatural and form no part of real religion.—Robert G. Ingersoll, Agnostic, New York.

God's Work.—The ministry should choose the minister. One should not enter the ministry unless, before God, he feels that he can do nothing else.—Rev. W. H. Geistweit, Baptist, Galesburg, Ill.

Patriotism.—There is need of patriotism in America to-day. It would counteract natural selfishness and give greater responsibility to the citizen.—Rev. Henry Anstice, Episcopalian, Rochester, N. Y.

Religious Example.—Nine people in ten read religion from the lives of Christians and not from the Scriptures. This is what the great apostle meant when he wrote, "Ye are my epistles."—Rev. George P. Mains, Methodist, Mount Vernon, N. Y.

Politics.—Historians know that in all persecution religion has been a pretense, but in truth it has been politics. The atrocities of Armenia are ascribed to religious difficulties, but the truth lies in political ambitions, political aspirations and machinations.—Rabbi Hirsch, Hebrew, Chicago, Ill.

Christianity.—Christianity is not merely to make us happy hereafter, but to make us live divinely here and now, lifting up our bodies and our divine souls out of their degradation and sin and sorrow, yesterday, to-day and to-morrow.—Bishop Davis Sessums, Episcopalian, New Orleans, La.

Agnostics.—It is when agnosticism becomes irreverent that it is an abomination.—Rev. N. I. Rubinkam, Congregationalist, Chicago, Ill.

Home Influence.—The home is the real training school for citizenship. Here, as nowhere else, are all the essential germs of citzenship of the best type inculcated. Clean, sane and trustworthy students of human history speak with one voice of the home as a civil institution.—Rev. F. B. Cherington, Congregationalist, Spokane, Wash.

Association.—Associations and associates are character formative. Natives of mountainous regions are of a bold and rugged character. The long-time inhabitants of the sunny southland become warm of blood, passionate, genial, social and hospitable. Children of Godless parents generally grow into Christless manhood.—Rev. C. B. Allen, Baptist, Helena, Mont.

Unity.—Christian unity can only come on some plain of federation with Christ as the center and soul of all. Union is greatly to be desired, but it must be a union in diversity, not mere uniformity. The safeguard of our churches is not the letter of the creed but the spirit that giveth life.—Rev. A. Hadden, Congregationalist, Muskegon, Mich.

Sensationalism.—To be sensational a thing must be out of the ordinary. The only sensational thing in the world is the Bible, and that is extraordinary. Every truth in the Bible is a sensation. Jesus Christ was a sensationalist. He came into the world and preached the truth, and never deviated from his path.—Rev. P. S. Hadburt, Congregationalist, Oak Park, Ill.

Sunday Rest.—To give a man no Sabbath rest is an attempt to reduce him to all fours. A man is a man, and does not like to be worked like a machine or a mule, and being a man, it is his God-given privilege to stand upright. The secularization of the Sabbath is one of the greatest enemies of better living.—Rev. C. G. Reynolds, Presbyterian, Joliet, Ill.

Armenia.—The Armenians are being cruelly slaughtered, and all the great powers of Europe are simply looking on. No tongue or pen can portray the appalling tortures upon those put to death and the sufferings of those who are permitted to live. They have been made to suffer for their faith in Christ. This is the crime the cruel Turk charges against them.—Rev. J. E. Goetman, Lutheran, Allegheny, Pa.

Marriage.—God intends marriage to be sacred, and filial affection must give way to marriage and the care of the family to come. The love of man for woman is so great, and of such divine importance, that it has arrogated to itself the title of love, as though no other love exists. Upon the family rest church and state, and the marriage condition is so sacred that God forbids its violation, even in thought.—Rev. William R. Taylor, Presbyterian, Rochester, N. Y.

Presidential Candidates.—Every four years we go out in search of an able man—one able in the highest and truest sense—and twice or thrice since the nation began we have found such a man. Able men do not proclaim themselves. Great men never seek the presidency. Able men do not wear collars nor hang tags about their necks. It is your consciously small men that must have toy swords and badges and feathers in their hats.—Rev. S. G. Nelson, Baptist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Before and After.

"I remember," said Mrs. Wickwire, impressively, "you once said if you had the world you would gladly lay it at my feet."

"Oh, did I?" asked Mr. Wickwire.

The Darky's Mistake.

A titled Englishman was a guest at a Washington house, and a dinner-party was given in his honor. The host cautioned the colored butler to address the Englishman always as "My Lord." This he remembered to do until he passed the special dish of the occasion, stewed terrapin. The appearance of the dish is not especially inviting, so, when the butler handed it to him, the Englishman declined it, saying sotto voce: "It looks uncommonly nasty." The butler was so taken aback at the idea of any one refusing such a delicacy, that he forgot himself and said "But it's terrapin, My God."

A Fresh Definition.

Old Squire Prince of Franklin County, Tenn., was the "larned" man of the community. Many an illiterate one came to have him write and read the letters. On one occasion a man asked him to decipher an epistle he had received from Texas. In it occurred the word "imigrant." "What is an imigrant?" asked the dumfounded tanbark hauler.

"Wall," stuttered the Squire, scratching his white hair with his spectacles for inspiration. "An imigrant is a leg an an mile, suthin twixt a possum and a coon, an powerful hard on corn."

Haven't Spoken for Thirty Years.

For thirty years John Schreiber and wife, though occupying the same house in Germantown, Pa., have not spoken to each other. They dine at the same table, read by the same lamp and frequently are seen together in the streets, but speak to each other they will not. The man is well-to-do and has arranged his finances so that his wife has an ample income without applying to him. He entertains his friends and she welcomes hers in the same room, but in the otherwise general conversation they do not address each other.

An experiment has been made in England of making stockings and gloves of paper. It has proved the greatest success. Obituary

Catharine Russel Hartman, was born in Northampton County, Pennsylvania February 18, 1815. Died at her home in Richland Township, DeKalb County Indiana, May 20, 1896,. Age 81 years, 3 months and 2 days. Her father's name was Robert and her mother's was Elizabeth, Russel. They had lived in that part of Pennsylvania for many years before the birth of their daughter Catharine, and continued to do so thereafter until long after her marriage with Abraham Hartman, who was also a resident of that part of the state. This marriage occurred in the year 1839, when the subject of this sketch was about twenty-four years of age. Abraham Hartman, having previously been married, had one child. Mrs. John T. Husselman, who, for many years has lived near Fairfield Center, this county. This child became a part of the family and the deceased cheerfully assumed and faithfully discharged the duties of a mother to her.

The ancestors of Catherine Hartman were of English descent, that of Abraham, German. When they were married she had learned to converse in German better than he in English, but both languages being used, the children used one about as readily as the other. Mr. Hartman had a liberal German education, was a great reader, and she could read both German and English.

The family removed from Pennsylvania to Greensburg, near Akron, O., in the year 1843, one son, Ezra D., having been born to them in Pennsylvania about two years before their removal. They lived in Ohio about four years, when, in the spring of 1847, they moved to this county on a tract of land in the Stroh settlement, about three miles northeast of Auburn, where they lived some five years when they moved to Auburn, and about three years after, in the spring of 1855, they moved to the farm in Richland township, which was their home continuously until the death of her husband, and her home after that time. He died very suddenly on June 19, 1873. Since his death she has had several rooms to herself in the house, but one of her sons has lived in the house and looked after her welfare; Aaron B. having been there continuously for some twelve years. Her health had been good until several years ago, when she had a serious and long continued attack of lagrippe. This left her weakened and somewhat depressed in spirit. She had always been cheerful and hopeful, but this disease seems to have so undermined her system that she seemed a different woman after that, she not being able to work seemed to be very disheartening to her. She had always been a very busy and energetic woman and bravely met the responsibilities of life including all the privations and vicissitudes of their early settlement in this state.

On the 1st of March last Aaron's wife died. This was a sore affliction to the old lady in her enfeebled condition, as they had been living together for so many years. No great change, however, was observable in her strength until about ten days before her death when she began to grow weaker and weaker, happily without much suffering, until she finally passed peacefully away.

She was a woman of strong faith, a diligent reader of the Scriptures, implicit trust in her Savior and led an exemplary christian life. She was a kind, self-sacrificing mother, a faithful wife, and always took the greatest interest in the welfare of her family, and it may be truly said that throughout the long years of her busy life she deservedly had the respect and sincere friendship of her neighbors and acquaintances, and the love of her family.

She leaves four sons, Ezra D., Joel E., Aaron B. and John A., all of whom live in this county. Three children have died: Wesley G., who was an ordained minister of the church of which his mother was a member, died in January, 1881, while filling his charge as a minister in the southwest part of this state; Priscilla Ann, who died in 1882, and Calvin, the youngest born, who died when about three years of age in 1862.

Mrs. Hartman and her husband had been members of the M. E. church for many years before his death, he being a licensed minister, and she continued her membership after his death until about ten years ago, when she united with the United Brethren church, of which she continued a member until her death.

The funeral services were held at her home May 22, in the afternoon. Rev. S. H. Yager, of Waterloo, officiating, and she was laid beside her husband in Evergreen cemetery in Auburn.

For Governor.

Hon. B. F. Shively of South Bend is First in the Field.

The democrats of South Bend held a meeting in the rooms of the Jefferson Club of that place on Wednesday evening of this week, May 20, and made a formal announcement that they would push Hon. B. F. Shively of that place for the governorship on the democratic ticket. A committee was appointed to call on Mr. Shively and ascertain his views. His reply, marked him as a man of good sense, and sound democracy. The Times reports:

Mr. Shively expressed his appreciation of the motive of the meeting, and then explained that he was not seeking the nomination for the governorship, though he had thought it over, had often been importuned in the matter, and knew that his name was being considered in that connection. While not a candidate for the nomination, he would feel that he is subject to the will of his party. If the Democracy of the great state of Indiana desire his nomination, the wish of that Democracy would be respected; but he would make no fight for the honor and the responsibilities and the effort that it represented. That was briefly his position, and the committee that had been named, if they consulted his wishes, would act in accordance with his declaration.

His position is a proper one, and should commend him to the democracy of the state. We have the most friendly regard for the several able gentlemen who have been spoken of for this honor, but we know of none we would more gladly support than Mr. Shively. Of course, if Judge Zollars is a candidate, he would be the first choice of all the democrats in this part of the state. But we do not understand that he is in the race. If not, then we are for Mr. Shively. And it does not matter what the opinions of a candidate for governor may be, on the silver question. It is not his duty to coin silver or gold. We are choosing a governor for the great state of Indiana. And it will need to be an able man to follow Gov. Matthews.

How to Treat a Wife.

(From Pacific Health Journal.)

First, get a wife; second, be patient. You may have great trials and perplexities in your business, but do not therefore, carry to your home a cloudy or contracted brow. Your wife may have trials which, though of less magnitude, may be hard for her to bear. A kind word, a tender look, will do wonders in chasing from her brow all clouds of gloom.—To this we would add always keep a bottle of Chamberla n's Cough Remedy in the house. It is the best and is sure to be needed sooner or lator. Your wife will then know that you really care for her and wish to protect her health. For sale by Davenport the Druggist. 22

"Old Cannon"

Wm. E. Curtis, the well known Washington correspondent of the Chicago Record, gives this item of news:

"Congress keeps right on passing resolutions donating condemned cannon to the various battlefield, Grand Army and monument associations throughout the country," said an officer of ordnance corps at the war department, "though it is a well-known fact that the government has had no condemned cannon on hand for twenty years or more. All that were left on hand after the war were given away in ten years, and since then to supply these donations the government has had to make hundreds and hundreds of cannon for the express purpose of condemning them.

"As a rule these soldier monuments are placed on a square or oblong base and four cannon are needed, one for each corner, to properly set them off. With the cannon always go the carriages; kept properly painted they will last practically forever. The present congress has has donate 120 cannons for so far, and probably forty more will be added before they adjourn. As there are on hand but seventy-five cannons for which there is no present use, seventy-five or one hundred will have to be made immediately, and also immediately condemned, so as to comply with the law.

thin baby

Poor baby! Your pity goes out to it and rightly. To be thin, for a baby, is to be deprived of its natural ease; to suffer and not be able to feel it; to wear a sad pinched face; to live on the edge of sickness; to grow imperfectly; and to lose the power of resisting disease. When a baby is thin it needs more fat than it gets from its food; it is starved, fat-starved. Scott's Emulsion is the easiest fat it can have; the fat it needs. Half of Election Contest.

Oscar Gandy was a candidate for town council at Churubusco against Patrick Fullam. Each got the same number of vo e , then cast lots Fullam got it. Now Gandy sues to get the office alleging that one man who would have voted for him, failed because when the clerks gave him a ballot they gave him no stamp. He went into the booth, folded his ticket came out and gave the ballot to the inspector who put it into the box. They asked him to give up the stamp and he said he had none. So his ballot being in the box with no stamp on it he lost his vote for Gandy. Gandy also claims that several illegal votes were cast for Fullam.

Shot In The Back

St. Joe News.

Last Saturday morning about six o'clock, a man called at the office of Dr. Hines in this place, and asked to have a bullet removed from his back. The doctor made an investigation, and after probing several times recovered the bullet. It had entered near the spine and was imbedded in the body nearly three inches. The doctor dressed the wound and the man paid him three dollars and went on his way rejoicing. He was about thirty-eight years old, dark complected and weighed about one hundred and eighty pounds. He was German and talked very broken. He said his name was Fritz Harmasman and that he was a baker by trade. The fellow claimed that he had been shot by a B. & O. conductor at Hicksville, while stealing a ride, but that hardly looks reasonable. It seems more likely that he was engagaged in a burglary scrape somewhere, and was discovered in the act and shot. Further developements may possibly throw some light on the case.

Prompt Train Service

During the month of April the passenger train movement on all Divisions of the B. & O. system was remarkable for punctuality. The through express trains arrived at their respective destinations on schedule time ninety-five per cent. of the time. This is a performance rarely equaled by roads operating as many trains as are run on the B. & O., and speaks well for the efficiency of the rank and file, as well as the officials of the Operating Department.

Mrs. Chas. A. Myers, 221 Hanna St., Fort Wayne, Ind., writes Oct. 7, 1894: "I suffered terribly with severe headaches, dizziness, backache and nervousness, gradually growing worse until my life was despaired of, and try what we would, I found no relief until I commenced using Dr. Miles' Nervine. I have taken five bottles and believe I am a well woman, and I have taken great comfort in recommending all of my friends to use Nervine. You may publish this letter if you wish, and I hope it may be the means of saving some other sick mother's life, as it did mine."

The Big Cyclone.

Thursday's Daily.

For the past ten days, each day's papers have contained appalling lists of disasters by cyclones in various parts of the Central states, mostly in Illinois, Iowa, Kansas and parts of states in the same region. And a fearful feature of these visitations, is the great loss of life that has marked their pathway on nearly every occasion. One day and night, there happened many of them within a few hours all substantially in the section just named, the total loss of life running up too 100 or more. Last evening about five o'clock, the worst one so far recorded swept over East St. Louis, entailing vast destruction, and a lost of life reaching 300 as the dispatches claim. Account of all these storms have appeared in the DAILY. Indiana has so far been fortunate, in escaping, with little except the mere dying wind of these fierce storms.

Since writing the above, additional particulars have kept coming in, as the telegraph lines had been down, making the disaster far worse than we supposed. It appears that the city of St. Louis itself, suffered greatly, and the total loss of life may reach 1000. Among the other buildings destroyed was the great "Convention Auditorium," in which the republican national convention was to be held in a few days. It was the finest temporary building ever constructed for this purpose, although made cheap, of course, as it was to have been removed by Oct. 1. It cost $60,000 and is a total loss. No such storm disaster has ever visited the United States.

Friday's Daily.

It turns out to be not quite so bad as first reported in the early Chicago papers. When the DAILY COURIER came on, giving six hours later news, the list of dead at St. Louis was shown to be fortunately very much less than 1000 as first supposed. Taking in both St. Louis and East St. Louis, the loss of life may reach 500 when the ruins are cleaned away, and may even exceed that when we count the losses from other towns in the track of the storm. The injured will foot up to 1000 or 1500. The loss of property is put at about $15,000,000 The state authorities are coming to the rescue and the United States is sending tents and such supplies for the homeless. The military will also help the police in giving protection to exposed property. Of course as is usual, after the buildings were torn down, some of them took fire and destroyed additional property, and no doubt some lives.

Monday's Daily.

J. E. Rose has made a trip to St. Louis, returning yesterday morning. He says the ruin and desolation caused by the great cyclone has not been half told and cannot be. He went in one direction as far as from here to Waterloo, and did not see a building, great or small but was more or less injured by the storm. The most of them were ruined, and man utterly torn in pieces. He tells of one woman who lay in the ruins several days before she was discovered, but though held fast she was not much injured, and when released, was able to get up and walk away. Of course many of the earlier reports of the damage done were incorrect. The first news said the big building for the republican convention was all destroyed But it is only slightly injured and $500 will make it all right.

A Valuable Prescription.

Editor Morrison of Worthington, Ind. "Sun" says: "You have a valuable prescription in Electric Bitters, and I can cheerfully recommend it for constipation and sick headache, and as a general system tonic it has no equal." D. Y. Husselman.

Friday's Daily.

Early this morning it became known that Mr. Husselman was dead. He had passed peacefully away last night at five minutes after ten.

It had been known to all our people that he was in a critical condition and that at best his life could be prolonged but a short time. Still, it was not expected the end would come so soon. Since he had the stroke of paralysis, it was realized that his tenure of life was uncertain and many were surprised that even medical skill and loving care could so far restore him that he could again appear on our streets. But after this temporary improvement came a relapse, not a second stroke as some have supposed, but a gradua breaking down, and a wasting away o the vital forces. It a sad thing that one should be called hence in the very prime of manhood, for he was only forty-eight. And it is with feelings of more than ordinary sadness that we pen this brief notice of the early death of one with whom we have been on terms of intimate friendship since we first set foot in this county in 1869.

The funeral will be at the residence Sunday, May 31, at 2 p. m. and interment at Woodlawn. He will be buried by the Masons and A. O. U. W. in both of which he was a prominent member.

Retail Business

We do not believe in having our government complete in business with our private citizens. We do not believe it right that it should compete with printers in furnishing stationery. We do not believe that it is right for government to compete with our dealers who sell garden seeds. This year the government pays out $165,000 for common garden vegetable seeds, and these are given away by the congressmen to their constituents, not that these constituents are not able to buy the seeds same from the home dealer at a reasonable price, but because this little free gift will gain him a friendship of the voters. Let congressmen and the government go out of the retail business and stay out.

WAS IT ABE?

Last week a draft of $100 signed S.S. Shutt, was sent here from the west, reached the First National Bank, but was discovered to be a fraud. To-day, a draft came to The Farmers Bank from Kansas, signed by John Boots for $2,600. The letter asked to have certain amount sent him, and the rest put on deposit. Word was sent to Mr. Boost, at his home in Jackson township, as it was not believed to be genuine. He came to town and says he has never set his foot on the d—d soil of Kansas. Now the question is, who sent these drafts? Some think it was Abe Johnson up to his old tricks.

Down South.

The Kendallville Sun has a clipping from the Atlanta Constitution, which is certainly original and entertaining. It does not claim to be what they do or say at commencements down south, but it will do for a funny make believe.

An' they're sighin' speechifyin'—got the reins without a check,
An' the boy is still a standin' on the

An' Mary's got a little lamb—as gentle as a shoat,
An' not a single drum is heard—not even a funeral note.
An' Iser's rollin' rapidly—you almost see it shine,
An' some are born at Bingen—at Bingen on the Rhine!
They're goin' like two-forty—the town can't get to sleep,
For Pilot 'tis a fearful night, there's danger on the deep;
An' Curfew shall not ring tonight—they've sworn it, and they known!

Wrist Broken

While George Hoodelmire and son were driving to town this afternoon, their horse became frightened at a cow tied to a fence near Ford's barn just east of town, and Mr. Hoodelmire was thrown under the buggy. His left wrist was broken and bruised considerably otherwise. The boy was not thrown from the rig. Dr. Hines dressed the wound.

They Fell

George Trout and Johnny Leas had quite a risky tumble yesterday. They were up in a cherry tree at Mr. Trout's on the corner of VanBuren and Fifth street, when the limb on which they were, broke suddenly and they went with full force to the ground. Johnny was not much hurt, but George was picked up unconscious, and it took some little time to bring him to. It was found that he probably was not seriously hurt, though his back was wrenched and he will likely have to stay in bed a day or two. Dr. Buchtel and Dr. Vesta Swarth attended him.

HISTORY OF A WEEK.

PEOPLE, PLACES, AND THING OF THE WORLD.

A Careful Estimate of the Killed and Injured by the Cyclone at St. Louis—Michigan Coal Mines Closed Down—No Increase in the Beer Tax.

THE CYCLONE'S WORK.

The Loss of Life Will Reach Five Hundred.

St. Louis special: It will be several days before definite information can be obtained of the loss of life and injury to the unfortunate people who happened to be in the path of the cyclone which swept over portions of Missouri and Illinois. In addition to the killed and injured in East St. Louis and St. Louis, the cyclone mowed down many people as it advanced. Dispatches received here give accounts of serious loss of life and maimings in a number of places. Appended is a table showing a careful estimate of the killed and injured, based on the dispatches:

Town.	Killed.	Injured
St. Louis	200	300
East St. Louis	250	300
Near Centralia, Ill	42	325
Breckinridge, Ill	2
Near Mt. Vernon, Ill	5	30
Near Vandalia, Ill	13	15
Near Mexico, Mo	15	34

The number killed is not far from 500, the injured 700.

Seven at a Birth.

Information which is reliably vouched for, comes from Fisher's Corners, one mile out from Ottawa Lake, about thirty-two miles from Toledo, Ohio, that a few days ago Mrs. Charles Comstock gave birth to seven children, one of which died when but a day old, while the other six are still living. The children are all perfectly formed, although quite small, and are doing nicely. The mother is also getting along excellently. There were four girls and three boys, one of the girls dying. The place is besieged with sight-seers, but few are admitted, as the children are small, and every effort is being made to raise them. A correspondent of the Toledo Blade investigated the story and pronounces it absolutely true.

To Close Down.

All the rye whisky distilleries in the Eastern States will suspend operations on September 1, next. This will throw out of employment 2,000 workmen, coopers and laborers. The skilled workmen about the distilleries will be kept, as they are under contract and are of peculiar and special value to their employers. This action was resolved upon at a meeting representing, it is estimated, $25,000,000 capital, at the Waldorf Hotel, New York. J. G. Pontefract presided and Edwin W. Dougherty was secretary.

Michigan Mines Closed.

The Norrie, East Norrie and Pabst mines, in Ironwood, Mich., owned by the Metropolitan Iron and Land Company, and the largest producers of high grade ore in Michigan, have closed down, throwing 1,250 men out of employment. The cause of the closing down of the mines is the determination of the mining companies to force the furnace men to pay their scheduled price of $4 per ton. The furnaces are short of ore and a crisis will be reached in a short time.

Horrible!

Thomas Sallee, a young farmer near Harrodsburg, Ky., was made to pay a horrible forfeit for attempting, it is said, to destroy the households of two brothers named Buggs. He had made advances to the wives of both, and was apprehended while at the house of one. The two Buggs brothers took him to a nearby forest and made him the subject of a bungling mutilation, so badly done that blood poisoning may follow. Sallee is under the care of a physician.

Seven Persons Killed.

The most horrible crime in the history of the county was perpetrated at Campbell, a small place about six miles southwest of San Jose, Cal. Col. R. P. McGlincey and wife, their daughter, Mrs. James Dunham, James Wells, a son of Mrs. McGlincey, a hired woman, Minnie Shosier, and a hired man, James Briscoe, were killed by James Dunham, a son-in-law of Colonel McGlincey, who made his escape.

No Increase in Beer Tax.

The Senate defeated the proposition to increase the beer tax 75 cents per barrel by the vote of 34 to 27. The vote was taken as soon as the filled cheese bill was taken up, the beer tax proposition being submitted as an amendment. With the amendment disposed of the cheese bill was further debated, but not disposed of.

Linton Renominated.

The Eighth Michigan District Republican Congressional Convention renominated the Hon. W. S. Linton for Congress by acclamation.

Will Marry a Count.

Budapest special: It is understood in society circles here that the engagement will shortly be announced of Miss Wanamaker, daughter of John Wanamaker of Philadelphia, Postmaster General in the Cabinet of President Harrison, to a Hungarian Count who attended the Wanamaker party during their stay in this city.

Governor Indicted.

The grand jury has returned an indictment at London, Ky., against Gov. W. O. Bradley for failing to file a descriptive list of the property he owns in Laurel County.

Col. John S. Mosby Dying.

Col. John S. Mosby, the old guerrilla chief and ex-Consul to Hong Kong, is seriously ill at his apartments in San Francisco. Some time ago he returned from the East, and a few days ago was afflicted with what has since developed into appendicitis. His physicians fear the worst, and friends say he can hardly recover.

A War Hero Dead.

Capt. John Wilson, the heroic veteran who first planted the Federal flag on Lookout Mountain, died at his home in Irvene, Ky. He was 74 years old and has been a useful man in his community. He will be buried with Masonic honors.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT.

Electric Cars with 100 People Precipitated Into the River.

Victoria (B. C.) special: The Elice bridge was the scene of a frightful accident shortly before 2 o'clock Wednesday. Two electric cars loaded with people were precipitated into the water through the breaking away of the bridge. It is supposed there were upwards of 100 people on the cars, but it is known a number of them escaped. In Capt. Grant's garden about twenty-five bodies lying on the lawn, are for the most part being worked over by willing hands, in some cases successfully. It is feared the death list will be very large, perhaps upwards of fifty. The cars were completely submerged, and all on board were drowned, with the exception of some on the platforms who managed to save themselves by swimming ashore. A number of bodies have already been got up.

MADE HOMELESS.

A Canadian Town Is Swept by a Big Fire.

Deserto (Ont.) special: Fire broke out in the tie dock of the Rathburn Company and in a short time spread to the docks adjoining, destroying large quantities of shingles, posts, hardwood, etc., a flour mill, bran house, elevator, and the Canoe Club boat-house. Going northward and eastward it swept away almost the entire eastern portion of the town. The Roman Catholic Church and several stores were consumed. The flames spread so rapidly that many lost all their possessions. A terrific down pour of of rain helped to extinguish the flames. About seventy-five families are homeless. The loss will aggregate $350,000.

Murdered by Tramps.

Frank Huffman of New York, was shot and killed by a gang of "hobos" near Huron, Ohio. Hoffman was beating his way east with two companions, when a party of tramps entered the car. Huffman was ordered by one of the toughs to throw up his hands, and as he hesitated he was shot at, but the bullet missed him. Huffman then jumped from the train, which was moving slowly, and fell into a ditch. One of the gang followed and shot Huffman through the abdomen, killing him instantly. The tramps scattered through the country, but the Sheriff's posse captured eleven. Nine are in jail at Sandusky on account of fear of mob violence at Huron.

Six Men Burned.

At Hartford City, Ind., the bottom of the big tank of the glass factory gave way. The defective block had been discovered shortly before and men were attempting to stop the leak by filling in the tank batch and cool the glass on the outside by streams of water, when an explosion took place. Around the tank below the platform were a number of men directing streams of water. Six were burned by steam. Desire Moll, entire body burned, inhaled steam and cannot live; Emil Wittebort, slight burns; Master Teaser, burned seriously about the body, may die; William Sutton, slightly burned on hand; Jacob Moore, burned on back.

Captain General Weyler Meets Another Defeat.

Washington special: The protest made by Secretary Olney against Captain General Weyler's prohibition of tobacco exports from Havana has been successful. He has been informed officially that all contracts for Cuban leaf tobacco entered into before the publication of the order prohibiting its exportation will be respected, and that citizens of the United States proving themselves to be bona fide owners of such tobacco prior to the promulgation of the order, will be permitted to export the same as heretofore.

Big Payments Will Be Made by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad.

The receivers of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company will on June 1 pay the interest on $7,744,000, 5 per cent. due 1897 on the Chicago Division, amounting to $193,600; also on $8,500,000 terminal 4½ per cent. bonds of 1894, amounting to $191,250; also, on $4,500,000 5 per cent. of the Schuylkill River East Side Railroad. The interest will not be paid on $540,000 6 per cent. bonds of the Baltimore, Washington and Point Lookout Railroad.

A Cuban Victory.

Advices from Cuba say that in a recent engagement the Spanish General, Serrano Altamira, was badly defeated at San Cristobal, in Pinar del Rio, losing many killed and wounded. The Cuban loss, it is said, was very small, compared with that of the Spanish.

Hounds Caught the Murderer.

W. M. Cobb, a colored teamster, was shot in the breast by W. T. Fleming, also colored, near Cumberland Gap, Ky. Fleming took to the woods immediately after the shooting, but bloodhounds were put on his track and he was captured very soon afterward.

Costs the Professor $1,000.

In the Circuit Court at Anderson, Ind., Miss Carrie Price of Middletown, Ohio, was given a $1,000 verdict against Prof. Robbins of the Alexandria schools. She charges him with being the father of her child. Robbins has been deposed.

Entire Family Murdered.

The Sheriff was summoned to Cleveland, Mo., on a telegram stating that the entire family of Martin Frost, consisting of wife and three children, had been murdered. Frost is a prominent farmer.

CYCLONE KILLS FIVE HUNDRED

Missouri's Largest City and Its Illinois Consort Meet Terrible Calamity.

ST. LOUIS IN RUINS.

Huge Buildings in the City's Heart Destroyed.

DEATH ON THE RIVER.

Excursion Steamers Are Blown Bottom Side Up.

Human Beings Swept to Instant Doom—Steamers Are Sunk, Buildings Blown Down, and Railroad Trains Overturned—Loss of Life Rivals That of the Johnstown Disaster—Principal Buildings in East St. Louis Destroyed—Fire Adds Its Horrors—Millions of Dollars' Property Damage.

The city of St. Louis, torn and devastated by a cyclone, floodedl by torrents of rain and in many places attacked by fires, was Wednesday night the scene of such a carnival of death and destruction as has seldom been equaled in America. Owing to the frightful havoc of the storm cutting off almost every line or communication with the stricken city, but little information could be had, and that of a very vague nature. It is estimated that as many as 500 lives were lost, while the damage to property is inestimable. Scarcely a building in the city but has been in some way or another damaged by the tornado.

Ruin and desolation are upon St. Louis. For the first time in the history of a metropolis the terrors of a cyclone have come upon its avenues and boulevards, ravaged the business streets and brought death to hundreds. St. Louis, with its 700,000 people, passed through in one brief half-hour Wednesday night an experience paralleled only by the horrors of the Johnstown flood. Cyclone, flood and fire. This triple alliance wrought the dreadful havoc.

THE GREAT CUPPLES BLOCK.

The grand stand at the race track was blown down, killing 150. The east end of the great Eads bridge was destroyed and it is reported that an Alton train went into the river. Steamers on the river were sunk with all on board. A station of the Vandalia in East St. Louis was destroyed, and it is reported thirty-five lives were lost. The roof of the Republican convention hall at St. Louis was taken off. The two top stories of the Planters' Hotel are gone. The Western Union and many other buildings are wrecked. The city was left in darkness. Fires broke out and threatened to destroy what the wind spared, but rain finally checked the flames. At Drake, Ill., a school house is said to have been demolished and eighty pupils killed. Telegraph wires were down and it is difficult to secure information. Heavy damage to life and property is reported from other localities.

After the wind and rain had done their work, fire added much to the storm's loss account. Down wires, wild currents of electricity, crushed buildings, all contributed to this element of destruction. The alarm system was paralyzed. Approaches were blocked; a $200,000 conflagration on the St. Louis side was supplemented by a dozen lesser fires. In East St. Louis a mill was burned and two other considerable losses were sustained. To the enormous total the fires added at least $500,000.

Trail of Ruin Through the City.

From where the storm entered St. Louis, out in the southwestern suburbs, to where it left, somewhere near the Eads bridge, there is a wide path of ruins. Factory after factory went down, and piles of bricks and timber mark the spots on which they stood. Dwellings were picked up and thrown in every direction. Business houses were flattened. There was no chance for the escape of the occupants. The ruins covered bruised and mangled bodies that will not be recovered until a systematic search is made. Thousands of families in South St. Louis are homeless, practically, and the temporary hospitals shelter scores and hundreds.

POSTOFFICE AND CUSTOM HOUSE.

At the time the storm broke the streets were thronged with crowds of people returning from their work. Among these the sudden fall of almost inky darkness penetrated almost momentarily by flashes of vivid lightning, the ominous rattle and rumble of the thunder, the torrents of stinging rain and the raging and howling of the mad tornado created a panic that made the streets of the city resemble the corridors of a madhouse. Chimneys, cornices, signs, everything that came in the wind's way, were swept away and dashed among the frenzied people. Pedestrians were themselves caught by the wind and buffeted against the walls of buildings or thrown from their feet like mere playthings. Overhead electric wires were torn from their fastenings and their deadly coils, with their hissing blue flames, joined in the destruction of life and property. People were killed by the score and the city hospital, which fortunately escaped serious damage by the storm, was soon crowded to the doors with wounded and dying. Long before the tornado had spent itself many of the downtown streets of the city were impassable with the wreckage of shattered buildings and the strands of broken electric wire which were sputtering and blazing everywhere and had it not been for the floods of rain the tornado might have been but the prelude to the destruction of the entire city by fire.

On the river the destruction was even more complete than on land. Only one steamer out of all the fleet that crowded the levee remained above the surface of the Mississippi. The others fell easy prey to the fury of the tempest and quickly sank, in many cases carrying down with them all on board. The Great Republic, one of the largest steamers on the river, was sunk along with others.

VIEW OF ST. LOUIS, OVERLOOKING THE DEVASTATED DISTRICT.

Death List Is Appalling.

Ten millions of damage to property and five hundred persons killed and a thousand injured, is what has been accomplished. East St. Louis is as badly damaged as St. Louis. Half a dozen small towns close to St. Louis, in Missouri, and at least two villages in southwestern Illinois are gone. There has been loss of life in each of these communities. What seemed to be three distinct and separate cyclones struck the city at 15 minutes past 5 o'clock in the afternoon. They came from the northwest, the west and the southwest.

When they reached the Mississippi river they had become one, which descended upon East St. Louis and from thence passed on toward Alton. The day was an oppressive one in the city. There was no wind and the people suffered from the heat. About 4 o'clock in the afternoon the entire western horizon was banked with clouds. These were piled one upon the other, with curling edges, yellow in fringe. A light wind sprang up and a sudden darkness came upon the city. This darkness increased until the storm broke. The descent of the storm was so sudden the fleeing women and children were caught in the streets and hurled to destruction or buried under falling walls.

Before the mass of clouds in the west, hanging over the villages of Clayton, Fern Ridge, Eden and Central, gave vent to their frightful contents funnels shot out from them. Some of these seemed to be projected into the air, others leaped to the earth, twisting and turning. Lightning played about them and there was a marvelous electrical display. Then came the outburst. Three of the funnels approached St. Louis with a wind that was traveling at the rate of eighty miles an hour.

STEAMER REPUBLIC SUNK BY THE CYCLONE.

From them and the clouds above, a strange, crackling sound came. This filled the air and at times was stronger than the incessant peals of thunder. The funnels enveloped the western side of the city, and in thirty minutes were wreaking destruction in the business heart. Men and women, horses, all kind of fowl in the open, were picked up and carried hundreds of feet in every direction.

So irresistible was the cyclone and so much greater in magnitude than any the country has ever previously known of, that some of the stanchest business blocks went down before it. Structures, the pride of merchants and architecturally famous from New York to San Francisco, were like tinder boxes when the wind was at its height. The massive stone fronts caved in.

Iron beams were torn from their fastenings and carried blocks away, as if they had been feathers. Roofs, braced and held to their positions by every device known to the best builders of any day, were torn off as if held only by threads. Telegraph poles fell in long rows, not coming down one by one, but in groups of a dozen or more at a time. A railroad train on the Eads bridge, one of the express trains of the Alton, known as No. 21, was blown over and the passengers piled up in a heap of injured.

The east end of the Eads bridge, one of the most solid and finest bridges in the world, was destroyed. The other great bridges spanning the Mississippi were all injured, some as seriously as the Eads. Scores of persons were drowned, or, after being killed on the land, blown into the water. Steamers like the Grand Republic, the City of Monroe, packets which are famous between New Orleans and St. Louis, were carried everywhere. Still others, after being torn from their moorings, disappeared, and have not been heard from. As a rule the smaller craft was sunk. This was particularly the case with the smaller excursion steamers, most of which had a great many women on board. Houses were blown into the river, and at one time during the worst of the blow a section of the river was scooped out and the muddy bottom shown. The water was carried blocks away as though it were a solid. Not while within the city limits did the funnels rise and fall from the ground, as is usually the case in cyclones in small places. There was no rebounding. Consequently whatever was in the path of the wind was either destroyed or badly injured.

THE GREAT EADS BRIDGE OVER THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

And this destruction was done in thirty minutes.

The bells of the city were pealing 6 o'clock when the worst of the storm had passed.

East St. Louis Ruined.

East St. Louis' tremendous shipping interests have received a heartrending blow. The railroad tracks were literally torn up from the right of way and scattered. Huge warehouses and freight depots were piled on top of each other. Long lines of box cars loaded with valuable freight were turned upside down. The telegraph offices were destroyed and miles of wire blown down.

There was a short time after the storm when St. Louis could not communicate with the outside world. Nor could her own citizens communicate with each other by any electrical means. Such a confusion and ruin in a large city was never witnessed since the Chicago fire.

Breaking at the hour it did, and the night following, the work of rescue and relief was very slow. The firemen and police were immediately made aids to the surgeons and physicians of the city. Many people were buried under the ruins of their homes or places of business. The electric lights being out, searching parties in the ruin strewed streets could not go ahead. They simply had to wait for the dawn.

RECALLS THE JOHNSTOWN FLOOD

Story of the Disaster that Visited the Pennsylvania Towns.

The catastrophe which has befallen St. Louis was within a few days of the seventh anniversary of the awful calamity visited upon Johnstown, Pa., and adjoining towns May 31, 1889, in which many lives were lost and millions of dollars' worth of property destroyed by the floods that raged along the Conemaugh river, bursting a reservoir covering a square mile located just above Johnstown. For weeks heavy rains had fallen in the mountains, and the resultant freshet wrought ruin and death that appalled the country. While towns were washed away, bridges destroyed and industries forced to suspend. Hundreds of people clung to their floating homes, which were swept onward upon a volume of water unprecedented in modern history. Many people were rescued from their perilous positions in the upper stories of their homes.

The Cambria iron works were destroyed and 2,000 men were thrown out of employment. Five large bridges were swept away. Cars and lumber floated upon the mad torrent. All trains on the Pennsylvania and Baltimore and Ohio railways were abandoned. Men, women and children were panic stricken. The fatality list exceeded 1,200. The water reached a depth of fifty feet, and it required prompt, persistent and heroic action to rescue the inmates of a valley in which death rode through upon a wave of merciless water.

The rain descended in torrents for seventy-two hours. Hundreds of dead bodies floated upon the bosom of the river for a distance of fifteen miles from the scene of the disaster. Wires were down and all telegraphic communication temporarily cut off. Collieries in the vicinity were forced to suspend. The damage extended to the properties of the Lehigh Valley and Reading railways.

ST. LOUIS CITY HOSPITAL, FILLED WITH INJURED.

FOUR UNDER ARREST.

Quartet of Chicago Toughs Charged with T. J. Marshall's Murder.

The coroner's jury has charged Frank Carpenter, Charles Gurney, Clarence White and John Lang with the murder of Thomas J. Marshall, one of the most prosperous young merchants of Chicago, and the quartet has been held for trial.

T. J. MARSHALL.

The murder was one of the most sensational which have occurred in the western metropolis in years. One evening just before it was time to close the general merchandise store known as the Golden Rule, located on West Madison street, owned and conducted by Mr. Marshall, three men entered the store by different doors and approached the cashier's desk, where sat Miss Mattie Garretson. One of the men ordered her to deliver over the cash, emphasizing his demand by pointing two revolvers at her. She refused to comply with his demand, and closed the cash drawer, throwing off the combination. The would-be robber aimed a blow at her head with one of his guns, which she barely managed to dodge. There were several lady clerks standing about waiting for the time to go home. They saw what was going on at the desk and began to scream. This attracted the attention of Mr. Marshall, who was in another part of the store talking with his general manager. Just as he was about to start toward the desk one of the other men approached him and leveled two revolvers at his head.

Frightened by the screams of the girls, the burglar at the desk started to back out of the store, guarding his retreat with his revolvers. Marshall advanced toward the man who was coming his way and he, too, started out of the store, keeping Marshall covered all the time. Seeing that the latter was bent upon his capture, the man fired both revolvers just as he reached the door. One ball struck Marshall in the temple and the other in the heart and he fell back dead.

The screams and the shots had attracted a large crowd about the store doors and the robbers and murderer saw that they were in danger of being cornered, so they began to fire into the crowd, injuring two or three people, and clearing a way for their escape. They ran in different directions, but in such a manner that they came together a short distance from the store. One of them was captured by a pedestrian just as he reached the rendezvous, but the others coming up he was set at liberty and the trio vanished.

Half a hundred suspects were rounded up by the police, and out of the lot the four named above were identified by the clerks as those who participated in the tragedy.

NEW PROFESSOR AT ANN ARBOR

Six Hundred Women to Benefit by Dr. Eliza M. Mosher's Experience.

Dr. Eliza M. Mosher, of Brooklyn, who comes to Ann Arbor as associate dean of the department of literature and arts and professor of hygiene, is now on her way to Europe to study the colleges for women in connection with Oxford and Cambridge. The dean of the department for many years was Martin L. D'Ooge, but the place Dr. Mosher is to fill is a new one. Her duties will bring her into almost personal relations with the 600 young women in the university, and to each of them she will be guide, philosopher and friend. Dr. Mosher will be the first woman professor in the university, and her post will be one of great distinction and responsibility. She leaves a very lucrative practice in Brooklyn to accept the offer of the University of Michigan.

WORK OF CONGRESS.

THE WEEK'S DOINGS IN SENATE AND HOUSE.

A Comprehensive Digest of the Proceedings in the Legislative Chambers at Washington—Matters that Concern the People.

Lawmakers at Labor.

The Senate put in Friday in discussing the bill to prohibit the issue of bonds. Senators Hill and Sherman united in denouncing the measure as one which had for its object repudiation. The House listened to conference reports on the river and harbor bill.

The general deficiency appropriation bill, the last of the supply bills, was before the Senate throughout Monday, and passed just before adjournment. It temporarily displaced the bill to prohibit the issue of bonds. As passed the bill carries about $10,500,000 bonds, an increase of $6,000,000 over the House bill. After disposing of routine work the House went into committee of the whole to consider the bill to repeal the free alcohol clause of the existing tariff law.

The House Tuesday by a vote of 165 to 69 passed the bill for the repeal of section 51 of the present tariff law providing for a rebate on alcohol used in the arts or medicinal compounds. An amendment was attached providing for a joint commission to consist of three members from each house to examine and report on all questions relating to free alcohol at the next session. The Senate amendment to the general deficiency bill, excepting the French spoliation claims and claims under the Bowman act, were disagreed to and the bill sent to conference. Another partial report on the Indian appropriation bill which left only the question of sectarian schools and the old settlers' claims still in dispute, was adopted. Tariff and finance each came in for a share of consideration in the Senate. Early in the day Mr. Sherman succeeded in having the filled cheese bill taken up, whereupon Mr. Dubois offered an amendment adding 75 cents a barrel to the tax on beer. On the question of adopting the amendment the debate became general, Senators Mills and Gray supporting and Nelson, Aldrich and Vilas opposing it. The bill was displaced by the bond bill, which was advocated by Mr. Pritchard and opposed by Mr. Lindsay. A bill was passed to pension, at $75 a month, the widow of Gen. George E. Spencer, at one time United States Senator from Alabama.

The Cycle in London.

It was but the other day that it was a question whether the cycle should be permitted in Hyde Park. Presently it will be the horseman and the carriage people who will have to humbly beg permission to be permitted to use the royal parks. Already the owners of these anachronistic animals and antiquated conveyances are regarded with disfavor, because they intertere with the diversions of the "smart" persons from Belgravia, Bayswater, etc., who disport themselves on the "wheel." Mr. Akers-Douglas solemnly admonished them in the House of Commons yesterday not to go riding or driving about on the road north of the Serpentine before 12 o'clock, "out of consideration for the cyclists." Soon it may become necessary to post a notice at the gates of the park to this effect:

"Only cyclers, autocrats and steam carriages allowed here between sunrise and sunset. Persons on horseback may ride after midnight."—St. James Gazette.

Volcanic "Ring" in the Pacific.

Nirrafon, the volcanic "ring" island recently described by Lieutenant Somerville in the Journal of the London Geographical Society, is a lonely spot midway between Fiji and Samoa. It is about three miles in external diameter, and the entire coast line is formed of black lava rocks. The internal diameter—that is to say, the diameter of the "caldera"—is two miles, and the cliffs surrounding it are 200 or 300 feet high. It contains a deep, calm lake, on the eastern side of which is a peninsula formed by the craters of the eruption of 1886. The view from the summits of the cliffs around the "caldera" is of remarkable beauty, and includes a great expanse of the Pacific ocean rolling under the southeast trade, as well as the still, deep lake within the luxuriant foliage of the outer slope and the barren cinder cones of the recent outburst.

Largest Sailing Ships Afloat.

The British full-rigged ship Somali, one of the most colossal sailing vessels afloat, has just reached New York from Calcutta in command of Captain Hannoy, and manned by a crew of thirty-nine men.

The Somali registers 3,336 tons and spreads 15,000 square feet of canvas. It is consigned to James Parker & Co., who say it is the largest British sailing ship now afloat. The hull of the Somali is of steel. Under full sail it left Calcutta on Jan. 2 last and made the trip in 116 days. Captain Hannoy said the voyage was without incident and the weather favorable throughout. It brings 7,000 tons of general cargo, which will be discharged at Erie Basin.

Tall Man Wants a Job.

The "tallest man alive," Col. A. A. Powell, once of Texas, but for many years of Barnum's circus and the world, is looking for a job as floorwalker in a store in St. Louis, Mo. He is 34 years old and stands 7 feet 7½ inches in his stockings. He says the show business was tiring and didn't pay, all things considered.

A Confession from Boston.

After all, nothing draws such a magnificent crowd in this town as an athletic show. Not even the sweet notes of the operatic artists nor the acting of the dramatic stars can compete with the magnetic power of athletic sports. They top the whole list.—Boston Herald.

AT HER MERCY

BY HARRIET JAY.

CHAPTER XXIV.

After leaving the doctor's house Feveral walked slowly and thoughtfully along in the direction of Park Lane. He seemed to have grown much older within the last few days, for the one aim and purpose of his life was about to be fulfilled—he was about to meet face to face the man who had wrecked his life, and driven his beloved wife into an early grave.

He proceeded at once to the ducal residence. He was admitted without question of any kind, but when he asked to see the duchess, the footman gravely informed him that both she and Miss Greybrook had left the house.

The man led the way to the duke's study. During the two preceding nights the duke had had no rest, and the want of sleep as well as the mental anguish which he had endured had left strong traces upon him. He spent the whole of one night arranging his papers, and at early morning the next day, his Spanish servant entered the study, only to find his master still busily at work. He handed him a note found in the rooms of the duchess. It read:

"After what has occurred, you cannot expect me to remain longer in your house. I am, therefore, returning to the home from which you took me. Meanwhile let me assure you that whatever step you may choose to take will not be opposed by me, as my sole wish now is to be free from the degradation of bearing your name.

"CONSTANCE HOWARTH."

Crushing the letter in his hand, the duke returned to his study; all his desires seemed altered now. If Constance wished to be free—if by obtaining a divorce he would be acceding to her wishes, he no longer seemed to desire it. He had regarded this act on his part as a means of revenge; he believed it would be torture to her to be branded as infamous before the world, but since this was not the case, he determined to think of some other means of gaining his end.

He was so lost in his meditations that he did not hear the gentle rap at the door. When the door was opened, however, he started up and faced Feveral.

"My lord," said the latter, with something of his old airiness of manner, "I have come to inform you that all my arrangements are made, and that I can place myself at your disposal at any time you may be pleased to name."

The duke, who had reseated himself, looked up angrily.

"I must request you, Mr. Feveral," said he, "not to thrust yourself upon me unannounced. At present I am too busy to attend you. Be so good as to leave me."

"Sorry to be compelled to refuse," returned Feveral, taking a chair; "you have agreed to fight me, and until you do I shall remain your constant companion."

The duke stared; was the man mad or drunk? Feveral, folding his arms, calmly returned his companion's gaze.

"You are astonished," said he, "yet I see no cause for astonishment. As I said, you accepted my challenge. I do not mean to let you escape."

"Escape! what do you mean? Do you think I fear you?"

"It looks like it," returned Feveral, still sitting with folded arms and preserving an unruffled demeanor.

For a moment the two looked into each other's eyes, then the duke returned to his desk. He made no further attempt to rid himself of his companion, but tried to continue his work. It was a difficult task, however; the strange nervousness which had taken possession of him was increased ten-fold by the fact of his enemy's presence in the room, silent and unobtrusive as it was. Whatever he did, he felt that Feveral was watching, nay, more, that he had power to read his inmost thoughts.

He had intended to leave that evening for Avondale Castle; he now changed his mind, and resolved to defer his journey until the next morning, hoping by that time to have shaken himself free of his tormentor.

But though he retired to his room, he did not go to rest, but sat hour after hour gazing into vacancy, and thinking. As the hours passed on the house grew quieter; all the servants had retired. One o'clock struck, and the duke started from his seat. A sudden thought occurred to him; Feveral must be sleeping; here was a chance to escape from this man!

CHAPTER XXV.

The duke moved noiselessly forward to the room which had been formerly occupied by Feveral, and of which he believed the secretary had retaken possession. He tried the door gently, and found it locked.

Perfectly satisfied now, the duke continued his way, noiselessly passing along the corridors and down the thickly carpeted stairs; when he reached the door he found it securely fastened, but he noiselessly drew back the bolts and bars and turned the key in the lock. The door yielded to his touch, it opened, he stepped across the threshold, and was met face to face by a man.

It was Feveral!

"Ah, my lord," said he, "I see I was not the only one who was restless to-night. Moonlight and fresh air are certainly preferable to stuffy rooms and sleeplessness; at least, I thought so, and so I came forth; and see how beautiful everything looks beneath the calm silver light."

He paused; the duke made no reply; at first it was surprise, now it was shame which kept him silent. Had he remained a moment longer he would most assuredly have tried to strangle the man, so great was his rage and sense of humiliation; with one quick movement he stepped back and closed the door, leaving Feveral outside.

After breakfast the carriage was announced, and, greatly to the duke's amazement, he was allowed to enter it alone. He believed that Feveral, wearied with his long night of watching, had determined to let him escape. He drove quickly to a railroad station, and having taken his ticket, he secured a compartment which he asked the guard to lock.

For a time he was left alone; he watched the crowd gathering upon the platform, but saw no face he knew; at length the train began to move; he was congratulating himself on his escape, when the carriage door was hurriedly unlocked and Feveral stepped in.

It was useless to protest, or indeed to make a movement of any kind; the train was now well started, and the two men were locked up alone.

Neither spoke; Feveral, indeed, behaved as if he were entirely alone. Taking no notice whatever of his companion, he reclined in the further end of the compartment and began to read a newspaper. The duke, angry at first, gradually became more subdued, and stared at his companion in singular fascination. To escape from him was impossible; if at the next station he changed his compartment Feveral would assuredly follow; and he dared not seek protection, for once given into custody Feveral would be silent no longer, but would most assuredly heap ignominy on him before the world.

He looked at Feveral; he had dropped his paper now, and lay back with closed eyes. Very noiselessly and cautiously the duke crept forward; Feveral did not move—suddenly, with a spring, like that of a wild panther, the duke leaped upon his sleeping companion, fixing his fingers in his throat.

But Feveral was instantly aroused. It was his last lapse of weariness. It was the duke's final chance to rid himself of an implacable foe. Resisting him, overpowering him, Feveral told him what he should insist upon—the duel, and at once.

The night mail to Dover, the Calais boat, the train for Paris—what a sombre, ominous journey it was! Pertinacious as a ferret, Feveral kept a close watch on his enemy, and at last the duke grimly welcomed the crucial moment when his superior ability as a marksman would certainly rid him of a dreaded enemy.

At 5 o'clock the next morning they met at the spot agreed on. The duke had fought several duels, and yet the feeling which possessed him was a certain kind of fear. He dreaded lest the fortune of war might go against him, and so prevent him from dealing to Constance that amount of punishment which he believed to be her due.

The pistols were produced, examined and loaded. The doctor put out his instruments, the ground was measured, and the gentlemen were asked to take their places.

"One moment," said Feveral, politely. "I have a word to say to the duke."

The seconds and the surgeons retired, and the two men were left alone. The duke said nothing—it was Feveral who spoke.

"My lord," he said, "as we, neither of us, can tell what kind of a termination this little affair will have, I wish, before we take our places, to confide to you a piece of information which will doubtless give you some satisfaction. It is this—your rival lives!"

The duke started.

"My rival lives!" he exclaimed. "What do you mean, sir?"

"Simply this, my lord; that I have dared to disobey your instructions; you told me to cast the poor gentleman into the street. Instead, I had him carried to the house of a physician, who dressed the wound, and undertook to cure the patient. Lord Harrington is at the present moment progressing rapidly toward recovery."

During this speech the duke's face was a study. Rage at this news, coupled with intense hatred for the man who brought it, completely mastered him. Scarcely knowing what he did, he sprung upon Feveral and, locked in each other's arms, the two men fell upon the sand.

The seconds, alarmed at the unexpected turn events had taken, immediately rushed to the rescue, and the two men were separated. Feveral arose, seemingly as calm as he had been before, but the duke was panting with fury.

The two men were placed back to back; the paces were counted, the signal was given; the principals wheeled and fired. When the smoke cleared Feveral was seen to be standing apparently unhurt, but the duke was lying on the ground. Hugo rushed to his master and lifted his head. One glance at his face, and he turned with a startled look to his companion.

"The duke is dead!" he said.

CHAPTER XXVI.

At 4 o'clock that same afternoon Feveral stood again in the streets of London. The journey from France had been made mechanically, but now he paused, realizing the nature of the task which was before him. Some one must tell Constance what had occurred. He hailed a hansom at once and drove to Dr. Priestly's house.

On alighting at the gate he came face to face with Alice Greybrook.

"Miss Greybrook, this is fortunate," said he, taking her hand; "how is Lord Harrington?"

"Much better, and past all danger."

"I wish some one to go to Avondale Castle, to the Duchess d'Azzeglio."

"To Constance?" cried Alice in alarm; "is there ill news for her, Mr. Feveral?"

"Whether the news be good or ill, it will be for her to determine. The duke is dead."

That same evening Alice left London for Avondale Castle, but before starting she had heard from Feveral the whole story of the duke's death.

While all these terrible events had been taking place, Constance, utterly ignorant of what was going on, had been living quietly with her grandmother.

Life to her was virtually over; she believed that all happiness for her was ended, but she was glad to escape the degradation which would have come upon her had she been compelled to return and live with her husband. The only consolation for all her sorrow was the knowledge that her cousin lived. Day by day she waited and watched in feverish eagerness for the letters which came to her from her friend, always bringing her some comfort and making her miserable life a little less hard to bear. When Alice arrived she rushed to embrace her friend; then she saw that her face was pale and troubled.

"Alice, what is the matter? why have you come?" she cried, in alarm.

"Lord Harrington is almost well," said Alice, quietly taking her friend's hand. "I have other news for you, Constance."

Then she told her as tenderly as possible the whole of the story, which she had heard from Feveral, and Constance, listening to her, realized that she was free.

Early the next morning the three ladies left Avondale Castle for London. By that time the news of Constance's widowhood had spread. They reached London early in the day, and drove at once to Park Lane. One glance at the house, and Constance began to realize for the first time that the news was really true. It seemed to her as if the shadow of death hung over the place. All the blinds were drawn, and she felt almost suffocated by the feeling of intense stillness which reigned everywhere.

The body of the duke had not arrived from France, but was hourly expected. Hugo had telegraphed that all must be in readiness for its reception.

The story of the duke's death was a nine days' wonder. The papers took it up and discussed it in their columns, the ladies in their drawing rooms. Various stories were circulated, and certain whispers concerning the duchess were set afloat, but none of these could be substantiated, since the only man who could have given credence to these reports was dead.

Meanwhile Constance lived on very quietly in Park Lane. Greatly to Hugo's amazement, the only will to be found was one which made Constance the sole mistress of her husband's immense fortune. Her first care was to dismiss Hugo, and half her retinue of servants; then she caused a number of the rooms to be closed; and lived quietly with her grandmother and Miss Greybrook in the few small rooms which were set apart for them. Three weeks passed thus. At the end of that time Constance, yielding to the entreaties of her friend, consented to take a trip abroad. She was in her room one day, giving orders to her maid, when Alice came to her, and asked to speak to her alone.

"Constance," said Alice, "whom do you think I have seen to-day? Some one who wishes to see you."

In a moment Constance's face flushed; for she thought of Frank, and Alice noting this, continued hurriedly:

"It was Mr. Feveral, dear."

"Mr. Feveral!" exclaimed Constance. "Alice, have you forgotten he killed the duke?"

"He killed the duke; yes, in fair and open fight. Oh, do not look startled, dear. I do not wish to condone a murder—but this was not a murder, and there are some wrongs which only blood can wipe out. He came to me to-day while I was walking in the park, and my heart bled for him, he was so changed."

Half an hour later, when Constance was again in her sitting room, the door of the room was opened, and Feveral was shown in.

Mr. Feveral! Could this indeed be he—this grave, gray man? Although only a few weeks had passed since she had seen him, as many years seemed to have been added to his age; the mask which he had assumed while in the service of the duke had been cast aside, and she saw instead of the plotting spy a weary, heart-broken man.

"Mr. Feveral," she said, "I sent for you—yes; and now that you are here I do not repent of my action. I could not speak because I am so sorry to see you like this—you are so changed."

He smiled sadly. "I have no longer a part to play," he said; "my work on earth is done. All I pray for now is death. My one joy in life has gone from me, and I have lived to avenge her; that was all I craved for, to see the man who had killed my wife and wrecked my happiness dead at my feet.

"You have suffered so much," she said; "I am sorry for you."

She held out her hand; he took it, held it in both of his, and the next moment was gone.

* * * * * * *

Since that day two years have come and gone; the London season is at its height again, and the tragic story of the death of the Duke d'Azzeglio has passed entirely from every mind.

The spring has come on with unusual brightness; so thinks Sir John Priestly as he sits at the window of his study gazing out upon his garden, where his wife is busy amongst her flowers.

His wife, none other indeed than our old friend, Alice Greybrook, looks up and beckons to him, and he obediently rises and goes down.

"I have news," she said, brightly. "Constance is coming home."

"You don't say so!"

"But I do. Just listen."

She produced from her pocket a letter—and commenced to read:

"We are coming back, dear, and would like to stay with you for a few days before taking possession of our home. Frank has managed to dispose of my old house in Park Lane, so I thank heaven I shall have nothing now to remind me of that one terrible episode in our lives. Frank and I are as much united as if we had never been parted; and I shall try to forget that there was ever a time when I was not his wife. CONSTANCE."

That same evening a happy party gathered in Sir John Priestly's dining room. There was Alice, fulfilling the duties of hostess; near to her was Constance, and on her right was Frank, looking handsomer than ever. The talk was flowing merrily, when it was interrupted by Alice.

"Do you know what to-day is?" she cried. "It is the anniversary of the day on which we were all married."

"Then let us drink a toast," cried Frank. "Priestly, old fellow, may you and Alice be as happy as you deserve to be; and may Connie and I continue as we are; eh, Connie?"

She laughed and nodded, and drank the toast. (The end.)

The Rustlers' War.

In Wyoming irrigation struggled for some years with an obstacle more formidable than aridity. This was the organized stock interest which flourished on the public lands, wastefully using the public streams to produce crops of natural hay and to water great herds of cattle. While many of the leaders of this industry were of liberal and progressive mind, and freely conceded that they had neither a moral nor a legal right to stand in the way of progress, an aggressive and troublesome minority insisted that cattle were worth more than men to Wyoming.

The final conflict came in the "Rustlers' War" of 1892, with its ignominious and crushing defeat of the cattlemen and their hired outlaws from Texas. With that fiasco the barriers of opposition fell once and for all, and the irrigation sentiment has since dominated the State. Reclamation and settlement in Wyoming and similar localities elsewhere have never really menaced the stock industry, but have rather vindicated the necessity of its reorganization upon a more democratic basis. There will be more cattle in the aggregate, but distributed among a multitude of small owners living in the irrigated valleys. There they will raise the diversified products essential to their support, and great crops of winter fodder for cattle, while the adjacent uplands will serve for summer pasture. This process has begun, and it results in the elevation of the character of the men and of their industry alike.—Century.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

DEMOCRATIC OPPORTUNITY.

McKinley's nomination, predicted as certain by the World six weeks ago, is now conceded by everybody who speaks his honest thought. There will not even be a ballot at St. Louis—only a shout.

McKinley's triumph is Democratic opportunity. The Ohio leader represents every element and phase and consequence of Republicanism that is antagonistic to Democracy. His nomination will present the issue between the parties square-cut on every side. Twice on these issues he and his party have been overwhelmingly defeated before the people.

In 1888 the Republicans carried the country, electing their President and a majority of Congress. Mr. McKinley stood sponsor for the tariff bill which represented the policy of his party and the claims of its campaign contributors. At the election in 1890 the people passed judgment upon it. They converted a working Republican majority in the House into a Democratic majority of 148. They left McKinley himself at home. They rolled up a popular majority against McKinleyism of 1,332,000. The Republican contention was that the vote was hasty. The people, they said, had not experienced sufficiently long the beauties of the McKinley tariff and the Reed expenditures. But in 1892, after two years' experience, the people reaffirmed their verdict. They elected Grover Cleveland by an electoral majority of 132 and a popular plurality of 382,956. They returned a Democratic majority of 94 in the House. They recovered the Senate and elected a majority of governors. It was a tidal-wave submerging—the second overthrow of McKinleyism.

Again McKinley is coming before the country as the champion of protection—though we have a tariff quite as high as that recommended by the Republican Tariff Commission in 1883 and enacted by a Republican Congress. He is to be posed as "the advance agent of Prosperity"—prosperity of the sort illustrated by the Homestead strike and riots, by hundreds of other strikes and lockouts, by the failure to secure any advance in wages to accompany the large advance in bounties to the protected industries, and finally, in the last year of his tariff, by a million workingmen out of employment, an empty treasury, a dissipated gold reserve and a monetary panic.

If Democracy means one thing and Republicanism another, could Democrats ask a clearer issue, a fairer field or a more vulnerable candidate? Standing against any tariff disturbance that is not in the direction of revenue to the treasury and relief to consumers, reaffirming every distinctive Democratic principle with clearness and vigor, and nominating a candidate who honestly represents them, the party would be fully armed for the contest. It would have its quarrel just. McKinley's triumph is Democratic opportunity. Is the party wise enough to improve it?—New York World.

"Equal and Universal."

The Pennsylvania Republicans, in their convention resolutions, tell the people that protection "should be as nearly as possible equal and universal." Why the reservation "as nearly as possible?" Why not entirely "equal and universal?" We confess that we should not have been surprised to find this claim being made, but it seems to have staggered the men who framed these resolutions, and they felt compelled to qualify them. This for the very good reason that such a declaration would have involved a contradiction in turn. No protection, as it is designed in this country, can be equal and universal; just as much as it approaches to being equal and universal, it ceases to be protection. The essence of protection is partiality. Protect everybody and nobody is protected. The advantage in protection is that it aids one man's business while it does not aid another's. This is a fact so obvious that even Pennsylvanians have not had the courage to ignore it.—Boston Herald.

Vain Jingo Speeches in Congress.

With the people of the United States pledged to peace by all the considerations of material prosperity, with the executive department of the Government pledged openly, by the official utterances of its head, to the policy of universal peace, the rash speeches in a Congress which is playing politics on the eve of a general election should count for little. And it is to be noted further that none of the belligerent resolutions introduced in this Congress have been adopted in a shape pointing to war. The future of the United States is a future of peace.—Boston Post.

Too Much Cut and Dried.

It is interesting to note that the apparent easy victory of McKinley is likely to have the effect of reducing the attendance at the St. Louis convention. There is no fun in a convention which meets merely as a formality, and whose choice is known beyond serious question weeks in advance. It is said that the attendance from Washington will be comparatively small, and politicians generally, who enjoy a close fight, will not be clamorous to get to St. Louis under the circumstances.—Indianapolis News.

Quality and Price Drifting Apart.

The fit of generosity which impelled Congress to vote to its members a sheer gratuity of $1,200 a year, ostensibly for clerk hire, has developed the fact that the average cost to the country of our modern statesmen is four times what it was when Adams, Clay, Webster and their compeers sat in the halls of Congress. And the worst of it is that while the price has gone up the quality has as steadily gone down.—Philadelphia Record.

Beards and Presidential Booms.

There is something ominous in the facts recalled by New York politicians with reference to the fate of beardless men who have sought presidential honors. William H. Seward was beardless and he was put in nomination by Mr. Evarts, whose face was smooth like his own. Tilden was likewise without hirsute adornment, and so are McKinley, Morton and Reed. Politicians are not devoid of superstition, and there are those who profess to see in the beardlessness of McKinley a fact fraught with considerable significance.—St. Louis Republic.

McKinley's Straddle-Bug Button.

Reed as a wit has been in eclipse for months. As a Presidential candidate he has been forced to restrain his predilection to joke and to let fly all sorts of sarcastic quips. Perhaps the McKinley wave which has swept everything before it has brought the reflection that he's not in it this time. And perhaps the McKinley triumphs have been taken as a release from this restraint so irritating to a man of his effervescent nature. At all events, he couldn't resist the temptation to make this comment on McKinley's evasive attitude on the financial question. In discussing attempts to get a straightforward statement from McKinley on his money views, he said to-day:

Straddle-bug (n.). A sort of tumble bug, a sea-faced beetle, with long legs of the genus cantuon (U. S.)—Century Dictionary.

"McKinley doesn't want to be called a gold bug or a silver bug, so he has compromised on a straddle bug."

A McKinley campaign button, made on the lines of Reed's views, might resemble somewhat the above picture. The bracketed U. S. means that this bug is peculiar to the United States.

Relic of Republican Extravagance.

It is true that the present administration has issued bonds to the amount of $262,000,000, but if it had inherited, as its predecessor did, an immense surplus it would not have been compelled to increase the public debt. For whatever of blame has been incurred by the borrowing of money under the Cleveland administration the Fifty-third and Fifty-fourth Congresses are responsible. No glory belongs to Harrison, no blame to Cleveland, for the payment of bonds by the former or the issue of bonds by the latter. Both of these administrations simply performed their duty in meeting the appropriations and protecting the national credit. One found a full treasury and emptied it. The other found an empty treasury and has been compelled to replenish it.—Washington Post.

Usual Trick of the Trusts.

When it turned cold last autumn everybody was obliged to have coal. The coal conspirators took advantage of the necessity. They added largely to the price of that necessary of life. Now that warm weather has suddenly come everybody must have ice, whatever it costs. Thereupon the ice monopolists have advanced the price of that necessary. We have laws that denounce such conspirators as criminals and prescribe the penitentiary as their proper place of residence. But not a single prosecution has been instituted, and there is so little prospect of any that the conspirators go about their work openly as if it were ordinary, honest business.—New York World.

Better Machinery, Not Protection.

If our cotton and woolen manufacturers would throw out their old and antiquated machinery, and throw in to their business the advantage of thoroughly skilled artistic labor, they would have no need of building higher tariff walls. The greater part of the importations of cottons and woolens into the United States are brought hither because of the beauty and fineness of the fabrics. We buy them of the foreign makers because we cannot get them of our tariff-coddled home manufacturers, whose market is dependent upon legislative restrictions, and who neglect to keep step with the advancing technical and mechanical skill of their outside competitors.—Philadelphia Record.

Petty Pilferers in Congress.

The people have known for many years that Senators and Representatives have been feathering their own nests, but they were not prepared for the effrontery with which a majority of the House openly recorded themselves Friday as petty pilferers of the public treasury by voting to each member $1,200 a year for clerk hire, whether he hires a clerk or not.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Reed Has a Will of His Own.

One of the objections that some of the Warwicks have to Reed as a Presidential candidate is that he has such a marked individuality of character and is so prone to have his own way, once he has decided what it should be, that they could not hope to control him. He is not the pliant tool that McKinley has shown himself to be.—Detroit Free Press.

Two Ways of Going to Work.

The Republicans seem to have settled on a candidate for President, but they have the ticklish work of making a platform yet to attend to. The Democrats seem to be going at the platform work first. Good idea.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A Unique Advance Agent.

Most advance agents incline to be talkative. Fancy an Advance Agent of Prosperity who can't be coaxed to say a single definite word respecting the character of the show of which he is in advance!—Philadelphia Record.

WOMAN AND HER WAYS.

NEW THING IN FANCY WORK.

NOVELTIES in the way of fancy work have been few and far between in recent years, and readers will be glad to learn that a new and effective decoration for their drawing-rooms has been shown recently at the Woman's Exchange, New York. This consists of what are called cache pots, or coverings for flowerpots, embroidered on satin in Roman floss of different colors mixed with gold and silver threads and the high lights put in with spangles and jeweled stones. The designs are copied from old Italian embroideries and empire patterns, and when finished are mounted on cardboard, which is varnished on both sides to prevent the dampness of the flower pots from injuring the delicate satin. The colors just now are chosen to mix well with spring flowers. A rose-colored cover, with a design embroidered in light yellow floss and topaz stones, with the outlines in gold spangles and gold braid, incloses a flowerpot planted with pink tulips. Another in old blue satin, worked in white floss, with opals and silver spangles, is intended for a pot of marguerites.

Argument for Woman Suffrage.

Of all the numerous reasons which have been given by men for denying suffrage to women, their lack of pockets is the latest, even though it is not a whit more rational than some of the others. It would seem that a woman had endured enough from the need of pockets, or at least the retiring disposition of the solitary one allowed them, without having the absence of this useful receptacle thrown at them as an element against their great ambition to vote. But there is no accounting for what men may do to keep up the appearance of superiority over the gentler sex. It is said that pockets have a very "profound effect" in a man's character, that they give him a certain sort of confidence in himself which he could never acquire without their aid, and it is certainly true that they afford him no end of excuse for neglecting to mail his wife's letters, and help him to express a variety of emotions without words by thrusting his hands into their depths. He has never known the overwhelming embarrassment of a groping struggle after one pocket lurking somewhere in the voluminous folds of a dress skirt, or he would grant the right of suffrage by way of recompense; but the woman who is capable of voting is ingenious enough to supply herself with the required number of pockets to give her the self-reliance necessary to a political career, and soothe her agitated feelings when silence is the only safe method of expression.

Earning Pin Money.

If a girl is fond of her needle, she may keep a dainty piece of work on hand—a centerpiece, or a bureau scarf, or a doily or two, and embroider these as she has opportunity, gradually becoming so expert and deft that her needle produces exquisite effects, like those of a painter's brush. Such work is salable, and there are always people who will order it for holiday or birthday gifts, or for their contributions to fairs. You must not hope to sell what you do in this line unless it is really excellent work, but if you are skilled you will be able to reap some profit from your labor. Many girls earn their money for charity in this way.

Among pleasant methods of earning money I must mention the device of Marion, the 16-year-old daughter of a friend, who pays her a little salary for keeping a set of books for him. There is in this case a particular account which the father wishes to keep separate from all others, and Marion, who has studied bookkeeping, has charge of this, her father willingly remunerating her for her time. When a girl's parents are able to pay her for some work which she does at home she is to be congratulated.—Harper's Round Table.

Plea for the Shop Girls.

In the annual report of the Consumers' league of New York City the following advice is given to shoppers:

Shop during reasonable hours; when possible, early in the morning when saleswomen are fresh and not tired out and nervous. Avoid making purchases Saturday afternoon, so that eventually the shops may all give a half holiday. If at any time you feel irritated or annoyed by apparent indifference or carelessness of saleswomen, stop and consider what it means to be on one's feet from ten to fourteen hours a day, in a crowded space, shoved and pushed about, lifting heavy boxes at times, waiting on impatient customers who wish to be helped to know their own minds, keeping account of sales and stock, taking addresses often given hurriedly and carelessly, and fined in many instances if written down incorrectly; and all this for salaries ranging from $3 to $8 per week, and obliged to dress neatly and fairly well, and to pay out of it for one's board, lodging, clothing and carfare.

Statistics of Female Perfection.

Giving the height of the Venetian Venus, 5 feet 5 inches, as the accepted perfect stature for a woman, here is how you may know whether you are a perfect specimen of your own sex by applying other rules laid down by authorities. For a woman of 5 feet 5 inches 138 pounds is the proper weight, and if she be well formed she can stand another ten pounds without greatly showing it. When her arms are extended she should measure from tip of middle finger to tip of middle finger 5 feet 5 inches, exactly her own height. The length of her hand should be just a tenth of that, and her foot just a seventh. The distance from the elbow to the middle finger should be the same as the distance for the elbow to the middle of the chest. From the top of the head to the chin should be just the length of the foot, and there should be the same distance between the chin and the armpits. A woman of this height should measure 24 inches about the waist and 34 inches about the bust if measured from under the arms, and 43 if over them. The upper arm should measure 13 inches, and the wrist 6. The calf of the leg should measure 14½ inches and the thigh 25 and the ankle 8 inches.

Family Cards.

It is now the custom for a young lady to have her name engraved on her mother's card. After she has been in society a year she may then have her own card. In England, if the young lady is motherless, her name is engraved on her father's card; she never calls or receives calls without a chaperon, a custom it were well to observe in this country, where so many motherless girls fall a prey to mercenary fortune hunters.

Virtue in an Outdoor Life.

Watch the Turkeys.

Says a Pennsylvania farmer: "I always know when there is going to be a wind storm by watching the turkeys and chickens go to roost each night. In calm weather the fowls always roost on the poles with their heads alternating each way—that is, one faces east, the next west, and so on.

"But when there is going to be a high wind they always roost with their heads toward the direction from which the storm is coming. There are reasons for these different ways of roosting, I take it.

"When there is no wind to guard against they can see other dangers more readily if they are headed in both directions, but when wind is to arise they face it because they can hold their positions better. But the part I can't understand is how the critters know that the wind is going to rise when we mortals lack all intimation of it."

Settled.

As we said in our last issue, democrats are likely to get together on the silver issue on a reasonable basis, and with out a split in the party. For this condition, the COURIER has labored and is satisfied with the outlook. There will now be no bolt. Democrats can all agree on a silver plank, and one will now surely be adopted by the state convention and is nearly as certain to be adopted in the national convention. As we have often said there is no need for a split, nor for a quarrel. Now let us all unite and have harmony and success. The American people by a large majority desire to try free silver. The majority should rule, is the true democratic doctrine.

Value of a College Training.

The oft-debated question as to the value of college training seems to us to hardly be an open question at all. The fact set over against the college training is usualy the manifest one that a great many forceful men have managed to make their own way and to accomplish great things without the curriculum of the college. These are persons of such great force that they could not be kept down even by great disadvantages. But such persons are rare outside colleges or within them. They might have been still more capable men by the aid of college training.

It is well known that many such persons have lamented their disadvantages. It would be difficult to show what harm a college training could have done them. But colleges, like many other institutions, are for the average person, and we cannot conceive but that the average person is always better for the help which the college course gives. While we find some persons who are conspicuous for their abilities and capacities who have not been regularly educated, the fact is the majority of people in high places are college men.—New York Ledger.

A Lively Young Duke.

The duke of Orleans served for a time in the English army, but was compelled to give up his connection in consequence of his childish behavior. He played no end of senseless tricks while stationed at Aldershot, was most insubordinate as regarded discipline, was forever taking advantage of the immunity due to his royal rank and finally was compelled to leave the army for having cut the ropes anchoring a captive balloon in which Gen. Sir Evelyn Wood and a couple of other field officers were taking observations during a sham battle. A strong wind was blowing and the balloon was carried up into the air and its occupants were unable to effect a descent until at a distance of some thirty miles from Aldershot. Sir Evelyn complained directly, not only to the duke of Cambrige but also the queen herself, who has never liked the young duke, and who immediately responded to Sir Evelyn's communication by intimating to the comte and comtess de Paris that she could no longer permit their son to continue his military training in her army.—Exchange.

The Bicycle Blaze.

The desruction of 1,700 bicycles in Boston by fire the other day is a great loss to the world, but happily one that is soon repaired. If 17,000,000 bicycles had been suddenly wiped out they would hardly have been missed in this whirling age in which we live. But the imagination grows pale, halts, stumbles and falls dead in at attempt to picture the utter helpfulness of society if all the bicycles were to be destroyed. Trade and commerce would be paralyzed, pleasure would be turned to pain, the heavens would roll together as a scroll and chaos and old night would come again. The bicycle is here, and here must it remain.—New York Advertiser.

The Strength of Ice.

The following estimate of the strength of ice is given in Haswell's "Engineers' and Mechanics' Pocket-Book." "Ice two inches thick will bear infantry, four inches thick will bear cavalry, six inches thick will sustain heavy guns, eight inches thick will bear 10,000 pounds to the square foot.

Daniel Y. Husselman.

The subject of this sketch was born on the old Husselman farm on the Waterloo road one mile north of Auburn, January 15, 1848, and departed this life May 28, 1896. His parents were Samuel and Maria Husselman. His education was largely acquired in in the common schools and until his majority he continued to reside on the farm in the labors of which he took his full share. But an accident when he was a boy resulted in an injury which made it advisable to give up farm work, and in 1870 he began the study of law in the office of Judge R. Wes McBride in Waterloo. The next year he was admitted to the bar and began the practice of his chosen profession. November 23, 1870, he was united in marriage to Miss Mary J. Smith, who with their four children, Milo, Thomas, Dollie and Don survive him.

In May 1876 he was after some reluctance induced to accept the office of justice of the peace for that part of Union township, now Grant, there being a vacancy caused by the resignation of B. B. Long. But the office was not congenial to him and in April 1877 he resigned.

In December, 1880, he became a partner with James A. Barns, in the purchase of the AUBURN COURIER, and moved to Auburn the following May. The partnership continued a little over a year, when ill health, resulting from the injury before mentioned, compelled him to retire from the firm. He then resumed the practice of law. In November, 1882 he was elected clerk on the democratic ticket. He entered on his office Nov. 1, 1884, and for four years discharged its duties with marked ability and success. On retiring from office he again resumed the practice of the law, but later went into the manufacturing interests, first with the Auburn Foundry & Machine Works, and later with the Eagle Iron Works. On retiring from the last named enterprise he once more took up the practice of the law, in which he was still engaged when stricken with paralysis the 29th day of last December. The stroke was a severe one, but he obtained temporary relief by skillful treatment and loving care. But his bettered condition was only temporary and he gradually grew worse, and failed till the evening of May 29, at 10:05 o'clock when the spirit took its flight. The funeral at 2 o'clock Sunday, May 31, was largely attended for he had an extensive circle of friends and was a prominent member of the Masons and the Eastern Star and the A. O. U. W. Numbers of these orders and members of the bar from Garrett, Waterloo, Angola and Butler were in attendance and took part in the solemn ceremony. The funeral was at the residence and couducted by Rev. F. C. Colvin and Rev. J. K. Waltz. The procession, led by the Auburn Military Band, then marched to lovely Woodlawn, where, with the solemn ceremonial of the Masons, he was tenderly and lovingly laid to rest.

Mr. Husselman was a man of many admirable and lovable traits of character. He was large hearted and friendly to all, kind and loving in his family, true and constant in all his friendships. His genial nature and the prominence he had occupied, made his acquaintance wide, and a large circle in all walks of life will read with sorrow these words of his brief history.

To the Delegates.

Delegates to all the democratic conventions should be careful to make no mistakes. They should profit by the mistakes of other years. If unsuitable or unworthy men are nominated it is the fault of the delegates. If men are nominated all from one locality, or if nominated merely because they were promised a nomination by some would-be leader, or because they were in the "line of succession" planned by such leader; if men are nominated to suit suit some combine; if men are nominated to "knock out" some other man who is not in the combine; in any such cases, the nomination of a man who ought not to be nominated, is directly chargeable to the delegates. Delegates are not obliged to follow the advice or command of any man or set of men But they have done so, and their action and that of those who have manipulated them, has culminated in disaster to the party. Already there are indications that these combines and trades are being worked. Let us call a halt. Now is the time to throw bosses overboard, if we have any such, and not wait till after they have forced unwise nominations on us. Make no promises. Enter into no combines. Give us good men: always favor those who stand on their own merits and not on the favor of a slate. Gentlemen, delegates, the fate of the party is in your hands. Make no mistakes, and in November we shall record one of our old-time victories.

—Many of our readers will remember Mr. and Mrs. Van B. Perrine. The Fort Wayne Sentinel has the following to say:—Saturday night a thief stopped at the residence of Van Perrine, scared away his big watch dog, and stole everything there was in the big ice box which was on the back porch. Van had laid in a good big supply of all that makes life worth living and looked forward to Sunday as a day of great feasting and unalloyed joy. But when Sunday morning came he had to get out and hustle for enough stuff for breakfast, while the thief was enjoying the feasting and joy.

Normal Schools.

Since writing the article about Mr. Harrison's normal school yesterday, we have studied over the matter to see if a cause could not be assigned for the light attendance in these schools. And we find many reasons. There are too many of them. Six were planned; Auburn, St. Joe, Spencerville, Butler, Ashley and Newville. Auburn was to have three teachers, Ashley two, and each of the others one. This made a force of nine teachers, and of course all could not succeed. St. Joe and Auburn gave it up, and now five teachers re left at work. It will be hard work for the five to get support. Besides these five, there are many who go to the school at Angola, and at Valparaiso and the State Normal. The country schools closed in March, and many started away at once and not wishing to wait till our own normals began. And again, trustees engaged teachers quite early, and when the schools were all filled, there was less need for others to prepare for teaching. So our normal schools are left with few patrons, and each will be weak. This condition emphasizes what we have often said, that our county should have but one normal school, and let that be a strong one. It should be strong enough to support several teachers, each having in charge a special line of work.

Mosquito Remedy Wanted.

It is impossible to work some of the best gold mines in the world, on account of the mosquitoes. Some savages who live near them are mosquito proof, as their bodies are covered with the scales of leprosy. Strange to say, the mosquitoes will not touch them. But neither gold nor the fascination of civilization will tempt these lepers to work the mines.

A couple of 14-year-old rowdies in Reading recently threw eggs at two of the lady teachers of the public schools in that town, both the ladies being hit. Later the offenders were found out and being taken before the school board acknowledged their guilt. The Pros. Att'y was present and he let the boys off on their promise of good behavior, whereat the Reading Hustler reads the prosecutor a lecture, and pertinently remarks: "We can't understand why an outraged community shouldn't have right and justice accorded it, by punishing the perpetrators of such a damnable crime."

NICHOLAS II. AND EMPRESS ALEXANDRA FEODOROVNA.

CROWNED AMID POMP

CZAR NICHOLAS II. INVESTED WITH RUSSIA'S RULE.

Impressive Ceremonial, with Civic and Religious Forms—Dignitaries from Every Clime Present Their Felicitations.

Ceremonies at Moscow.

HE Emperor Nicholas Alexandrovitch, autocrat of all the Russias, and her majesty, the Empress Alexandra Feodorovna, were solemnly crowned Tuesday in the Cathedral of the Assumption, Moscow, with the utmost ceremony and in accordance with all the religious forms and ancient rites.

At 7 o'clock in the morning the ceremonies commenced with a salute of twenty-one cannon shots, marking the opening of the day, and at the same hour the bells in the Cathedral of the Assumption began ringing. Half an hour later the court dignitaries and distinguished persons who were to take part in the imperial cortege began to assemble in the halls of the palace and in the cathedral. The ladies were in court dress and the dignitaries were in full uniform.

At the moment the imperial cortege appeared on leaving the palace the bells in all the churches of Moscow were rung and the troops, in parade order, presented arms and rendered all military honors to the imperial party. Entering the cathedral, their majesties bowed the knee three times before a holy door and venerated the saintly images. They took their seats on the thrones of the Czars Michael Feodorovitch and John III. The archbishops, archimandrites and the officiating clergy placed themselves in two ranks between the estrade of the throne and the holy door, and the choirs chanted the psalm "Miserieordiam et Judicium Cantabo Tibi, Domine."

CROWNING OF THE CZAR.

IMPERIAL INSIGNIA.

The Coronation.

The ceremony of the coronation and anointment was then accomplished. The metropolitan of St. Petersburg mounted the steps of the throne, placed himself in front of the Emperor and invited his majesty to make, before his faithful subjects, and in a loud voice, his profession of orthodox faith and presented him with the open book from which the Emperor recited the symbol of the faith. After this the metropolitan of St. Petersburg pronounced: "Gratia Spiritus, sancti sit semper tecum. Amen."

The Emperor arose, and, taking off the collar of the Order of St. Andrew, ordered that the imperial mantle, with the collar, in diamonds, of that order, be presented to him. They were presented on cushions by the metropolitans of St. Petersburg and Kieff, who also assisted his majesty to put on the mantle. The metropolitan of St. Petersburg then pronounced the words: "In nomine patris et filii et spiritus sancti. Amen."

The monarch then called upon her majesty the Empress Alexandra Feodorovna to approach, and she knelt before him on a velvet cushion richly embroidered with gold. His majesty thereupon lifted the crown from his own head and touched with it the forehead of the Empress. He then replaced the crown upon his own head. His majesty afterward took up the crown of the Empress and placed it on the head of her majesty.

Her majesty's imperial mantle and the collar of the Order of St. Andrew were next presented with the same ceremony. This done, her majesty took her seat on the throne, while the Emperor again took the scepter in his right hand and the globe in his left. The archdeacon next proclaimed the imperial title in extenso and intoned the verses: "Domine, salvum fac imperatorem," and "Domine, salvam fac imperatricem," followed by the "Ad multos annos," which the choir repeated three times.

After the chanting the bells of the cathedral and of all the other sacred edifices throughout Moscow were rung and a salute of 101 cannon shots was fired. The metropolitan and all present knelt and, in the name of the nation, offered up prayers to the Almighty.

The Imperial Manifesto.

The Czar's manifesto, issued upon the occasion of his coronation, remits all arrears of taxation in European Russia and Poland, reduces the land tax by one-half for ten years and remits or reduces all fines, quashes all petty convictions involving imprisonment or fines up to 300 rubles, with the exception of persons sentenced for robbery, embezzlement, usury, extortion, fraudulent bankruptcy or offenses against honor.

The manifesto prescribes that all exiles in Siberia, after twelve years' exile in the remoter parts, be, after ten years, allowed to choose their place of residence, except in capital cities and governments, but their civil rights will not be restored. Exiled criminals have a third of their sentences remitted, life sentences are commuted to twenty years and many other punishments are lightened.

PRESBYTERIANS MEET.

One Hundred and Eighth General Assembly Held at Saratoga.

The one hundred and eighth general assembly of the Northern Presbyterian Church opened at Saratoga, N. Y., in the First Presbyterian Church, where so many previous assemblies have met. The opening sermon was delivered by Rev. Dr Robert Russell Booth, of New York, the retiring moderator, on the subject of "Christian Union and Denominational Loyalty." The text was taken from the gospel of St. John xvii., 20 and 21. In closing, Dr. Booth spoke of the misunderstandings and conflicts which have divided the church and hindered its work. He deprecated any work or act which might aggravate present troubles, and said: "It may be a dream; it may be a delusion; but, speaking, as it were, for the last time in such a place of public authority, I appeal to the sound Christian sense of the venerable assembly to take some proper measures to ascertain what it is that divides us, and what is required for the abatement of strife and a reconciliation of parties at variance."

REV. DR. J. L. WITHROW.

The first important business transacted was the election of a moderator. Dr Francis C. Monfort, of Cincinnati; Dr David R. Breed, of Pittsburg, and Dr. John L. Withrow, of Chicago, were nominated. The result of the ballot was: Withrow, 315; Breed, 163; Monfort, 84. The election was then made unanimous.

The usual reports were presented. The report of the committee on denominational missionary periodical showed successful operation during the year in spite of a slight decrease in circulation. A statement of the relations between the individual societies and the church was presented, in which it was asserted: "This assembly recognizes as under the jurisdiction of the church all young people's religious organizations of every name which are to be found within its churches or composed of the members of its churches. In general these societies are to be organized and to work in conformity with the historic portion of the church, as expressed by her standards and interpreted by her courts."

A report which called forth a warm discussion related to Sabbath observance, and was presented by Elder William R. Worrell, of New York. The report denounced all work on Sunday, various theories of individual liberty, excursions, ball games, bicycle riding, lax views of the Sabbath, social entertainment and the Sunday newspaper. Christian people were scored for their lax observance of Sunday. The resolution, which was adopted, reaffirmed former deliverances as to the perpetual binding obligation of the Sabbath.

COLISEUM NEARLY READY.

Everything Completed Save Painting and Putting in Chairs.

In a week's time the Chicago Coliseum where the Democratic convention is to be held, will be practically finished. Seventy-five painters are at work, and, with the exception of mounting and distributing the 10,000 chairs, theirs is almost the only uncompleted task about the building. The arena in the center of the building, the dimensions of which are 150 x450 feet, will be merely leveled off for Buffalo Bill's purposes. A flooring in sections has been constructed and can be put in place in a few hours. For the national Democratic convention the building will be divided into two sections by the means of a partition hung with bunting and national emblems. The convention hall will occupy the northern half of the building. There will be seating room for 14,000 persons, and the wide promenade gallery running around the building can either be used as such or be occupied by seats. The southern half of the building will be devoted to lobby rooms and divided into committee rooms, retiring quarters, a place for refreshments, etc.

Gen. John Coffey, one of the larges and wealthiest planters in Alabama, died at his home in Winnville, Ala., aged 84 years. He was a distinguished man in his day, ranking as brigadier general of militia previous to the Mexican war, which he entered as colonel. His death was due to paralysis and old age.

A car on the Agate avenue line of the Tramway company at Denver got out of the control of the motorman near midnight, jumped the track at a curve when going down hill at a high speed and turned over. There were seventy-four passengers on the car a dozen of whom were injured.

Birds in Place of Dogs.

In Venezuela and British Guiana lives a kind of crane, called the agami, which the natives tame and employ in many of the tasks for which dogs are trained in other parts of the world. The birds, it is said, will watch and care for flocks of sheep or of poultry as well as shepherd dogs would do.

Lightning Tubes.

At a recent meeting of the Geological Society in London Professor Ramsay and Mr. Eccles exhibited some "lightning tubes" found by them on the summit of the Riffelhorn, a sharp, rocky peak near the celebrated Matterhorn in Switzerland. The tubes were about one-tenth of an inch in diameter, and lined with a thin film of glass, black or dark brown in color, and formed by the melting of some of the constituents of the rock as the lightning penetrated it.

Fees and Clover.

A striking instance of the practical usefulness of a knowledge of entomology was cited in a paper read at a recent meeting of men of science in Philadelphia. Red clover was imported into a British colony from the mother country, but to the great disappointment of the farmers it did not thrive. Then the entomologists told the farmers what the matter was; they had neglected to import bumblebees with the clover. The bumblebee, with its long proboscis, was the only insect that could reach the honey in the red clover heads, and therefore the only one that would fertilize the flowers.

Saved by Antitoxin.

A report on the results of the use of antitoxin treatment of diphtheria in the hospitals of London during the year 1895 has recently been published. During the first ten months of 1894, previous to the introduction of antitoxin, 3,042 cases of diphtheria were treated in these hospitals, and 902 of the patients died, the death rate being 29.6 per cent. During 1895 3,259 cases were treated and 796 patients died, the death rate being reduced to 22.5 per cent. This reduction is ascribed to the new treatment, and antitoxin is, accordingly, credited with having saved 250 lives in London last year.

The Oldest Man.

The oldest man now living in the United States is said to be Alexander Freeman, an inmate of the Sailor's Snug Harbor on Staten Island. He was born Dec. 22, 1786, and will, accordingly, have lived 110 years next Christmas. Next in age to Freeman is William Haines, who fought under General Jackson at New Orleans. He lives in the St. Louis Memorial Home, and is said to be 107 years old. The age of Davis Parks, of Fowler, Mich., is given as 106 years, and Percy Dyer, of Belvidere, Ill., and Andrew F. McKee, of Burlington, Kan., are said to be each 104 years of age. All but one of these men are enrolled as veterans of the war of 1812.

Absorbing Heat.

An interesting instance of the application, on a large scale, of the principle that black-colored substances readily absorb the heat of the sun, is mentioned by Mr. R. L. Fulton in Science. The toll-road from Truckee to Lake Tahoe, Cal., is closed early in winter by the immense snowfall, which in places buries the road to a depth of twenty or thirty feet. At the beginning of spring the owner of the line has black dirt scattered along on the surface of the snow, where he knows that his hidden road runs. The layer of dirt is not made so thick as completely to cut off the sunlight from the snow. The effect is described as wonderful. In a short time a long depression is formed in the snow, and "days before the ground is clear on either side the stages are running on bare ground."

Magnetic Photographs.

Prof. John S. McKay, of Brooklyn, describes, in the Scientific American, a process of making, with the aid of a magnet, shadow photographs resembling those produced by the action of the X rays. Either an electro-magnet or a permanent magnet will answer the purpose. Place a key, or other iron or steel object, upon the senstive film of an ordinary photographic plate; then bring the poles of the magnet near the other side of the plate and keep them there for five minutes or more. Upon developing the plate a shadow picture of the key, or other object, as sharp and well defined as any of the X ray pictures, will be found upon it. By this method only iron or steel, or other paramagnetic substances, can be photographed. But if the sensitive side of the plate is turned toward the magnetic poles, and a disk of iron nearly as large as the plate is placed on the other side, then shadow pictures of any non-magnetic objects, placed upon the sensitive film facing the magnet, may be obtained. The operations are, of course, conducted in a dark room. With an electro-magnet capable of lifting a weight of 100 pounds Professor McKay has made such pictures through two inches of interposed wood. He has also obtained shadow pictures with a compound steel magnet weighing but little more than a pound.

Personal Appearance in Business.

As a well-known banker alighted from his carriage in Wall street the other day an old merchant turned to your correspondent and said: "I remember the time when a man's credit would have suffered if a business man came to his office in a carriage. In those days one was looked upon with suspicion if he carried a cane, unless he was actually lame. A man would have had difficulty in aranging a loan at his banker's if he wore a mustache, as it was considered the appendage of a 'sport.' I well remember that when, as a young man, I began to cultivate the growth of hair on my upper lip, my employer gave me a friendly warning. Yet one could then go to business in what is now evening dress, and yet be considered as properly, though elegantly, attired. Now a man would be hooted at in the streets if he should wear his evening dress in the daytime. But times have changed greatly, or rather fashion has, for human nature is the same. After a long business career my deliberate judgment is that it pays to wear good clothes, fashionably made. I remember when as a boy I began my business career at $6 a week. I was sent on an errand to the swell tailor's establishment of the city. After I had done my errand the tailor looked me over, and, noticing my country-made clothes, said to me that I ought to order a new suit. I explained to him my financial condition, when he said to me kindly, 'My boy, whatever it might cost, it would be the best business investment you could make. With fashionably cut garments on, your own confidence and self-esteem will be enhanced, and other people will think better of you.' And he generously offered to make me a suit and let me pay for it whenever I could, or not at all. He was right. It was as good an investment as I could have made, for I believe the habit it gave me of always wearing good clothes helped me immensely in my business career. I traded with that tailor for over thirty years."—New York correspondence of the Philadelphia Ledger.

RAILROADING IN OLD DAYS.

Conditions Have Changed Since the First Locomotives Were Built.

"Yes, I will admit that railroading now is not what it used to be in the '60s. We have had great changes and improvements in the past thirty years, and while it has all been for the best, still I often think that the life of a railway man is not nearly so pleasant now as it was in the olden times." The speaker was an old Pennsylvania railroad conductor, who has seen years of service, not only on the greatest road on earth, but on many other lines as well. When pressed for an explanation of the meaning of his opening remarks he began by making the statement that under "present systems of operating great trunk lines the men in charge of the trains have become mere automatons, following day by day the fixed, inexorable lines of law laid down in the book of rules. When a train starts out it is expected to run through to destination without any delay, and the work of each member of the crew is the same every day unless the clocklike rules of operation should be interfered with by a wreck. The engineer knows his duty and has his orders constantly before him, and he is guided along the way by the signal indications which are partly automatic and partly guided by human intelligence in the method of their indications. From beginning to end of the trip the predominant desire and expectation of the management as well as the crew is to get over the road on schedule time, which means that the wheels must be kept moving all the time, and only stopped at the right place, according to the unvarying requirements of the rules of the operating department.

"How different it used to be in the good old days before the era of double, triple and quadruple tracks. In the summer days when the heat was oppressive we used to hustle to get to some shady passing place in the mountains, where cool springs bubbled out from under the limestone ledges and trout basked in the crystal pools. Arrived at the place we only knew that our orders required us to wait for No. —, and if that train was an hour or two hours late it was all the better, we thought, and a good engineer, according to our ideas, was the man who could make an hour of time so that no matter how the train we were to meet was running we could have an hour at the spring. Fishing poles, shotguns and rifles were carried in the cabin cars in those days, and often while waiting on a belated train which had the right of way we caught enough fish or killed enough squirrels or grouse to furnish us with a delightful meal. I never pass a certain spring on my regular trip that I do not think of the days of yore, when before these few remaining hairs were gray I enjoyed the delay of an hour or more at that delightful spot. Now all is hustle and 'get up and get.' Big engines that never stall, fixed, unalterable laws, four tracks that preclude all possibility of delay, and so many trains that we must be constantly watching for signals and reading orders. Yes, I tell you, it is all different, and a cold practicality with its dull and dreary monotony has robbed railroading of most of its former attractions.—Pittsburg Post.

A Household Word Forgotten.

The Washington correspondent of the Chicago Times relates a laughable incident in the career of Mr. Tarsney, of Missouri, who was until lately a member of Congress from that State, but was unseated by the House. The occurrence, it should be explained, took place some years ago, when Mr. Tarsney was not so well known as he is at present.

It was in the midst of a political campaign, and Mr. Tarsney, who had gone to New York State in the service of his party, was announced to speak in a country town. The chairman of the meeting, a local celebrity, was properly minded to give the gentleman from Missouri a handsome reception.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he said, "we have with us to-night one of the greatest statesmen of the great West, an orator famed throughout the Mississippi Valley, a gentleman whose name is to you a household word. Permit me to introduce to you Mr.—Mr.—"

Here the flow of his eloquence was checked, and leaning toward the orator of the evening, he whispered:

"What did you say your name was?"

"Tarsney, of Missouri," whispered the orator.

"Fellow-citizens," resumed the Chairman, "it is my proud pleasure to introduce to you Mr. Larceny, of Missouri."

Some people spend so much time telling what they intend to do that they have no time left to do anything else.

Wright—Thought you were out starring. Didn't I hear you say something last season about starting out and having the whole stage to yourself for once in your life? "If your're a good boy,"—the parent began. But the young man interrupted: "Excuse me, but I know what you are going to say. I have a new proposition to offer. AN INVITATION.

It Gives Us Pleasure to Publish the following Announcement.

All women suffering from any form of illness peculiar to their sex are requested to communicate promptly with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. All letters are received, opened, read and answered by women only. A woman can freely talk of her private illness to a woman; thus has been established the eternal confidence between Mrs. Pinkham and the women of America.

This confidence has induced more than 100,000 women to write Mrs. Pinkham for advice during the last few months.

Think what a volume of experience she has to draw from! No physician living ever treated so many cases of female ills, and from this vast experience surely it is more than possible she has gained the very knowledge that will help your case.

She is glad to have you write or call upon her. You will find her a woman full of sympathy, with a great desire to assist those who are sick. If her medicine is not what you need, she will frankly tell you so, and there are nine chances out of ten that she will tell you exactly what to do for relief. She asks nothing in return except your good will, and her advice has relieved thousands.

Surely, any ailing woman, rich or poor, is very foolish if she does not take advantage of this generous offer of assistance.

Never in the history of medicine has the demand for one particular remedy for female diseases equalled that attained by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and never in the history of Mrs. Pinkham's wonderful Compound has the demand for it been so great as it is to-day.

QUEER IOWA COLONY.

COMMUNISTIC EXPERIMENT IN THE HAWKEYE STATE.

The "True Inspirationists"—All Property Held in Common—Industrial, Moral and Literary Education—All Work as Directed by Those in Charge.

Members May Leave at Will.

The society or colony of "True Inspirationists" in Iowa County, Iowa, affords a noteworthy and successful example of those experimental organizations that have striven to solve religious and economic problems by a communal life. The Iowa "Inspirationists," about 1,800 in number, occupy 25,000 acres of land in Amana and adjacent townships, and are incorporated under the laws of Iowa.

AN AMANA HOTEL.

The founder of the sect was E. L. Gruber, of Wurtemberg, Germany, born in 1664. He was assisted by John F. Rock, of the same country, and the sect was formally established in Hessen, Germany, about 1714. There the colony existed without making much advance, until Christian Metz, a man of much mental energy, assumed the leadership, and some time prior to 1854 transplanted the colony from Germany to Ebenezer, Erie County, N. Y. In 1854 Metz induced the colony to sell its property to Ebenezer and acquire land in Amana, Iowa, the present location of the same. Metz died in 1857, and the spiritual and temporal guidance of the sect fell to Barbara Landman, a woman of unusual abilities and strong spiritual fervor. She maintained her ascendency until she died, and since then trustees have administered affairs, no one having as yet claimed to be endowed with direct inspiration from God on spiritual matters.

SOUTH AMANA.

FLOURING MILL.

The estate of the society consists of land severally classed in three grades: Bluffs or grazing land, rich bottom farm lands, and timber tracts. The lands adapted to tillage are highly cultivated.

The people do not dwell in separate farms, but in eight hamlets, called, respectively, Amana, South, West, East, High, Middle, New South Amana and Homestead. The houses are of wood, and one and one-and-a-half stories high, unpainted, but scrupulously neat. Each village has church and schoolhouse, a comon cellar, and one or more kitchens and dining-rooms, also in common, where men and women dine separately. There are also kindergartens, where small children are kept while their mothers are in the fields, they frequently choosing to work there with the men.

The schools are good, and industrial goes hand in hand with intellectual and moral education. Little boys solemnly sit and knit, and trades are taught.

The work is regulated by the Board of Trustees and by the village boards, which assemble nightly to discuss the events of the day and plan the operations of the morrow. Each member, being assigned his specified duty, is notified, and accepts the notification without a thought of objection. The women work with the men in the fields, not always from necessity, but rather from preference.

WOOLEN MILL, MIDDLE AMANA.

The amusements of the people are not of a demonstrative kind. Dancing is strictly prohibited as immoral and frivolous. Church meetings take the place of lighter social convivialities, while the national holidays and the special observances of the colony afford general opportunity for a mild indulgence in pleasure. The churches are open every evening for prayer, and are usually largely attended. The regular church services are of a very simple nature, consisting of prayer, song, reading the Scriptures, and a brief exhortation by one of the elders.

There is a commercial and industrial side to the community which gives it great importance and wide celebrity in the West. It was not the idea of the founders of the colony to limit it to a merely agricultural settlement. Their plan embraced the production of all the things needed in the life of the community. They were ambitious to make it a thoroughly independent aggregation of people. For this purpose they early founded industries demanded by their most pressing necessities. Some of these have flourished, and, in addition to supplying the specific needs of the colony, are a source of large revenue. The great industry of the Inspirationists centers in the woolen and print mills. There are two large woolen mills, the one at Amana proper having four complete sets of machinery—four "mules and jacks," to use the technical phrase. At Middle Amana there is a mill of equal capacity. Both of these mills are run to their full capacity all the year—the wool being chiefly bought in Texas by agents of the society, and the flannels, blankets and yarns produced are of a concededly high quality. The print works at Amana proper is where the famous "colony blue" is spun—a color which distinguishes the dress of the society, and which in the name of the goods has found its way to the merchants' counters all over the country. It is a staple article of trade in the dry-goods business in the West, and purchasers pay more for it in the confident faith that they are buying just what the goods are represented to be. There are several large flouring mills, employing the modern roller process, a large machine shop, and the various minor trades are represented by artisans who are thoroughly equipped with machinery and tools.

This is not an exclusive people. While in a sense they separate themselves from the world, they have a welcome ready for all who visit them, and membership in the society is not difficult to obtain. Any one who is willing to subscribe to their rules, who is sincere in his profession of faith, and who will attest to it by casting his property into the common fund, may take up life among them upon probation, and, if he prove worthy, attain to fellowship. This means food and clothing, abundance when well, care when ill, shelter and protection from want in old age. At any time a member may withdraw if he has a disposition to do so, and may take from the common fund what he put into it, or the heirs of a member may do so.

TALENTED DOG.

Albany, N. Y., Canine Can Blow a Trumpet.

There's a dog in Albany, N. Y., who can play the trumpet—that is to say, he can blow two or three harmonious notes from a small brass horn—and wonderfully funny he looks when he sits on his haunches blowing away for dear life. The dog's name is Mascot, and he's the queerest genius alive.

DOG PLAYS A HORN.

Don't Misjudge His Strength.

Do not underestimate the strength of your competitor. He may be a better buyer than you. His lieutenants may be better skilled in mercantile tactics. His capital may be more abundant, and therefore can be well turned over at less profit. If you want to be victorious there must be no sleeping at your post. Throw out your skirmish lines of good values and honest modern methods. Let it be a matter of positive knowledge with every member of your community that your store is on the advance every season. If your store is renowned for everything new and good, if your prices are always right and your methods aggressive and at the same time honorable, victory will be yours.

Kitty—I won't let them repair my wheel again. They charged me a dollar for simply sticking my tire on. Tom—For simply sticking it on? Kitty—Yes. Tom—By Jove! that was simply sticking it on!—Pittsburg Dispatch.

WONDERFUL ARTESIAN WELLS.

Brule County, North Dakota, Stands Unique in the World.

Brule County, South Dakota, is becoming one of the wonder regions of the West because of the development of a remarkable artesian well system and the application of the power derived from the unusual pressure and regularity of flow of water from these wells. The county contains two of the greatest artesian wells in the world, and one of them, at Chamberlain, the county seat, operates the only electrical light and power plant driven by artesian well power on this continent. The plant furnishes light for the whole city, for both public and private purposes, and more than half the power of the well is running to waste because so far no use has been found for it.

In no other part of the West, or, it is said, in the world, has an artesian well basin been found that furnishes water of such uniform pressure and great volume as in Brule County. Wells have been sunk in every part of the county, of a depth averaging 1,000 feet, which yield a uniform flow of water at the surface of about 1,000 gallons a minute. An idea of the value of this supply of water for irrigation purposes is had from the fact that a flow of 800 gallons of water a minute will cover a full section of land, 640 acres, with one inch of water every fifteen days. Each well, it has been found, will force a steady stream of water through fifteen miles of irrigating ditches, the ditches being about the size of a small creek. The water is pure as spring water, and of a temperature, varying between 70 and 75 degrees.

The well at Chamberlain is the largest in the county. It is 675 feet deep and 8 inches in diameter, and the flow of water is 4,430 gallons a minute at a pressure of 110 pounds to the square inch, affording energy equal to 100-horse power constantly exerted. The water spouts up from the mouth of the well in a solid eight-inch column to a height of 12½ feet above the opening. Confined by a nozzle 2¼ inches in diameter the water shoots up in a solid column to a height of 162 feet. After furnishing power for the electric light plant the water runs away in a considerable creek through the city, and empties into the Missouri River. For running the electric plant the water is reduced to a stream about three inches in diameter, which is thrown against the buckets of a water wheel. The water wheel is mounted on a shaft carrying a big driving wheel, which is belted to the dynamo.

THE BIG WELL AT CHAMBERLAIN.

During the past two years individual farmers have sunk wells with equal success, and now wells are being constructed in every part of the country. More than 10,000 acres will be irrigated this year by plants now under construction. Already the country has 300 miles of running streams in irrigation ditches and numerous lakes, and the whole face of the country has been changed.

AN EARLESS BOY.

Also He Has a Fish Mouth and No Chin—Freak for Museums.

A freak of nature in the shape of a 16-year-old boy without ears has been discovered at East Brady, a little town on the Allegheny River. The lad is Frank Collins. Until recently he was an inmate of the Duncanville poor house. For several years museum managers have been after him, but the poor authorities refuse to allow him to be exhibited. As he is now over 16 they think he will not be ill-treated and have decided to "rent" him until he is of age.

In addition to having no ears, he has a fish mouth and is deaf and dumb. The sides of his head are smooth except where the lobe of the ear should be. At this spot there is a slight growth that projects above the side of the head. His forehead is low. The top of the head slopes until it reaches the back of the cranium. He has little or no chin and his mouth projects to such an extent that it has the appearance of the mouth of a fish. His head is covered with a sparse growth of thin hair. The remainder of the lad's body is perfect. His hands and feet are very small.

HE HATH NO EARS TO HEAR.

"I thought her father was so enraged over the elopement that he would never forgive them, and now he has given them a brand new bicycle apiece." "Of different makes, mind you. They will be fighting like cats and dogs before a week."—Indianapolis Journal.

THE PACE THAT KILLS

Fast Work and Fast Eating Make Three Score Years and Ten a Ripe Old Age These Days.

From the Cincinnati Enquirer.

The American people live too fast, eat too fast and drink too fast. This has brought upon many of us a train of nervous and stomach disorders that are very difficult to manage. Investigation and chemical analysis to discover such compounds as will help those suffering from such ills has resulted in the discovery of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, which has taken very high rank as a specific remedy.

H. P. Owens, a traveling man thirty years of age, who is well known in this community and generally liked because he is a bright, energetic young fellow, resides with his mother at 335 Central avenue, Cincinnati, Ohio. He has been a victim of dyspepsia which took the form of continuous constipation, and, strangely enough, his mother suffered from the same trouble. Mr. Owens testified to the merits of Pink Pills in a most enthusiastic way, and said to the Enquirer reporter:

"I am glad to say anything I can for Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, because they did me great good and other people ought to know of their virtues as a medicine in stomach troubles. It was some time ago when I felt a heavy feeling in my stomach and I grew very constipated. I did not consult a doctor, but having heard of the Pink Pills I bought a box of them. In two or three days the heavy feeling in my stomach disappeared and my bowels were regular. I did not have to use more than a box of them before I was well. Since that time I have only occasionally been troubled with constipation and I never get worried, because I know just what to do. Mother was also troubled with indigestion and the Pink Pills did the same for her they did for me—cured her, didn't they mother?"

When appealed to Mrs. Owens answered: "That is right. I found that it was a great medicine, so easy to take and so quick and lasting in its results."

Mr. Owens continued: "I believe that these pills are also good for nervousness. When I had my stomach trouble I was also quite nervous and that disappeared with the dyspepsia. The Pink Pills were all that is claimed for them. You can make any use of this testimonial that you see fit."

Mrs. Owens is quite as enthusiastic as her son about the Pink Pills and her host of lady friends can verify her good opinion of this wonderful remedy if they feel disposed to do so at any time. Where the testimony is so general and unanimous as to the excellencies of Pink Pills as the Enquirer has found it to be there is certainly good reason to believe all the good things said—about the safe and simple remedy.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People contain all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., at 50c per box, or six boxes for $2.50.

"Like an Ant-Bed."

A countryman, on his first visit to a large city, was shown over the markets. "Where do you find enough people to eat all this stuff?" was the exclamation of surprise.

His companion led him through several thronged streets. "How do you manage to feed all these men women and children?" asked the puzzled man.

But an Australian aboriginal used a more striking expression to indicate his amazement at the busy throngs of London. He had been brought to England by a squatter from Queensland, who took him to London on a very busy day. Crowds were passing to and from the exchange and banks, and the squatter and his charge were obliged to wait to cross the street.

"Jacky," said the squatter, "what do you think of this place?"

"Why, master, it is like an ant-bed!" exclaimed the surprised black.

When the Summer Breeze

Blows through the trees, most of us who can set off for a country jaunt. Fewer cross the Atlantic. Whether it is business or pleasure calls one from home, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the best accompaniment of a voyage or an outing. Yachtsmen, sea captains, commercial travelers and emigrants concur in this opinion. The Bitters is unrivaled for bilious, malarial, dyspeptic or liver disorder.

The Palm.

One of the peculiarities of the cocoanut palm is that it never stands upright. A Malayan saying has it that: "He who has looked upon a dead monkey; he who has found the nest of a paddy bird; he who has beheld a straight cocoanut palm, or has fathomed the deceitful heart of a woman, will live forever."

BATTLE AX

BIG AND GOOD.
Battle Ax PLUG
Sometimes quality is sacrificed in the effort to give big quantity for little money.
No doubt about that.
But once in a while it isn't.
For instance, there's "BATTLE AX."
The piece is bigger than you ever saw before for 5 cents. And the quality is, as many a man has said, "mighty good."
There's no guess work in this statement.
It is just a plain fact.
You can prove it by investing 5 cents in "BATTLE AX."

To develop muscle,

if that is what you're doing the washing for, perhaps the old way of washing with soap—rubbing the clothes up and down over a board—may be pretty good. It can't be healthy, though, to breathe that tainted, fetid steam, and you'd better take your exercise in ways that are pleasanter.

But if you're washing clothes to get them clean, and want to do this disagreeable work easily, quickly, and safely—do it with Pearline. And one of the strongest points about Pearline's washing is its saving—its economy.

Millions NOW USE Pearline

GOOD LOOKS or PAIN

When you see a "good-looking" woman, you nearly always see a healthy woman. Beauty is really health. It is the attractiveness of face and form that comes naturally when weakness and pain are absent. Sickness and pain drive attractiveness away.

It is difficult to make women believe their tortures can be cured at home. The popular belief is that they must suffer on and on—or go to a physician, and reveal secrets that he ought not to know.

Nine-tenths of women's troubles can be cured without physician's aid.

is a remedy that stops the drain on the system. It stops the pains that drag and pull at the organs of womanhood. It makes them strong and well. It makes them attractive by making them healthy. Price $1 per bottle.

TICKLED.

THE DOG CROP REPORTER.

When Assessor Saxton had got half way through his work this spring, the appalling prospect dawned on him, that the dog crop of 1896, in Auburn and Union township would be a flat failure. He expected to see to the report of the Weather Bureau put it at

Acreage - - - -	100 per cent
Yield - - - -	17½ per cent

These gloomy forebodings, however have not been verified. Under the influence of these moonlight nights we feel free to inform our readers, that dog yield in this section, will be a normal one. Hence our dog crop reporter is tickled.

There is a moral in this that should not be lost. We sometime look over the fields of wheat in the spring, and note their haggard appearance. Then we see the fruit blossoms, falling off by the million, and we feel blue. In fact, some crops, belonging to some one, are lost every year. Yet when the summer is ended, we somehow, find that providence has not entirely forsaken us, and that we still have enough to get us through the winter. And after all is not that the main thing? So let us take comfort from the report of the dog crop, and be happy.

Commencement.

It pleases the COURIER to note the constant and increasing interest our people take in our commencement exercises. There is always a good attendance and a deep concern in making it a success. It is always a success of course for there is no weak spot in Auburn's school system or its school work and there is no weak place in the loyalty of our people to school interests. They have always realized that so much of our taxes as go to the educating of our youth bring us better and more satisfactory results, than the taxes that go to support criminals in luxurious illness in our jail, or in fact almost any other expense that has to be borne by the tax payers. Last evening and the evening before both brought out a good attendance and both the common school exercises and those of the High school were brilliant successes in every way. Few people ever saw as excellent public exercises by children of that age as was given by the Grammar School Tuesday evening. But for solid merit no graduating exercises we have ever had has given better satisfaction and showed a higher degree of merit. On this occasion as the evening before the music was excellent. The good opinion won by the Mandolin and Guitar club was also earned Wednesday night by the orchestra.

The prayer was by Mr. Walts and then followed with great promptness the orations by the class. The class motto "On the Shore, the Ocean before Us," was hung above and across the front of the stage. The letters were made of flowers and leaves of white syringas, and were very tasty. Mr. Harrison's remarks on presenting the diplomas were the best we ever heard on such an occasion. It was an example of fervid yet dignified eloqence that was a credit both to the head and the heart of the speaker and showed the wonderful possibilities of the grand English tongue. After the diplomas were given came the rewards of merit. Henry J. Harris received the $10 in gold for the highest merit as shown by his class record during the senior year and Effie Hines received the second prize, $5 in gold for the second best record for the same time. But we are led to believe the class was a hard working body of students. Their orations showed it.

Birthday Gathering.

There were rumors afloat a week or so ago, that Uncle J. J. Gunsenhouser was dead. We could not credit it, though he is at a ripe old age. On the contrary, his friends came in on Thursday, May 28, to help him celebrate his 90th birthday. That was his age then while his life companion was a little over 88. A number of the neighbors gathered in and all had a good visit and enjoyed a fine dinner. The old folks took dinner in the house, while the younger ones enjoyed a similar feast in the open air. It might be noted that besides himself and wife there were present six neighbors, each of whom was over 72 years old.

Looks Like a Fraud.

Goshen Democrat.

For the past three years the agent of what was known as the Folz Importing Co., doing business at No. 92 Market street, Chicago, has been soliciting orders for wines and liquors in this city. The customers of the concern included some of the leading people of the town and the accounts aggregate several thousand dollars. The liquors were sold to private parties and were shipped in neat yet deceptive cases. The bills were promptly paid to the agent and no more was thought of the matter. Yesterday the Goshen customers all received notices from The Folz Importing Co. that it had assigned its business to Herman Nathan & Co., No. 103 East Lake street, Chicago. In the same envelope was a statement of account covering all the goods shipped here. This would indicate that proper credits have not been given and that the Goshen patrons will be called upon to pay the amounts over again.

The customers here are very indignant over the matter. They do not care to contest the claims in court, for such a move would mean exposure and many of them do not care to have it known that they have received private packages of liquor regularly for a number of years.

It looks like a blackmailing scheme on the face of it and the Goshenites would be very foolish to pay the accounts a second time. The agent of the firm was introduced by a prominent business man and this gentleman feels greatly cut up over the turn things have taken.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

The Nail Trust.

The Chicago Record an independent republican paper, is not afraid to tell some truths in regard to the way the protected trusts take advantage of laws made on purpose to help them increase their profits. We lately published an extract from it, but it has been denied and we here give the item entire as it appeared in that paper May 15.

"The nail trust is a combination of recent origin. It was formed in May last. Since that time the wholesale prices at the mills have been advanced from 70 cents to $2.30 for cut nails and from 85 cents to $2.55 for wire nails. The raw material costs but little more than it did a year ago. The following table shows the prices for the early part of May of this year and last:

	1895.	1896.	Inc. P. C.
Bessemer pig iron	$11.00	$13.00	18
Cut nails, per keg	.70	2.30	228
Wire nails, per keg	.85	2.55	200

While the price of nails to American purchasers in $2.30 and $2.55 a keg the information is brought out by the Pittsburg Commercial Gazette that nails are sold to foreign purchasers at prices so much lower that it pays to ship nails to Germany and back again in order to secure the privilege of buying at the foreigner's price. American nails which bring $2.55 a keg in the American market were sold to exporters for $1.45. It cost 20 cents to send them across the Atlantic and 20 cents to return them. They were landed back in America at $1.85 a keg, the New York firm which tried the scheme making the difference between that sum and the price of the nails to American customers. As the nails were made by American factories and the bulk had not been broken on the other side, no tariff was collected on them when they were brought back.

Wire nails in the German markets are quoted at $1.54 to $1.60 at mills. Freight to the seaport would make them higher there. By selling nails here at $1.45 a keg, therefore, it is seen that the American manufacturers are able to compete with German mills on their own soil. The effect of a protective tariff on nails in this country, therefore, is simply to give the nail trust the opportunity of charging American about $1 a keg more than the trust charges foreign customers for those same nails.

Aluminum.

In Jan., 1894, the Carnegie works at Homestead, Pa., tried the experiment of rolling 9-inch beams of aluminum for government vessels. The metal was heated enough to char a pine board and then rolled. It broke however, and the experiment was postponed. Early in 1894 Commander Montreuil of the French expedition into Central Africa took with him a flat-bottomed ferry boat, constructed of aluminum. It weighed only 2,000 pounds, but had a capacity of 15 tons. The same year a second-class torpedo boat, built of aluminum with a mixture of 6 per cent copper, was constructed for the French government by Yarrow & Co. of England. The cost of the alloy was from 70 cents to $1.20 a pound, being about the cost of steel for the purpose. Aluminum was largely used in the upper plates of the Yacht Defender, built by the Herreshoffs at Bristol, R. I., much lightening the upper part of the hull. These plates were made in Pittsburgh, Pa., and were from 5-16 to 3-8 of an inch thick, the longest being 18 feet, and the widest 38 1-2 inches. The heaviest plate weighed 200 pounds, while a like plate of Tobin bronze would weigh 600, and the entire saving in weight on the boat was about 5 tons. In Aug., '95, the manufacture of aluminum from bauxite by electrolysis was tested at Niagara Falls by the use of the new dynamos there. The electric current was carried through the pulverized oxide for twenty-four hours, and the separated metal accumulated at the carbon-lined bottoms of the pots, and was ladled out like lead heated to a red heat, but was whiter than silver on cooling. The capacity of these works was said to be about 5,000 pounds of pure aluminum a day, worth 50 cents a pound. During 1894—95 the metal has been used for military accoutrements and many kinds of domestic utensils. It has also been substited for silver, as not tarnishing, in silvergilding for sign-painting and bookbinding. The U. S. Geological Survey reports the production of aluminum in 1894 to have been 550,000 pounds valued at $316,255, as compared with 239,629 pounds, valued at $266,903 in 1893; and 259,885 pounds, valued at $172,824, in 1892.

Epilepsy 20 Years.

Cured by Dr. Miles' Nervine.

A few years ago, Mr. L. W. Gallaher, was an extensive, successful expert, manufacturer of lumber products. Attacked with epilepsy, he was obliged to give up his business. The attacks came upon him most inopportunely. One time falling from a carriage, at another down stairs, and often in the street. Once he fell down a shaft in the mill, his injuries nearly proving fatal. Mr. Gallaher writes from Milwaukee, Feb. 16, '95.

"There are none more miserable than epileptics. For 20 years I suffered with epileptic fits, having as high as five in one night. I tried any number of physicians, paying to one alone, a fee of $500.00 and have done little for years but search for something to help me, and have taken all the leading remedies, but received no benefit. A year ago my son, Chas. S. Gallaher, druggist at 191 Reed St., Milwaukee, gave me Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, and I tried it with gratifying results. Have had but two fits since I began taking it. I am better now in every way than I have been in 20 years."

SILVER AND GOLD

Gov. Altgeld's Great Speech

Delivered at the Auditorium in Chicago, Saturday Evening, May 16.

An Able and Convincing Address on the Money Question.

The Wageworker, the Farmer and the Producer Injured by the Single Gold Standard.

Business Depression Follows the Contraction of the Money of Redemption--Ratio, International Agreement, Over-Production, Price, Value, Etc., Ably Discussed--The Future Prosperity of Our Country and the Perpetuity of Our Republican Institutions Involved in the Issue.

Chicago, Ill., May 16.—The following is the address on the money question delivered by Gov. John P. Altgeld at the Auditorium to-night before a large and enthusiastic audience:

For a number of years there has existed throughout the civilized world a severe depression with a constantly increasing train of bankruptcy, ruin and misery. Nature has yielded her harvest as bountifully as ever and the intelligence, energy and ingenuity of man are as great as ever. We must therefore conclude that this sad condition is due to some unnatural and extraordinary cause. That cause is the great reduction in the volume of money in the world, incident to destroying silver as a money metal.

The financial question, in its relation to the commerce, the industry, the enterprise and the prosperity of the world is governed by certain fundamental laws or principles. When these are followed all is well. One of these fundamental laws now universally recognized is that increase in the volume of money in the world raises the selling price of things while a reduction in the amount of money in the world lowers the selling price of things. Another of these fundamental laws now universally recognized is that with rising prices go increased activity, industry, enterprise and prosperity. Putting more money into the world is like putting more blood into the body; it gives new life; while falling prices stop enterprise, check industry and produce stagnation and distress because debts, taxes and fixed charges never fall with the price of things, consequently more property has to be sold to get the same amount of money in order to pay the debts, taxes, etc.; so that the debtor has no money left to spend. This soon destroys the market for commodities so that manufacturers cannot sell their products and are consequently obliged to shut down. This, in turn, destroys the purchasing power of the laborer, so that there is paralysis and distress around the entire circle of business and industry.

When carefully examined it is found that all of the panics we have had in this country were the result of a contraction of the currency brought about by one cause or another. Inasmuch as the panic of 1873 is sometimes mixed up in the discussion of the silver question I desire to say a few words in regard to it, simply to point out at the bottom with it. That panic was local to the United States and was due to causes which were local to this country. The panic which struck this country in 1893 was not local but extended over the civilized world and had been felt in other countries for a number of years before it reached us.

During our civil war the government issued paper money in large amounts and there was neither gold nor silver ginning it had no direct connection in circulation in this country. After the war the government began to contract the amount of paper which was outstanding by issuing bonds with which to take it up. In recent years attempts have been made to revise the treasury reports in order to make it appear that the contraction had not been great. But John J. Knox, who was for a time comptroller of the treasury, and is regarded as an accurate authority, published an article in Laylor's Cyclopedia based on the treasury reports issued during and after the war in which he gives a table showing the amount of paper money the treasury had outstanding on July 1st of each year for a number of years and the character of each kind of notes. According to this table the largest amount of paper money we had in circulation at any time during and immediately after the war was in 1866, when we had $1,261,415,475 in government paper and $281,479,908 in national bank notes, making a total of $1,542,895,383. By 1870 the government paper was reduced to $396,894,212, while there were $299,766,984 of national bank notes, making a total of $696,661,196. In other words there was a reduction in the total amount of paper money in circulation in this country from 1866 to 1870, of $846,234,177. Inasmuch as the enterprise, industry and ingenuity of our people had loaded every dollar of this paper money which had been in circulation with as much business as it could possibly carry it was inevitable that a fall in prices corresponding to the reduction in the volume of money must follow. Senator John Sherman recognized this fact and in a discussion of the currency question in the United States senate in 1869, he said:

"The contraction of the currency is a far more distressing operation than the senators suppose. Our own and other nations have gone through that operation before. It is not possible to take that voyage without the sorest distress. To every person except a capitalist out of debt or a salaried officer or annuitant, it is a period of loss, danger, lassitude of trade, fall of wages, suspension of enterprises, bankruptcy and disaster. It means ruin of all dealers whose debts are twice their business capital though one-third less than their total property. It means the fall of all agricultural production without any great reduction of taxes. What prudent man would dare to build a house, a railroad, a factory or a barn with this certain fact before him?"

Notwithstanding this warning of danger the government went on with its policy of contraction and Sherman's predictions were more than verified. Universal bankruptcy, ruin and distress with their attendant increase in suicides, crime and insanity constituted the price which the American people paid to get on what was then called a "specie basis." I will not stop here to ask the question whether the American nation ever received any equivalent for the awful price which it here paid or not; I am only commenting upon an historical fact.

Toward 1880 the balance of trade was largely in our favor for a number of years, which fact tended to increase the volume of money in our country. The productions of our mines were very large for several years so that including treasury and national bank notes there were according to the treasury tables in the year 1880, between $1,100,000,000 and $1,300,000,000 of money in this country, being an increase of from 60 to 80 per cent over the sum which we had when the government had ceased contracting the currency and there followed a corresponding increase in the price of property. This was accompanied by general activity and prosperity which was, however, local to our country and lasted only a few years until we began to be affected by that general depression which followed the demonetization of silver.

Demonetization of Silver.

While the subject of demonetizing silver had been agitated in Europe for many years, it had not been in the United States, but inasmuch as neither gold nor silver was circulating here the manipulators got our government to take the initiative in striking down silver. Accordingly the American congress, in February, 1873, by law demonetized silver, so that it was no longer a part of our standard coinage and was no longer a legal tender as money for large sums, thus depriving it of its function as money. The effect of this was not at once noticed here. In the fall of the same year the German empire not only demonetized silver by law, but gradually threw nearly $400,000,000 of silver quietly onto the market as a commodity. Norway, Sweden, Denmark and some smaller states more or less dependent upon Germany demonetized silver by law immediately thereafter; Holland struck down silver by law in 1875; Russia in 1876; France and the countries of the Latin union by law stopped the coinage of silver in 1878; Austria established a gold standard in 1879.

In 1878 congress attempted to remonetize silver but the opposition was able to partially frustrate the movement. The Bland-Allison bill was passed, but it limited the amount to be coined to from two to four millions per month and it did not make this full legal tender and the coinage was not free as it formerly was and as that of gold is. In 1890 this law was repealed and the Sherman law was passed under which the government purchased forty-eight millions of dollars worth of silver every year and issued certificates against it. This added forty-eight million dollars to our currency every year and helped slightly to keep up prices. But President Cleveland convened congress in special session to repeal this law in 1893 and a further disturbance of prices ensued. The Indian mint continued coinage of silver until June, 1893, and inside of six days from the day it closed there was a fall in prices of nearly twenty-five per cent.

Beginning of the Movement.

Although the subject had been mooted before, there was no agitation in favor of adopting a single standard until about the beginning of this century, when a number of writers discussed it. In 1802 Citizen Berenger, who had been deputized by the French government to make a report on this question, reported in favor of a single silver standard. Not gold, but silver. Berenger was one of the ablest men that have written upon this question, and it is noticeable that he advanced in 1802 practically all of the arguments in favor of a silver standard that have since been advanced in favor of a gold standard. Like the single standard men of to-day, he took the ridiculous position of fiercely contending that the government could not increase or decrease the purchasing power of a metal—that the whole matter was regulated by commerce—and yet, instead of leaving it to commerce, he labored for years, in season and out of season, to get the government to adopt one metal and strike down the other by law.

In 1816 Lord Liverpool succeeded in getting the English government to adopt the gold standard by law, and his principal argument in favor of it was that the other nations of the world were using silver almost exclusively, and if England adopted gold and coined it in denominations that were not in use in other countries her money would be less liable to be drawn from the island, and that when it was drawn from the island it would have a constant tendency to return. The idea of getting an advantage over other countries by the use of gold was not then thought of. This advantage arose later, out of the fact that England, having become the great commercial and ship owning nation of the world and London the great financial center, her people got the benefit of the exchanges and in time got the benefit of all those advantages which are reaped by men who handle large sums of money and are in a situation to compel others to come and deal with them.

There were a number of minor steps taken by some of the governments, which need not be noticed in this brief survey, but the advocates of a single standard increased in number and were finally divided into three classes: One class that wanted uniformity of coinage in order to escape the confusion which resulted from a great variety of coins issued by different small principalities. This class did not believe that there was enough of either metal in the world to do the world's business, and favored the theory of having some countries adopt gold and other countries adopt silver. Another class was made up chiefly of professors, who advanced various theories which they wanted to have put into practice. The third and more powerful branch consisted of the great creditor classes, who wanted to make money dear, and of nearly all the official classes who hold office for life and draw salaries from the government. The charter of the Bank of England being about to expire was renewed by parliament in 1844, and in the act renewing the charter, parliament provided that the bank must buy up all gold of lawful standard that should thereafter be offered at £3 17s 9d per ounce of standard gold. In other words, it fixed the minimum price for gold by law and furnished the world a purchaser for it. Had it provided by law that the bank must buy every pound of wool thereafter offered at 30 cents per pound, it is evident that 30 cents per pound would have formed a minimum price for wool after that date, especially if it were limited in quantity, and this would have been due not to business or commerce, but to the arbitrary act of government.

About the time of the great discoveries of gold in California and Australia, the creditor and office holding class, fearing higher prices, started an agitation in favor of the demonetization of gold; and Holland, as well as some of the smaller German states, actually demonetized gold for a time. Soon after 1850, when it became evident that the new gold fields were not going to deluge the world, the agitation in favor of demonetizing gold ceased, and then became active in favor of demonetizing silver. International monetary conferences were held at different times, at which the idea of establishing a single gold standard was strongly pressed, although the folly and danger of it were pointed out by some of the ablest statesmen and financiers of the world; but the influence of the office-holding and money-lending classes was sufficiently potent to quietly carry it out, and finally they induced the American congress to take the initiative.

Ratio Between Gold and Silver.

As each little country had its own system of finance the greatest confusion prevailed until about two hundred years ago, when some of the governments of Europe provided by law that silver and gold should be coined at the ratio of 15½ parts of silver to one of gold of equal fineness; in some it was 15 to 1; while in our country it was 15 to 1 until 1834 and then 16 to 1. This constituted the legal ratio or mint price and it is remarkable that for two hundred years after the establishment of this legal ratio or mint price the market ratio or price remained substantially the same as the legal ratio, the difference being chiefly the cost of exchange, and the market ratio or price was uninfluenced by the increase or decrease in the production of either metal from time to time. The statistical tables giving what is called the market price of gold and silver for two hundred years prior to 1873 show that there was practically no variance of the market ratio of fifteen and a half to one during all that time. Sometimes one metal would be a little more plentiful than the other in a particular country, but this did not matter; the ratio or price of each remained the same and the sum of the two metals taken together and treated practically as one constituted the measure of value of things throughout the world. During all that time commerce never lifted its finger in favor of the demonetization of either metal and the contention that the business of the world discriminated against silver is not true.

Commerce Obeys Statutory Law.

The history of these two hundred years show that instead of commerce dicating, it always adapts itself to the established laws; in fact, the theory of tariffs and of protection rests entirely upon the idea that the business of the world adjusts itself to positive statutory enactments. At present gold is protected; it is given a monopoly through the act of government.

What American and European Statesmen Have Said on the Subject of a Single Standard.

Attempts have been made to bolster this dishonest single standard movement up with the names of distinguished statesmen and to make it appear that they favored that which in reality they denounced. In 1792 Alexander Hamilton wrote upon this subject:

"Upon the whole it seems to be most advisable as has already been observed, not to attach the unit exclusively to either of the metals, because this can not be done effectually without destroying the office and character of one of them as money and reducing it to the situation of mere merchandise. To annul the use of either of the metals as money is to abridge the quantity of circulating medium and is liable to all the objections which arise from a comparison of the benefits of a full with the evils of a scanty circulation."

Jefferson wrote to Mr. Hamilton in February, 1792, these words: "I concur with you that the unit must stand on both metals."

In 1822 William H. Crawford, secretary of the treasury, reported to congress as follows: "All intelligent writers on the currency agree that when it is decreasing in amount poverty and misery must prevail." In 1852 Mr. R. M. T. Hunter, in a report to the United States senate, said:

"Of all the great effects produced upon human society by the discovery of America there were probably none so marked as those brought about by the great influx of the precious metals from the new world into the old. European industry had been declining upon the decreasing stock of the precious metals and an appreciating standard of values. Human ingenuity grew dull under the paralyzing influences of declining profits, and capital absorbed nearly all that should have been divided between it and labor. * * * * The mischief would be great indeed if all the world were to adopt but one of the precious metals as the standard of value. To adopt gold would diminish the specie currency more than one-half and should silver be taken as the only standard, the reduction would be large enough to prove highly disastrous to the human race."

In February, 1878, Mr. James G. Blaine said: "On the much vexed and long mooted question as to a bimetallic or monometallic standard my views are sufficiently indicated in the remarks I have made. I believe the struggle now going on in this country and in other countries for a single gold standard would if successful, produce widespread disaster in and throughout the commercial world. The destruction of silver and establishing gold as a sole unit of value must have a ruinous effect upon all forms of property except those improvements which yield a fixed return in money. It is impossible to strike silver out of existence as money without results which will prove distressing to millions and disastrous to tens of thousands. I believe gold and silver coin to be the money of the constitution; indeed, the money of the American people anterior to the constitution, which the great organic law recognized as quite independent of its own existence. No power was conferred on congress to declare either metal should not be money. Congress has in my judgment no power to demonetize silver any more than to demonetize gold."

United States Senator Roger Q. Mills, in discussing this question, said: "But the crime that is now sought to be perpetrated on more than fifty millions of people, comes neither from the camp of the conqueror, the band of the foreigner nor the altar of an idolatry. * * * * it comes from the sold phlegmatic, marble heart of avarice that seeks to paralyze labor, increase the burden of debt and fill the land with destitution and suffering to gratify the lust for gold. * * * * It demands of congress an act that will paralyze all the forces of production, shut out labor from all employment, increase the burden of debts and taxation, and send desolation and suffering to all the homes of the poor."

In 1878 John G. Carlisle, while discussing this subject in the American congress, said: "I know that the world's stock of precious metals is none too large and I see no reason to apprehend that it will ever become so. Mankind will be fortunate indeed if the annual production of gold and silver coin shall keep pace with the annual increase of population, commerce and industry. According to my view of the subject, the conspiracy which seems to have been formed here and in Europe to destroy by legislation and otherwise, from three-sevenths to one-half the metallic money of the world, is the most gigantic crime of this or any other age. The consummation of such a scheme would ultimately entail more misery upon the human race than all the wars, pestilence and famine that ever occurred in the history of the world. The absolute and instantaneous destruction of half the moveable property of the world, including horses, ships, railroads and all other appliances for carrying on commerce, while it would be felt more sensibly at the moment, would not produce anything like the prolonged distress and disorganization of society that must inevitably result from the permanent annihilation of one-half of the metallic money of the world." Contrast these words of Carlisle with the sophistry he is now uttering.

While secretary of the treasury, Mr. John Sherman wrote to W. S. Groesbeck, of Cincinnati, Ohio, saying, among other things: "During the monetary conference in Paris I was strongly in favor of the single standard of gold, and wrote a letter which you will find in the proceedings of that conference stating my views. At that time the wisest of us did not anticipate the sudden fall of silver, or rather the rise of gold, that has occurred. Other arguments showing the dangerous effect upon industry by dropping one of the precious metals from the standard of value outweigh in my mind all the theoretical objections to the bimetallic system."

I have time to notice only a few of the utterances of the great men of Europe who were familiar with this subject. I will first notice the results of the researches and observations of the Historian Hume, expressed as follows:

"It is certain that since the discovery of the mines in America industry has increased in all the nations of Europe. We find that in every kingdom in which money begins to flow in greater abundance than formerly everything takes a new faith. Labor and industry gain life, the merchant becomes more enterprising, the manufacturer more diligent and skillful."

Mr. Ernest Seyd, a high European authority, wrote years ago:

"Upon this point all authorities upon the subject are in accord, to-wit: That the large increase in the supply of gold has given a universal impetus to trade, commerce and industry, and to general social development and progress."

In 1843 Leon Fauchet, in his work entitled "Researches Upon Gold and Silver," says: "If all the nations of Europe adopted the system of Great Britain, that is, single gold standard, the price of gold would be raised beyond measure, and we should see produced in Europe a result lamentable enough."

In 1869, while the agitation in favor of demonetizing silver was in progress, the French government appointed a commission to inquire into the subject. A number of distinguished financiers appeared before this commission and gave their views. M. Wolowski said: "The sum total of the precious metal is reckoned at fifty milliards, one-half gold and one-half silver. If, by a stroke of the pen, they suppress one of these metals in the monetary service they double the demand for the other metal to the ruin of all debtors."

M. Rouland, the governor of the Bank of France, said: "We have not to do with idle theories. The two moneys have actually co-existed since the origin of human society; they co-exist because the two are necessary, by their quantity, to meet the needs of circulation."

The American people have heard much about the Rothschilds. I will quote from one, Baron Rothschild, one of the greatest financiers of the age, said to this commission: "The simultaneous employment of the two precious metals is satisfactory and gives rise to no complaint; whether gold or silver dominates for the time being, it is always true that the two metals concur together in forming the monetary circulation of the world, and it is the general mass of the two metals combined which serves as the measure of the value of things. The suppression of silver would be a veritable destruction of values without any compensation."

Let me state here that in the many books that have been written on this subject I know of no instance in which the essence of the whole matter is given in such few words as is done here by the Baron Rothschild:

1st. The use of the two metals is satisfactory and gives rise to no complaint. 2d. Whether one or the other dominates for the time, it is always true that the two together concur in forming the monetary circulation of the world. 3d. It is the mass of the two metals combined which serves as the measure of the value of things. 4th The suppression of silver would be a veritable destruction of values without compensation.

Over a year ago the secretary of the United States treasury went to New York and in an address to the Association of Bankers at a wine dinner in speaking of bimetallism or a combined standard said that he could not understand how there could be a combined or bimetallic standard of values any more than there could be two standard yard sticks of different lengths. Whether Mr. Rothschild would have seen two yard sticks after a wine dinner I do not know, but there are men who have seen worse things than yard sticks under such circumstances.

In 1873 the great Prof. Laveleye appeared before the Belgian monetary commission and among other things said: "The debtors, and among them the state, have the right to pay in gold or silver and this right cannot be taken away without disturbing the relation of debtors and creditors, to the prejudice of the debtors to the extent perhaps of one-half, certainly of one-third. To increase all debts at a blow is a measure so violent, so revolutionary, that I cannot believe that the government will propose it or the chambers will vote it."

In 1876, when some countries had already stricken down silver and others were urged to do so, the Westminster Review, a standard publication, in an able article on the subject said: "One of the things involved is the probable appreciation of gold. In other words an increase in its purchasing power that consequently * * * prices have seen their highest for many a long day and that debts contracted in gold will by reason of this movement tend to press more heavily on the borrowers and that it will be well if this pressure does not become so intolerable as to suggest a way of solution something like universal repudiation."

In the article on Money in the Encyclopedia Britannica, written prior to 1883, by C. F. Bastable, a distinguished English writer on finance, from an English point of view, the writer estimates that from 1849 to 1869 there was an increase of 20 per cent in the volume of money in the world and that this caused a general increase of wages and greatly improved the condition of the classes living by manual labor. On the question of a standard he says: "The immediate introduction of a universal gold currency, is by the admission of all parties, eminently undesirable and this is the only settled point in the controversy." Speaking of the fall of silver he insists that careful investigation shows that any increase in production had little to do with it, but that "the great depreciation of silver resulted mainly from its having ceased to be money over a large part of the civilized world," and that this is due to governmental action. He holds with Delmar that what is called "the cost of production theory," is not sound. But on the subject of restoring silver by international agreement he claims that as England is a creditor nation it will not be to her interest to give up any advantage which the debtor nations have given her through their own legislation.

At the international monetary conference held in Paris in 1878, Mr. Goschen, who represented England, and who by reason of his experience as a banker and as cabinet minister, may be regarded as one of the greatest financiers and statesmen in this line in the world, in a discussion of this question said:

"If, however, other states were to carry on a propaganda in favor of a gold standard and the demonetization of silver, the scramble to get rid of silver might provoke one of the greatest crises ever undergone by commerce. * * * * There would be a fear on the one hand of a depression of silver, and on the other of a rise in the value of gold and a corresponding fall in the prices of all commodities. The American proposal for a universal double standard seemed impossible of realization, but the theory of a universal gold standard was Utopian and indeed involved a false Utopia. It was better for the world at large that the two metals should continue in circulation than that one should be universally substituted for the other."

In 1883, when the demonetization of silver had been practically effected by most of the European nations, Mr. Goschen delivered an address before the Institute of Bankers in London, having for his audience the most experienced and conservative financiers in the world.

After referring to the argument that less money was necessary than formerly because of certain economies effected in the way of drafts, checks, etc. he said: "I certainly do share the opinion that the economies effected do not counterbalance the strain put upon gold, either by the increased demands of the population for pocket money, or for the liquidating of the enormously increased balance of transactions both of this country and of others. Happy then it is for those who have the sovereigns. On the other hand, unhappy it is for those who have commodities left on hand and produce which they have not sold.

"It is true," he says, "that no state action on the part of England can be cited, but it would not be true of Europe generally, because if the fall of prices has been brought about by the absorption in Germany, Italy and the United States of nearly £200,000,000 of gold coinage, it is by the laws passed by those governments, and not by any change in production, that the serious results indicated have been caused; therefore, I wish to put aside the doctrine that it is utterly out of the question for states to act. I must reply that to my mind the connection between the additional demand for gold and the position of prices seems as sound in principle as I believe it to be sustained by facts."

My fellow citizens, you notice that Mr. Goschen not only holds that governments can legislate in such manner as to raise the price of some things and depress the prices of others, but he believes that in this case the rise in the purchasing power of gold and the consequent fall of prices was due to governmental actions.

In June, 1885, Mr. Robert Giffen, the official statistician of the British Board of Trade, published a remarkably able article in the Contemporary Review on the subject of the fall in the prices of commodities throughout the world. He says: "We have the facts as to the extraordinary demands for gold since 1872. In round figures there have been new demands for about £200,000,000 sterling of gold, an amount very nearly equal to the whole annual production of the period, although a larger amount than that annual production had been necessary in previous years to maintain the state of prices which then existed."

He then points out that twelve million pounds sterling, or sixty million dollars, are annually required to replace the wear and tear of coin and meet the increase in the demand for money caused by increase of population; and then adds: * * * * * Looking at all the facts, therefore, it appears impossible to avoid the conclusion that the recent course of prices is the result in part of the diminished production and the increased extraordinary demands upon the supply of gold. It is suggested, indeed, that the increase of banking facilities and other economies in the use of gold may have compensated the scarcity, but the answer clearly is that in the period between 1850 and 1873 the increase of banking facilities and similar economies was as great relatively to the arrangements existing just before as anything that has taken place since. The same reply may also be made to the suggestion that the multiplication of commodities accounts for the entire change that has occurred. There is no reason to suppose that the multiplication of commodities has proceeded at a greater rate since 1873 than in the twenty years before that. Yet before 1873 prices were rising notwithstanding the multiplication of commodities and since that date the tendency has been to decline. The one thing which has changed, therefore, appears to be the supply of gold and the demands upon it, and to that cause largely we must accordingly ascribe the change in the course of prices which has occurred."

Stringencies in Money Market.

In commenting on the extraordinary demands upon gold, Mr. Giffen says: "Now the course of the market since 1871 has been full of stringencies. In almost every year except '78 and '80 there has been a stringency of greater or less severity directly ascribable to or aggravated by the extraordinary demands for gold and the difficulty of supplying them."

There is one more American authority which I shall quote and that is the Chicago Tribune. It is perhaps not generally known that the Chicago Tribune gave to the world some of the ablest arguments yet made in favor of the remonetization of silver and against a single gold standard.

For example, on Jan. 14, 1878, the Tribune said: "Silver dollars of 371¼ grains pure were established as the standard of value or unit of account by the act of April 2, 1792, and this continued in full force until 1873-4." On Feb. 23, 1878, it said: "In 1873-4 as it was two years later discovered the coinage of this silver dollar was forbidden and silver dollars were demonetized by law. This act was done secretly and stealthily to the profound ignorance of those who voted for it and of the president who approved it. * * * * under cover of darkness it abolished the constitutional dollar and has arbitrarily and to the immense injury of the people added heavily to every form of indebtedness public and private." On Jan. 10, 1878, the Tribune said: "The silver dollar fills the bill exactly. So long as it was a legal tender it was an honest dollar, worth one hundred cents and had the ring of the true metal. Remonetize it and it will again be what it was for eighty years, worth one hundred cents." And again: "The big dollar (that is at a ratio of say 20 to 1) is just what the country must stop if it hopes to escape universal bankruptcy. We want the old historical dollar of 371¼ grains pure silver, the equivalent of the old Spanish milled dollar, and nothing else. The present purchasing power of the gold dollar has been fearfully enhanced."

On Jan. 5, 1878, it said: "The folly of advocating the single gold standard of money must be obvious to every one not blind as a bat in the day-light." On Feb. 6, 1878, it said: "It is mere naked, unsupported, irrational, impudent assertion that remonetization of silver will not reduce the difference in value between it and gold. Silver, even as bullion has not depreciated since it was demonetized as compared with property or labor." And on Jan. 8, 1878, it said: "The theory that a remonetization of the silver dollar demands that the weight of that dollar be increased to correspond to the present London value of silver as measured by cornered gold is simply absurd." On Jan. 5, 1878, in answer to the question as to whether the world could safely dispense with silver, it said: "Let the falling prices and the rising multitudes of unemployed men answer this question." And on Jan. 16, it had this editorial: "To undertake to do the business of the world on a single gold basis of measurement and equivalents means loss, bankruptcy, poverty, suffering and despair. Debts will grow larger and taxes become more onerous. The farmer will receive small prices for his crops, labor will be forced down, down, down, and there will be a long series of strikes, lock-outs and suspension of production. Those who own property but owe for it in part will see their mortgage increasing in proportion as gold acquires new purchasing power, while the property itself will be shrinking in value. There will be no relief, it must be kept in mind, for gold will be the only recognized equivalent of values, the stock of gold will be power constantly growing and the circle of wealth will be uniformly contracting." Nothing more prophetic was ever written.

A volume could be filled with editorials expressing similar sentiments written by the great editor of the Tribune. Now, by way of contrast, I will give you some of the arguments which the Chicago Tribune is making at present against the cause of silver, and the people who advocate it: "Lunacy," "Monstrous absurdity," "Dishonesty," "Cranky notion," "Silver craze," "Dishonest dollar," "Scoundrelly scheme," "Liars," "Hypocrites," etc. To use its own language, the Tribune seems to be "as blind as a bat in daylight."

Is Less Money Needed.

It is claimed by single standard men that but little money is needed; that scarcely three per cent of the business of the world is done with actual money. That the business affairs of the world, great and little, are carried on by means of checks, drafts, bills of exchange and bank notes; and this is unquestionably true; but it being admitted that some money is necessary as a base for it all, the single standard advocates make a mistake in imagining that the world can get along with less money than formerly. Immediately prior to 1873, the world was as well banked as it is now, and all the agencies and systems of credit, in the use of bank notes, checks, etc., were as fully developed then as they are now, and if it at that time required all the silver and all the gold that there was in the world to form a basis for the business that was done, it will require the same to-day; in fact, it will require more money to-day than formerly to restore the business of the world to what it formerly was because the population has greatly increased, and the area over which business has to be done has greatly increased. Business can be carried on in a city with less money than it can in new and extended countries. The principle thing which is overlooked by the single standard people is the fact that the industry, energy and enterprise of the world are always carried to the utmost extent that the total amount of money in the world will admit of. Every dollar of money is at once loaded with as much credit as it can possibly carry. I have here a picture of an inverted pyramid, the point turned down. This pyramid represents the business of the world as it formerly stood. At the bottom, marked in black is the actual money, both gold and silver, which supported this pyramid. You will see it constituted only about three per cent of the whole although the exact proportion is immaterial to illustrate the principle involved.

Now, if every dollar was already loaded to its full capacity to carry, I ask you what will happen if you arbitrarily, by law, pull out from under this pyramid one-half of the money that is supporting it? I imagine I hear some one say, it will have to collapse. That is correct and that is exactly what happened in this case; the business of the world collapsed.

Either Half Price or Half as Much Work.

If the world now has only half the money that it formerly had, then it must follow that either the world's work must be done for half the former price or else only half as much work can be done. In either case the men who do the work will be ruined, for in one case they must work for half pay, and in the other there will be two men for each job. And as the debts, interest, taxes, and other fixed charges have not been lowered, and will absorb nearly all the earnings, I will ask is there any hope for our agricultural classes, for our manufacturers, for our great producing classes of various kinds? Does not the single standard mean the impoverishment of these classes and a permanent lowering of their status?

Amount of Money in this Country.

The comptroller of the currency at Washington, has for a number of years invited all the banks of the United States, national, state and private, over nine thousand in all, to report the total amount of money of all kinds which they held on a certain day. These reports show that we have not in circulation in this country the amount of money that is usually claimed. For example, the last report given out by the comptroller, Dec. 2, 1895, shows that on July 11, 1895, all of the banks in the United States, national, state and private, held only $631,111,290, while at the same time there were in the treasury of the United States, as claimed by the reports, $429,517,713, but of this sum, there were $108,210,555 in gold which was held as a reserve and was not available for circulation. This left the total amount of money in the banks and in the treasury at that time $952,418,448. This was all the money in sight at that time available for circulation. Of the sum held by the banks $127,621,099 consisted of gold, and this was all of the available gold then in the United States. The foregoing sums comprise all the money we then had in this country except what there was in the pockets of the people. And inasmuch as we have banks in every village and we have had years of idleness during which little savings were exhausted, and inasmuch as building associations have in late years absorbed nearly all the money that used to be held by private individuals, it is claimed by competent judges that when you include the colored people of the south and the poor everywhere that an average of $5 per family would be a high average of what there was at that time in the pockets of the people. As there were then less than fourteen million families that would make less than $70,000,000, but if we double this sum and assume that there was on an average $10 in the hands of every family in the United States at that time, it would make less than $140,000,000. Adding that to what there was then in the banks and in the treasury and it gives us the total money in this country, which is less than $1,100,000,000.

But the treasury officials persist in giving out figures published by the director of the mint, in which he claims that there are in this country altogether $1,651,310,000; that we have $23.59 per capita, and that there are $618,100,000 of gold alone in this country. But in his report for 1892 the director explains that these figures are in part estimated and in part based on assumption. In the first place he assumed that every dollar of paper issued by the national government during the last thirty years or more and by the national banks of this country is still in circulation, except where a record has been made of its cancellation in Washington, and that none has been lost or destroyed in all that time. Second, he assumes that all of the gold which the records of the custom houses and at the mints show came into this country is still in circulation, except where there is a record of its exportation or of its use in the arts. In other words, he makes no allowance for what has been lost and destroyed during a quarter of a century; he makes no allowance for what was lost by abrasion during that time; he makes no allowance for what was carried across our southern boundary for a quarter of a century, unrecorded, nor for what was carried across our northern boundary during that time, and of which no record was made, nor for what was carried to China during that time and of which no record was made. He makes no allowance for what was used in the arts and of which no report was made, and he makes no allowance for what was carried to Europe in the pockets of our people during a quarter of a century. In his report for 1891, the director says that the amount of money which the American people spent in Europe during the year of the Paris exposition was estimated at over $90,000,000. Of course, most of this was registered in the form of letters of credit, etc., but so much of it as was carried in the pockets of the people was not registered, so that the tables given out by the director of the mint, when carefully examined in the light of information which he himself has given out in prior reports, are found to be absolutely worthless.

The other figures given by the comptroller, that I have referred to, are accurate. They practically constitute an inventory of everything in sight, and they show that instead of having $23.59 per capita in circulation in this country, we have not got $15.00 per capita in circulation in this country, while England has $20.78, France $35.77, Germany $17.59, Belgium $27.82 and the Netherlands $24.25. We are drifting toward the basis of the pauperized countries of Europe. Italy has $10.79 per capita, Austria-Hungary $10.67, Russia $8.46; even impoverished Spain has $16.55.

It is a most remarkable fact that the position held by a people in the scale of civilization seems always to depend on the amount of money they have in actual circulation. According to the tables issued by the United States treasurer, Turkey has $4.09 per capita, Mexico $4.95, Central American States $3.66, India $3.33, China $2.08 and Servia $3.78.

Bankers have been heard to say even during a panic that there was plenty of money. This was done to keep the public from becoming alarmed, for every business man knows that it is not true, and the facts that so many banks pay high rates of interest on deposits shows that it is not true. During the last panic the New York banks actually suspended payments and forced the public to take clearing house certificates. It has, however, been found that after a panic produced by a great contraction, the money that is left flows toward the cities and lies idle because business conditions are not favorable. Physicians tell us that if a large part of the blood is taken out of the human body the remainder flows to the heart and the extremities get cold; and the same law applies to money, which is the blood of commerce. Reduce its quantity and the body gets cold while the heart may be congested. At present money is in demand, not for new business enterprises, but by debtors who are carrying a heavy load of old debts and are forced to make new arrangements. If prices were again to go up, new life would come into the business world and money would then be in demand and new enterprises would be begun.

Gold in the World Insufficient.

In June, 1892, Edward O. Leech, director of the mint, published an article in the Forum on the money question, in which, among other things, he said: "I find that one of the most serious dangers which confronts us is the insufficiency of the supply of gold as a basis of the present and prospective business of the commercial world, and the consequent disturbances attending its accumulation and movement. * * * It is seriously proposed to throw the burdens of an increasing population and business upon the gold stock. The annual product of gold of the world is only about $125,000,000, of which nearly one-half is used in the industrial arts, so that the annual supply for monetary purposes is hardly in excess of $65,000,000. If this plan is carried out, then the existing stock of gold must for many years form the basis of business and credit and serve as the medium of all exchanges. That such a narrowing of the basis of credit and trade is attended by incalculable difficulties and hardships must be apparent. Already monetary panics have been inaugurated. * * * Europe has no gold to spare. She has drawn within the last year large quantities of gold from this country, at times when the rate of sterling exchange did not justify such shipments; that is, a premium has been paid for American gold. The struggle for the possession of gold, with its consequent train of financial disturbances, is well under way * * * If gold is to be the sole money of the world, not only will the extension of business and of foreign investments be seriously crippled, but the immense fabric of credit is liable to totter. Where is the gold to come from when the states of Europe not having a paper standard resume specie payments? * * * The truth is, the total supply of the precious metals is not more than sufficient to keep pace with the rapid increase of foreign trade. What is to be gained by discontinuing the use of one of the money metals and throwing all the work upon the other? Not stability of value, for, as already shown, for nearly a century when the bimetallic system existed in France, the relative value of gold and silver did not vary appreciably. * * * * If the experience of the last nineteen years has proven anything, it is that the value of gold and silver depends upon the monetary use which is made of them. The experience of the first seventy years of this century has demonstrated that both metals can be used as money with greater stability of values than one alone."

It is a remarkable fact that nearly all of the great European financiers, including those who favor a single standard declare that there is not enough gold in the world to do its business and that it was a fatal step to take for the nations to all confine themselves to the use of either metal. I know we have new born financiers in this country who argue that all that is needed is simply a standard of value and that the quantity is immaterial. Carried to its legitimate conclusion their argument would be that if you take a single gold dollar and tie it to a string and hang it up in the treasury department that will constitute a standard of value and is all that is needed. But the experience of the world is that while a vast amount of business can be done by the use of what are called credits there must always be a certain amount of money at the bottom of this and there is a limit to the amount of credit which a dollar can carry; consequently the amount of money at the bottom will practically determine the amount of business that can be done in the world. The spectacle which we see now is that of the great nations of the earth running after the little bit of gold that there is in the world just like boys run after a foot ball; it is shifted hither to-day drugged yonder to-morrow, and every time it shifts there is a disturbance in prices, even a disturbance in the low prices which now prevail. The amount of available gold in sight in the world is so small that a few large financial houses can manipulate it. As the Chicago Tribune says, they can "corner" it, and in recent years we have seen repeated instances of their doing so. Certainly it seems like the very height of madness to even suggest the idea of having the great business interests of this country and of the world rest upon a standard and a measure of values which can be manipulated.

Assumed Superiority of Gold.

An American gold standard man recently declared that gold went with the higher civilization and that silver belonged to a lower civilization. Let us look at this a moment. Until 1873 silver was the money that was chiefly used by nearly all of the great nations of the world. Germany was on a silver basis up to that time. The foundations of the great German empire were laid and the entire fabric of German civilization and German achievement and German greatness was reared on the basis of silver. Since she adopted a gold standard she has not advanced. Her industries are crippled and there is stagnation and distress throughout her entire borders. France, generally considered the most highly civilized country in the world was a great silver using country and her unit of value is a silver coin. The greatness of the United States of America was achieved prior to 1873. Our institutions were reared, the rebellion was quelled, the slaves were liberated while the unit of value in our country was a silver dollar, provided by the act of 1792. Look where you will you find that the progress of the world was made while silver was the money that was chiefly in use. And since the nations of the earth have been trying to get onto a gold basis there is universal depression and stagnation. Instead of advancing civilization, gold is causing retrogression, because there is not enough of it to do the world's work.

Theory of Overproduction.

Attempts have been made in this country to attribute the general fall of prices to cheapness of production and to consequent overproduction. No doubt cheapening production tends to lower prices, but increased production does not necessarily lower prices if there is also increased consumption. It is said that three times as much wheat is now sent to Liverpool as formerly, therefore wheat must fall in price. I ask: What is done with this wheat at Liverpool? Is there only as much sold and consumed as there formerly was and is the rest poured into the sea? Oh no, it is all sold and consumed. If that is the case, then consumption has increased as much as production and if this is so then it does not follow that there must be a fall in price simply because there is increased production. In fact, wheat has not fallen in price much more than the average fall of all commodities.

As Mr. Giffen stated, from 1850 to 1873 there was relatively as great an increase in production, taking it the world over as there has been since that time; yet from 1850 to 1873 prices the world over continued to rise while since 1873 they have continuously fallen. But the argument that improved methods of production and consequently the cheapening of production have been the cause of lower prices as compared with gold, overreaches itself, because there have been more improvements in the methods of mining both gold and silver than there have in almost any other department of industry. Consequently if improved methods and cheapening the cost of production are to be considered, gold should have declined in purchasing power together with other commodities. That the mere fact of the Mexican dollar being worth less than a dollar in gold prevented it from going out of the country as it formerly did, so that finally money became more plentiful in Mexico. Further, that as imports had to be paid for in gold, which was at a premium, the amount of imports were greatly reduced while the purchases in the home market were correspondingly increased, and the result was that not only all their factories were working to their utmost capacity, but that everywhere new factories were being started, and their laborers were all employed and wages greatly increased over what they formerly were. He gave figures to show that the railroads in Mexico, the banks, the manufacturers, the farmers, the laborers, are all prospering, and agricultural products, instead of going down as measured by their home dollar, have advanced. And he also says that so far as he has been able to observe, similar conditions exist in other silver using countries.

While railroads in the United States are going into the hands of receivers, railroads in Mexico are prospering and are paying properties. It is true the Mexican railroads, like our home have to pay the interest on their bonds in gold and have to pay a very high premium to get that gold, but after paying this premium they still have large profits left. The owners of railroads in the United States could learn a lesson from the Mexicans. About a year ago, President Andrews, of Brown University called attention to the fact that the gold using countries could not trade successfully with silver using countries and were liable to forever lose this trade because the low price of silver was giving such an impetus to manufacturing and to all kinds of trade in these silver countries that they would cease buying of outsiders. That consequently if we would restore silver we could get and could hold this trade against all Europe.

Are We Now Prosperous?

I saw a statement in a gold standard newspaper recently to the effect that we are now prosperous, had about everything we needed and ought to thank the Lord that we are as well off as we are. Now I have no argument to make in answer to such wild statements as that. I simply leave it for every laborer, for every manufacturer, for every business man, yea for every railroad man and every banker to answer. We have unlimited resources, have the most productive country in the world, we have every kind and character of industry and the ingenuity, enterprise, push and intelligence of our people are unsurpassed anywhere; therefore we should be prosperous and happy.

Labor Needs a Market.

The very first thing and the last thing that labor needs is a market for its products. You may speculate to a laborer until he is blind on the beauties of a dear dollar and it will do him no good. His wife will be in rags and his children will starve. He must have somebody to buy that which he makes. If nobody comes to buy the things which he makes then the factory in which he works must shut down. If it shuts down he is in distress and his purchasing power is gone. The difficulty that has existed in our country in late years is under consumption, not overproduction. The people are not in a condition to buy what they need and they will not be until there is a rise in prices. When this happens then the whole debtor and producing classes will again be able to buy and there will be a restoration of our home market.

Juggling Figures as to Wages.

Attempts have lately been made by men holding positions under the federal administration, and by men who have been hired to work for a gold standard to show that wages have not fallen. This is simply a dishonest juggling with figures. Every mechanic and laboring man in the United States knows that it is not true, and thorough investigation by congress shows that just the opposite is the case. In 1891 a committee of the United States Senate made a thorough investigation of the entire subject of wages. John G. Carlisle was a member of this committee. It made an exhaustive report, and showed that from 1840 to 1873 wages had nearly doubled, but, in the language of the committee, "After 1873 there was a marked falling off."

The committee then shows that while there was a slight rise about 1880 in wages, it never reached the point occupied before, and that afterwards there was a continuous decline.

One method of juggling with figures which is sometimes resorted to is the following: The salaries of higher officials of a corporation which, as a rule have not been reduced, are added to the sum paid the workmen; ni this way they get a high average. For example, take a corporation which formerly employed 100 men, and gave each on an average, $600 a year, making $60,000 for a hundred; at the same time it paid one high official $10,000 a year; by adding this to the $60,000 would make the pay roll $70,000; then dividing this sum by 101, being the number of employes including the high official, it makes nearly $700 as the average. The same corporation may today employ only fifty men and give each on an average only $500, making the $25,000, makes the present high official $10,000, which, added to the twenty-five, makes the present pay roll $35,000; dividing that sum by 51, it makes nearly $700 as the average, although formerly twice as many men were employed as now and each man got one-fifth more than he gets now. This illustrates the adage that while figures don't lie, liars can figure.

Shall We Continue the Single Standard or Return to Bimetallism.

This is the only question before us. For at present there is an organized and desperate effort being made by the federal administration and its adherents and by those who control great concentrations of capital to perpetuate the single gold standard for the world, while all fixed charges must remain the same or increase. The movement to force the great nations of the earth to a gold basis has been a campaign of organized corruption. Every influence that money could in any way control has been brought to bear. Nearly all the great newspapers and other agencies for moulding public thought have been bought up or forced into line and that army of men who have been called "hardy hired men" is now at work with all manner of sophistry to prevent the people from rising to overthrow this system. Catch phrases are invented, everything possible is resorted to delude the public. Much is said about an honest dollar. My fellow citizens the most dishonest dollar ever given to man, a dollar that has blood on it, is the present gold dollar which has doubled the burdens of all debtors and destroyed the happiness of all toilers. It is a two hundred cent dollar. This is what the gold standard has given you. You have noticed that wherever the adherents of the federal administration are able to control they are adopting resolutions in favor of the single gold standard. Here in Chicago these men have for about a week again talked bimetallism but to see that this talk on their part is insincere and is intended simply to enable them to get an advantage in primary elections and conventions it is only necessary to glance at their own utterances of a few weeks earlier date. That newspaper which is the especial organ of the administration has for months been upholding the single gold standard and ridiculing and denouncing those who are in favor of anything else. And an ex-judge who is regarded as the spokesman of that faction only recently in an address argued for the maintenance of the single gold standard and ridiculed the people who are demandig the restoration of the coinage of silver. The capitalists and the federal administration have forced the issue and for the time at least the question of a proper ratio and of the best method of procedure are shoved into the background.

The immediate question which confronts us is, Are we for or against the single gold standard? There is at present absolutely nothing to divide those who favor bimetallism and demand the free coinage of both gold and silver, free coinage of both gold and silver, we must first save the principle of bimetallism, for by the use of those peculiar and corrupting influences which capital always uses to carry its ends, bimetallism has not only been overthrown, but a desperate and determined effort is now being made to drive the last nail into its coffin.

Question of Ratio.

The question of ratio is scarcely open for discussion. We must first decide whether we shall have gold monometallism or gold and silver bimetallism. If we are to continue the single gold standard then there is nothing farther to discuss. Every intelligent man can see at a glance that the reestablishing of the great principle of bimetallism does not depend on any particular ratio. No man in this country has yet declared that we must have any named ratio or nothing. If we ever reach a point where the government has to consider the question of ratio, the battle for bimetallism will have already been won. And an intelligent consideration of the financial history of the world and of existing conditions will readily solve the problem when the time comes. I will only say it would be manifestly wrong to adopt the present market ratio, which is the result of giving gold a monopoly of the money function in the world and of demonetizing silver by law. To do this would be to permanently lower the value of silver and to reduce the volume of money which could be coined from it in the future. It would be a little like making the present low price of wheat permanent and as it is probable that the whole production of both metals will be insufficient to meet the increased demands of the world in the future such an unjust ratio would affect the prosperity for all time. I believe that if an international agreement is ever made it will be on a basis of 15½ to 1; whether the other nations come or not. Inasmuch as our government led the way in striking down silver, it should lead the way in restoring it, and it can in the very act of restoration make such trade regulations as will compel those nations which desire to trade with us to enter into an agreement with us on the money question. We will secure international agreement a great deal quicker by being in a position to dictate than we will if we remain in a condition in which we can only implore. The present federal administration has done nothing to further an international agreement. On the contrary it is straining every nerve to maintain the single standard. Therefore when a man endorses the financial policy of Cleveland and yet pretends to be a bimetallist you are warranted in questioning his sincerity.

Withdrawal of Gold.

A banker said to me lately: "Suppose you restore silver, will not all the gold in this country at once leave and produce a further contraction before you can coin much silver?"

I answer no. The moment you restore silver some of the burden will be taken off of gold so that there will be less demand for it. Second, as already shown, there are only $127,000,000 of gold in all the banks of the United States, national, state and private. This constitutes all of the available gold in this country. Suppose the banks were to let it go, and it were all to leave for a while, it could not make matters more worse than they are now. But if silver were restored there would be several dollars for everyone that left. The statement that only a limited amount could be coined in a year needs no notice. If we have not the machinery now we could soon get it. Better still, certificates should be issued, just as these are against gold. Nobody is as that was the ratio which formerly existed in nearly all countries of the world and which worked so satisfactorily for 200 years. In our country the ratio was 16 to 1, that is, 16 parts of silver to 1 of gold of equal fineness. Many are demanding a return to the old standard leaving the subject then to be dealt with as necessity may require. They regard this as the first step toward getting out of the woods and back onto the great highway. They would be satisfied with any other fair ratio but nothing else is offered them. For none of the men who criticise this restoration of the old standard has offered anything. Not one of them. If any man who is honestly for bimetallism can offer something better let him do so, and it will be considered. But the fact is that these critics are simply helping to maintain the single standard. That is the result of their attitude. I favor the immediate restoration of the free coinage of both gold and silver according to the old standard and I believe if this is achieved the ratio question will be solved. But I say to all men, let us defeat this gold standard and make it possible for our country to again prosper and if you can suggest something better than the old standard, do so.

International Agreement.

There are men who want an international agreement, and I am in hearty accord with them if we can get it. But this mighty nation cannot forever sit in the dumps and wait for other nations whic hare just as badly off to come and pull us out. We must relieve our people now. Every day's delay increases the burdens of our people. We can do it if we will. We can do it without the aid of any other nation. We can do it by the action of our congress. We can do it without injuring any interest except those of the money lenders, and their interest will be greatly benefited by the restoration of prosperity to the people who now are their debtors.

Effect on Labor of Restoring Silver.

Let us have all the silver we can possibly get converted into money. It will not lie idle. It will be used to buy lands, buy labor, build houses, build factories, build railroads and carry on business. It will be that much new blood and will give us an activity and a prosperity better than we have yet seen. The laborer will be the first to feel its benefits, for there will be an immediate demand for his services—not only will all be employed, but wages will go up.

Can We Go It Alone.

If a number of European nations were to restore the free coinage of both gold and silver at the former ratio, and again make each a legal tender, nobody would question that it would be absolutely successful. The two metals would circulate again as formerly, because these are the great commercial nations of the world. Well, the United States has a population nearly equal to that of France and Germany put together, we have more railroads than all Europe, and under favorable conditions our internal trade exceeds that of all Europe, for while some European countries have large populations, they have but little purchasing power and but little internal business. If Europe could go it alone we could. The mere act of remonetizing silver, and thus reducing the importance of gold, would reduce the purchasing power of gold; the tendency of the two metals would be to come together, because each could be used for the same purposes. When silver can be used in payment of taxes, payment of debts, used to travel on the railways, buy property, etc., the market ratio will again be what it was before silver was destroyed as money. The market ratio will be the mint ratio.

But, says some one, what about our foreign business? Well, it amounts to less than 5 per cent of all our business, and will occasion no difficulty—certainly not if both are what we call at par, and inasmuch as the field in which both could be used on the same basis is so great, they would circulate on a par basis. Again, some one asks, how would the government get gold then? Why, it would get it in the natural course of business, for there would be less demand for it then than there is now. There would be an end to the bond selling business in which the government is now engaged.

Banks, Railroads, Manufactures, Etc.

If we did not know that the most of the nine thousand banks of the United States are a good deal like sheep and go in flocks following directions received from a few eastern bankers, and if we did not know that the managers of large railroads have to take their instructions from the same source, and if we did not know that the large manufacturers are dependent on banks and are obliged to court favor, we would be utterly at a loss to understand why so many of the bankers, railroad managers and some manufacturers should oppose the restoration of silver; because the restoration of silver, by increasing the volume of money, would raise prices; a raise in prices would again restore our home market and do what it always has done in all countries and in all times; it would give activity so that our railroads would earn nearly twice the money, our banks would prosper and our manufacturers would have all they could do, while the laborer would be employed and his family be comfortable.

Injustice to Creditors.

But says some one, there are many debts that were made since prices have gone and if you now increase the volume of money and raise prices, will you not do these creditors an injustice? I answer, No! there is just this difference between increasing the burden of debts by making money scarce and reducing the burden by making money cheap, when money is scarce: it first destroys the debtor but it does not stop there. It produces that general stagnation which in time reaches the creditor and injures him. For instance every holder of securities in the United States has found that this universal depression has reduced the value of some of his securities. Every time that a railroad was forced into the hands of a receiver the securities of that road were worth less in the market. On the other hand when the burden of his debt is lightened by making money plentiful it begets such a general activity that new enterprises are started and the capitalist or the creditor derives a benefit from the universal prosperity.

Now my fellow citizens, this is not merely a question of the day. It is a question that will effect the entire future of our country; that will effect the perpetuity of republican institutions in our land. It affects the toilers of-to-day and will effect the millions of toilers yet unborn. Upon its solution will largely depend the question whether we shall be entirely Europeanized; whether we shall have a small class excessively rich reveling in luxury while the great masses are groaning under constantly increasing burdens and sinking in the standard of citizenship, or whether our land shall continue to be the home of intelligent freemen and a happy abiding place for all men who earn their bread by the sweat of their brow.

The prince of Wales does not take as much interest in his wardrobe as he did some years ago. He is still one of the best dressed men in the world, and his influence on men's fashions is as great as it ever was, but those who have charge of his attire complain that he has lost his old enthusiasm on the subject of dress.

AN OVATION TO GOV. ALTGELD.

The Chicago Inter Ocean, the leading republican paper of Chicago, a stalwart of the stalwarts in that political faith, describes the welcoming demonstration to Gov. Altgeld and the cause he advocated at the Auditorium on Saturday night, as a remarkable scene. More than 5,000 people crowded the Auditorium notwithstanding the downpouring rain, and the vast crowd wildly applauded the speaker and the sentiments he advanced. The following is the Inter-Ocean account of the meeting:

(Chicago Inter-Ocean, May 18th)

"Seldom in the history of the splendid hall in which Gov. Altgeld spoke has any person received so warm greeting as that accorded to him when his pale face appeared amid the distinguished men who sat upon the stage. No thrice-honored genius of song was ever more enthusiastically told in noisy report how highly esteemed he was by his auditors. When Gov. Altgeld came in view of the people the great throng cheered. Men stood in their places and shouted, waved their arms, swung aloft their hats, and made the vaulted ceiling ring with their cheers. For minutes this salvo continued. At times it would quiet down partially, only to be renewed again and again. One section of the audience would start again the cheering and soon the whole house would join. One man in the balcony cried: "What's the matter with Altgeld?" and with a roar that sounded like a volley of artillery came the response: "He's all right."

"At intervals during the deliverance of the address this scene was repeated, but not with such force or length. Every telling point in the speech was applauded. When the governor quoted from the Chicago Tribune the statement that those who could not see the effect of the demonetization of silver must be blind as a bat in the day time, the audience alternately laughed and cheered, while the speaker had to pause before he could resume his speech. The magic name of Blaine, who was quoted in defense of silver money, was received with great applause. Secretary Carlisle's name was greeted with mingled cheers and hisses, the latter for his present opinions on the currency question, the former for the extract from previous remarks of his quoted by Gov. Altgeld.

"When the governor declared that "the most dishonest dollar ever given to man is the gold dallar; it has blood upon it," the audience approved the anathema with a great shout. When he said "an organized and desperate effort is being made by the federal administration and its adherents to perpetuate the single gold standard," the crowd cheered again. When he said that "the great newspapers had been bought up by the gold interest" the audience applauded to the echo. When he attacked the Chicago paper which most bitterly scores the free-silver men, the crowd cheered and a man in the balcony shouted: "Let the Chronicle take that, too." When he denounced the banking interest as being inimical to the welfare of the people at large his auditors yelled themselves hoarse in seconding his proposition.

"For once and all, Gov. Altgeld settled the question of where he stands on the question of the ratio of coinage. "I am in favor," he said, "of the immediate restoration of the free coinage of silver at the old standard." A dozen times during his speech he described the old standard as 16 to 1, and that may be accepted as his view. "If Europe could go it alone, we could," said the governor, referring to the proposition of an international agreement on silver coinage, and the people shouted indorsement of the statement. There was no doubt, either, as to how the audience stood on the question of ratio. Every time the governor alluded to 16 to 1 the great house trembled with the applause of the thousands.

"Not a point in the long address was missed or overlooked by the audience, all of whom seemed to be quite familiar with the argument, pro and con, on the silver question. Every argument advanced seemed to be understood by the audience, and this was demonstrated by the fact that the applause came not at the close of some catchy sentence, but on the statement of sound, abstruse propositions of finance.

"It was a great audience. It filled the vast space of the Auditorium, except for a few seats in the top and the galleries. Not a few ladies were among the thousands who listened for more than two hours to a discussion of financial problems usually considered too dry to interest the fair ones. But the ladies who heard Gov. Altgeld last night appeared to be deeply interested in the subject he was discussing. Nearly every box was occupied by ladies, and the house resembled not in the least the conventional idea of a political meeting. It was an audience widely diversified as to the social conditions of those composing it. The banker and the mechanic, the capitalist and the laborer, the professional man and the artisan, rich and poor, high and low, met in a common cause. It was an assemblage of the people.

"The crowd began to pour into the Auditorium as early as 7 o'clock. A squad of police kept the people in line, and a large force of ushers directed them to their seats. Long before 8 o'clock the entire main floor and the main balcony was filled, and all the late comers had to ascend to the highest galleries. The people waited patiently. At last the strains of music were heard, and soon the committee appointed by the Altgeld legion to escort the governor from his hotel to the Auditorium marched onto the stage. With them came the band, which took its place on the stage and played inspiriting airs.

"About 8:15 o'clock Carter H. Harrison stepped to the speaker's desk on the front of the stage and called the meeting to order. Then he introduced Judge William Prentiss as the chairman of the evening. Judge Prentiss made a brief speech. He alluded to the blessings showered by Providence on this nation. He eulogized Gov. Altgeld, whom he then presented to the audience. Then came a torrent of applause that swept in cataract after cataract over the tremendous audience. The governor waited until the applause subsided and then began his address.

"When the governor concluded his address the cheering that marked the opening of the meeting was repeated, but was not so long continued. When he bowed his thanks to his auditors he turned to the stage, where hundreds stood eager to shake his hand and congratulate him on his effort."

The goldites will probably soon begin to direct their efforts to getting up a war in order to divert the attention of the people from the money question.

Killed By Thousands.

Wednesday's Daily.

There was a terrible accident at Mascow, Russia last Saturday. There was a great gathering to see the Caronation of the Emperor, and he had arranged to give them all a free lunch and distribute half a million souvenirs. As the teams carrying these gifts, drove out to the place, some one on the wagons threw a few souvenirs. The great crowd surged forward, and crowded people into a ditch and as these fell others followed, before the crowded knew what was going on. About 2,000 lives were lost.

DeKalb's Poet

We have often spoken of the various lines, in which DeKalb people have shown pre-eminence. It is now our good fortune to note the possession of a literary taste; which moreover has taken that highest and most difficult form——poesy. A few days ago we received a modest little booklet, with the title "St. Helena and Other Poems, by M. L. Hoffman." We find it contains many fine poems. There are gems in each, but the one which in our opinion, the true spirit and expression of poetic thought are best sustained, in its entirety is the following which we feel our readers will glad to to study.

URANIA.

The golden bowl is broken,
And the silver chord is loosed,
And the word has been spoken
To the child I loved the most.

The pitcher at the fountain,
Shattered and scattered lies,
And the light has gone forever
From her glorious, radiant eyes.

Oh, dream of youth and beauty,
How brief your happy stay;
You left me with a sorrow
That I cannot drive away.

Oh, Thou who lead'st us onward,
'Tis sometimes hard to say
'Tis well, 'tis well, O Father,
As we bow our heads, and pray.

We do not know as it is an object for anyone to follow the paths of poesy even if possessing the true poetic inspiration. But it is a matter of congratulation that one possesses such a rare gift, even though it be but little used.

PASSED

The River and Harbor 80-million steal has been passed by both Houses of Congress over the President's Veto. They knew the president was right in trying to head off this waste of public money, but did not seem to care. They knew too, that had they made an economical appropriation, confining the expense to things that were actually needed and within a reasonable limit, that he would have signed it. But they went against him and the people for various reasons, mostly because they disliked him, and cared little for the people's money. They were using the people's money to make themselves solid with the voters of the localities that got the big appropriations. We are glad to see that Mr. Leighty voted in the House, to sustain the president. But we are equally sorry that in the Senate, Mr. Turpie voted against the president and an economical use of the public money.

Yee-Hoo-Aye.

Mrs. E. J. Rickard has a legal notice in the Hicksville papers that she has begun a suit in the Probate Court of Defiance county, for divorce from E. J. for having abandoned her for three years past. But what does E. J. care? She cant take from him the enjoyment that comes from a heavenly "yee-hoo-aye," sung in a fine tenor voice from the top of Auburn's tallest buildings as he thus proclaims he has finishing cleaning the chimneys of the aforesaid.

Plead Guilty.

Yesterday a man was brought before Squire Walter charged with breaking into Lung's grocery at the Junction, Mr. Lung had discovered his loss when he opened up that morning, and at once set about it to find the fellow that did it. In a short time a tramp looking fellow went to get on the north bound morning freight and Mr. Lung went up to him and told him to "come along" as he wanted to introduce him to the local court. The man denied any wrongdoing but came along without trouble. Mr. Walter and Prosecutor Davis questioned him, but he denied having more than two cents in money. A search, however revealed a half dollar in his shoe. This rather got him down, but he excused it by saying it was a piece he had had some time. But he was hit hard when asked if he had had it for some time, why did he just now say he had only two cents? Then they found a lot of cigars on him and finally he plead guilty, and was bound over to court. He will feed at Sheriff Stroh's table for a while.

To-day there is a case in the same court for malicious trespass, the complaint being against Mrs. Gulich the offense complained of being that she removed some furniture out of one room into another so roughly as to cause injury. There is also a case of violation of the liquor law brought against Romeo Tarney, who manages the beer bottling works of Lyman Lockwood.

Oregon Election.

The election in Oregon on Tuesday is not fully settled yet. It is a large state with many wild counties lying in the mountains so that returns come in slowly. The state at large went decidedly republican although both democrats and populists were for free silver. But the two members of congress are in doubt, with the chances that one will be a republican and the other a populist. Of the three parties in the field, the democrats polled the west votes.

Free Silver Wins

Everybody seems to be for free silver now. Even the lads who gathered around the frount of the Kiblinger block this morning. They industriously scratched over the dirt and rubbish as the old board walk was lifted up, and quite a sum in dimes, nickels and pennies rewarded their labors. One lad had sixty-three cents, and over $1 in all has been saved. But we noticed that silver was the most popular. It proves as we started to say, that everybody is now for the white metal.

Winona

The Presbyterian General Assembly that was held this year at Saratoga, N. Y. goes next year to Winona Assembly Grounds. This is "Spring Fountain Park" or "Eagle Lake" near Warsaw, so familiar to our people. The grounds have been greatly improved and beautified as well as enlarged and they say we would hardly know the place now. It will need extra effort on the part of the managers to accommode over 600 delegates that sit in that body. And it must be remembered that there will be present, hundreds who are not delegates.

BRITAIN'S DEMAND.

Declares Hawaii Must Permit Two Exiled Revolutionists to Land There.

San Francisco special: Advices from Honolulu state that President Dole has received peremptory demand from England to allow Volney O. Ashford to land on Hawaiian territory. Ashford and his brother Clarence took an active part in the revolution of 1895 and were exiled.

"It is understood," says the advices, "that President Dole has replied to the demand, refusing to allow Ashford to land here. In close official circles it is believed that a British man-of-war will come here and Ashford will be landed without respect to the wishes of this government. The Hawaiian government will be firm in the matter and will probably appeal to the United States for aid."

The Ashford brothers are at present in this city, Volney Ashford being quite ill. He declined to discuss the news received. His brother said that when Volney was ready to return to Honolulu he would do so. At present, however, the probability of his early return was very remote.

M'GUFFEY'S READERS.

The Well Known Author of the School Books Dead.

Cincinnati special: Alexander H. McGuffey, author of a series of electric readers and spellers, known to the school children of several generations, is dead, at his Mount Auburn home, of old age. He was 80 years old.

Mr. McGuffey was born near Youngstown, Ohio, of Scotch parentage. He graduated from Miami University at 16, and became professor of belle lettres at Woodward College, and was admitted to the bar when he was 21. By the time he was 25, he had prepared several school books, some of which were first issued under his brother's name. He was a trustee of the Cincinnati University and the Cincinnati College, and took an active part in educational work.

Want Help at Once.

Mayor Walbridge of St. Louis, Mo., addressed a formal communication to Gov. Stone, asking him to call an extra session of the Legislature to make appropriations for rebuilding the city institutions destroyed by the tornado. The city hospital, the insane asylum, the Four Courts Building and poor-house are the buildings most needing repairs. The State uses all these institutions and the request receives the supports of all citizens as proper and just.

Austin Corbin Dead.

Austin Corbin, the multi-millionaire, died at Newport, N. H., from injuries received by the running away of horses attached to his carriage. The accident occurred while Corbin was driving from his estate and game preserve, accompanied by his grandson, Edgar Corbin, and the latter's tutor. The driver, John Stokes, also received injuries which caused his death.

State of Anarchy.

Telegrams from the Island of Crete indicate a state of anarchy in the whole western portion of the island. In numerous villages the Turks are besieged by the insurgent Christians. Wherever the Mohammedans are in a majority, they plunder and murder the Christians. The sound of battle in the villages is distinctly heard on board the war ships in Suda Bay.

Woke the Town.

Four burglars blew open the big safe in Dapler & Moore's flour mill at Proctor, W. Va. The explosion was so violent as to awaken half the town, and dozens of citizens rushed out armed in pursuit of the burglars. One of the robbers, whose name is unknown, was shot through the hip and captured. The safe was badly wrecked, as was also the office.

Campos and Borrero Arrested.

Madrid special: The Cabinet has had a long discussion over the Campos-Borrero affair. They decided to prevent the duel, and as a result of the discussion both men have been placed under arrest in their homes. General Borrero refuses to retract his offensive statement and prefers to resign the command of the Fifth Army Corps.

Destructive Landslide.

Hot Springs (S. D.) special: A land slide at the power house used for the generation of electricity for the incandescent light system almost completely destroyed the plant, burying the dynamos and the building in which it is located. All the workmen escaped. It will require two months to repair the damage.

Against Mrs. Maybrick.

London special: In the House of Commons Sir Matthew White Ridley, Home Secretary, said, in reply to questions, that he saw no reason for extending any clemency to Florence Maybrick, who is serving a life term of imprisonment in Woking prison for the murder of her husband.

Fourteen Saloons Closed.

In compliance with remonstrances, the Board of Commissioners rejected seven applications for licenses at Vincennes, Ind., forcing fourteen saloons to close in that county under the Nicholson law.

Judge Decides Against Niblack.

In the suit of William C. Niblack, as receiver of the Columbia National Bank at Chicago, brought against the Cincinnati Valley National Bank to compel the allowance of a claim on two certificates of deposit amounting to $9,325, Judge Sage found for the defendant.

Steel Plant Is Shut Down.

As a result of a riot, in which a crowd of white strikers stormed a car filled with colored laborers, who had taken their places in the Illinois steel mills at Chicago, the Bridgeport plant of the Illinois Steel Company was shut down for an indefinite period.

WATER IS POISONED.

Dead Fish and Refuse in White River at Indianapolis.

At Indianapolis, a sensation was caused Sunday night by an official warning from police headquarters to patrons of the Indianapolis Water Company to refrain from using the water, the authorities giving notice that it had been poisoned by dead fish and refuse from the strawboard works at Noblesville, and that serious risk of life attended its use. During the evening several cases of sickness from drinking the water were reported to the health authorities and later Police Sergeants Schwab and Crane noticed something wrong with the water while drinking at one of the company's hydrants. Mrs. Lewis Hays, wife of a druggist at Indiana avenue and Michigan street, was taken violently ill immediately after drinking it, and her case fully confirmed the authorities in the belief that the water had been poisoned. Other cases followed, until half a dozen or more were reported to the health officers, and the police were then ordered to arouse the people living along their beats and warn them against further use of the water. For the last month thousands of fish have been floating in White river, between Indianapolis and Noblesville, and the stench from the decaying matter has been terrible. Farmers and others along the river have complained about the dead fish, but no steps have been taken to prevent the company at Noblesville from permitting their refuse to find its way to the river since an injunction was granted against it several years ago. The company then dug two ponds for the refuse, and from these the matter has got into the river.

MONEY IS PAID OVER.

Chicagoans Have Raised the Full Guaranty of $40,000 for the Convention.

Monday the sub-committee of the national Democratic committee, with Chairman Harrity at its head, met in Chicago to receive the final payment of $11,000, making the sum total of the $40,000 guaranty fund, from the local committee. It was learned long before the hour appointed for the meeting between the two committees that the money was in hand, and that there would be no further hitch in the convention arrangements, at least so far as financial considerations were concerned. The afternoon was devoted to another inspection of the convention hall. So far the work has progressed most satisfactorily, and there is no doubt now that the Democratic national convention in Chicago will be held in one of the best-appointed and most suitable convention halls in the world. Secretary Sheerin will distribute the press privileges, put the finishing touches to the telegraphic arrangements, and see to it that the press accommodations are flawless. Committeeman Sherley, who is in charge of the decorations, will spare no pains in providing for the beautifying of the great hall.

DEATH TO HUNDREDS.

Frightful Accident Attends a Public Feast at Moscow.

One of the most terrible disasters that ever overtook the common people of Russia happened Saturday in Moscow, when over 1,000 persons were killed or received injuries from which they afterward died in a panic on Khodijnskoje plain, precipitated during festivities in honor of the coronation of the Czar. The official report places the number of dead at over 2,500. Most of these persons were instantly trampled to death, and the spectacle presented when the portion of the plain on which the stampede took place was cleared of the survivors was sickening in the extreme. The crowd was awaiting the signal to dine at tables laid out of doors and the distribution of presents from the royal house when the disaster occurred. The immediate cause of it was the pitching into the midst of the dense throng assembled gifts, for which a wild scramble was made. The Czar has given orders that the sum of 1,000 roubles be given to each bereaved family and that the victims be buried at his expense.

Moscow's Day of Mourning.

Monday was a day of funerals in Moscow, 1,277 victims of the disaster on Hodynsky Plain being buried. The bodies of those who were identified were interred in private graves, but at the expense of the municipality. The great number of the unidentified dead were buried in eleven great trenches, each fifty yards long. The trenches were deep, and the mutilated bodies were placed close together to find room for all. The surviving friends and relatives are for the most part of the ignorant and simple minded peasant class, and their grief and terror at the sudden calamity are expressed in demonstrative fashion. Only about half the bodies recovered have been identified, and the majority of these are men, though there are many children and several old people, some 80 years old. Most of the private graves of the victims have been marked with wooden crosses. The clothes of the victims were heaped in a huge pile in one corner of the cemetery, and in this the people rummaged all day long seeking the slightest trace that would afford a clew to the fate of those missing. It is estimated now that a total of 3,600 persons were killed and 1,200 persons injured, the majority of them fatally, by the disastrous crush. In the afternoon the Czar and Czarina visited the Marie hospital, where they spoke to and consoled the patients injured in Saturday's crush.

The Hawley Bill.

Senator Hawley, from the Committee on Military Affairs, has reported his bill for the reorganization of the militia. The bill is a recodification of the laws relating to the militia, with such changes as are necessary to adapt them to existing conditions. The bill provides for two classes of militia, the organized and the unorganized, the former to be known as the national guard, and the latter as the reserve militia. It appropriates $400,000 annually for the purchase of military stores and supplies to be issued to the militia of the various States. The bill also permits the use of United States forts by the militia, upon the application of the Governors of the States, as a campground and authorizes the use of the guns belonging to any fort for purposes of drill by any militia company.

Recession in Values Noted.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says: "Continued exports of gold, amounting to $3,900,000, are recognized as natural results of the borrowing and importing early in the year, but caused no serious apprehension. There is a general conviction that destructive schemes will not succeed, although at present political uncertainties cause part of the business that might be done to be postponed until the future is more clear. Markets for products are weak, rather than stagnant. The business done is small, but largely governed by the belief in large crops and insufficient demand."

Decision Against Britain.

A Cairo dispatch to the London Times says the decision of the mixed tribunal is an open secret. It will support the French contention, and thus virtually decide that the Egyptian Government cannot make war against the khalifa, or even resist a Soudanese invasion, without consent of each member of the debt commission.

Portland's Reform Mayor.

In speaking of his policy as Mayor, ex-Gov. and Mayor-elect Pennoyer said: "I shall endeavor to reduce expenses wherever I can to meet the existing conditions, and I will now say what I could not well say and what I did not say before election—that while I am endeavoring to faithfully discharge my duty as Mayor, I shall take but one-half the salary. That salary should come down with the general decline of prices and values, and I shall see that it does come down." The Mayor's salary is now $5,000 a year.

ARMOUR'S ESCAPE.

Vicarious Punishment Is Meted, However, to Their Manager, A. I. Valentine.

The directors of the Chicago Board of Trade at midnight Wednesday voted to find that the charges against Philip D. Armour, Jonathan O. Armour and P. D. Armour, Jr., comprising the great packing and elevator firm of Armour & Co., had not been sustained. The complaint was that the Armour Elevator Company's warehouses, "A," "B" and "B Annex," were regarded by the firm as one house and that grain transferred from one to another was not inspected in passing or any inspection fee paid to the board for the transfer. At the same time it was charged that the warehouse receipts were redated so that the traders who had grain stored there had not time to get it removed and so were obliged to pay storage. However, the same charges against Alastair I. Valentine, manager of the Armour system of elevators, were sustained and after a bitter fight over the question of punishment it was decided to suspend him for twenty years. The disposition of the cases of the millionaire packer and his two sons was easier of accomplishment, for only three directors voted to find them guilty as charged in the complaint of the committee. But a verdict wholly exonerating them, or, rather, declaring that the charges had no foundation in fact, was prevented by that element in the board which is hostile to the packer.

BLACKBURN THE HERO.

Kentucky Democrats' Favorite Candidate for the Presidency.

At the Kentucky Democratic State convention at Lexington Wednesday, there were eleven district conventions held in the forenoon to select delegates to the national Democratic convention at Chicago, the silver men controlling nine out of the eleven districts, so that the Kentucky delegation, with its four free-silver delegates-at-large, stands almost solid for the white metal. Senator Blackburn continued the hero of the occasion, many addressing him as the Kentucky favorite for President. The Blackburn men, or the free-silver advocates, have secured control of the committees of the convention as well as of the State committee, but Senator Blackburn counseled for conservative action in the district convention as well as in the State convention. The gold-standard men, except in the Louisville districts, took little part in the proceedings of the district conventions.

TEUTONS ARE GRASPING.

Germany Reaching Out After the Markets of the World.

In a special report to the State Department showing how Germany is reaching out in her competition with Great Britain and France for the control of the markets of the world, United States Consul Monoghan at Chemnitz touches upon the importation of cotton, which comes to Germany in large quantities from India, Egypt, and the United States, Saxony alone taking 5,000 or 6,000 bales weekly. The Saxon merchants buy all of their American cotton in Liverpool and Bremen instead of buying from Memphis, Galveston, Atlanta, and New Orleans direct. Letter after letter has been sent in vain to influential men in the South, urging them to exploit the German market.

River and Harbor Bill Is a Law.

The Senate Wednesday passed the rivers and harbor bill over the President's veto by the vote of 56 to 5. This was the last step in making the bill effective and it is now a law. The vote was taken after three hours of spirited debate, during which the President was criticised and defended, the remarks at times being directly and bitterly personal. The opposition to the veto was expressed by Senators Vest, Sherman, Pettigrew, Hawley and Butler, while the veto was defended by Senators Vilas, Hill and Bate.

Quay Has Quit.

Senator Quay now concedes the nomination of McKinley on the first ballot in the St. Louis convention and gave out figures Monday night to back up his opinion. This is the first time the Pennsylvania leader has publicly admitted the certainty of the nomination of Maj. McKinley. According to Mr. Quay's list McKinley will receive 479 votes on the first ballot, or 19 more than are necessary to assure his nomination.

Falls from a Church Tower.

Arthur McHenry, a carpenter, slipped from the tower of St. John's German Lutheran Church at Springfield, O., and plunged headlong to the ground, sixty feet below. He died two hours afterward.

Three Tramps Killed in a Wreck.

AFTER THE TORNADO

Storm-Stricken Cities Now Face the Future.

BRAVE AND HOPEFUL.

Thousands Are Busy Clearing Away Wreckage.

Story of Violence, Terror, Ruin, Desolation and Death—Burying the Dead and Caring for the Injured, Hungry and Homeless—Close Estimate of the Property Damage—Thousands Go to View the Storm's Work—Pen Picture of the Horrors the People of St. Louis Have Endured.

Bruised and torn and bleeding, staggering from the force of the blow, but still reliant and confident in her own strength, the city of St. Louis is standing in the view of hundreds of thousands of visitors, a beautiful picture even in her misery and pain. Though 200 of her children were torn from her by the merciless wind, and scores are lying in the hospitals on beds of agony, she is rallying her superb resources ready to begin again the march of progress. Property worth millions was snatched from her bosom, and from the fair surface of her vicinage huge factories, beautiful dwellings, gigantic elevators and thousands of homes of the poor have been razed. Dazed and half bleeding, she has struggled to her feet, groping in the darkness of affliction.

Her little neighbor is scarcely able to move. The full force of the storm that laid her waste was not lost in the long and remarkable voyage across the river. Out of a population of nearly three-quarters of a million St. Louis lost two hundred souls. East St. Louis has scarcely a family in her limits that does not number in its membership one dead or wounded. The list of victims to the fury of the wind runs up to 150, and to say who is injured would be to enumerate one-half the population of the bustling little community. Weaker than St. Louis, in that she lacks the size and wealth, she is strong in her own might. With the assistance of the outside world she will recover from the blow in time and her blocked streets will again be the thoroughfares full of teams and men they were before the terrible visitation. But in the history of the world, the disaster that overtook the sister cities will live on and on as the greatest of modern times.

EAST ST. LOUIS CITY HALL.

VIEW ON SIXTH STREET, ST. LOUIS—TYPICAL SCENE IN THE SOUTHWESTERN PART OF THE CITY.

Birth of the Tornado.

On that fateful Wednesday afternoon the clouds formed in conclave over St. Louis. For months, weeks they had been hovering in an atmosphere that made them worried and restless. They were surcharged with energy generated by excessive heat and they were surly. They thirsted for rapine and slaughter. Down below them myriads of mortals ran about the streets of the big city like ants, each carrying out his part in the daily journey of the world. Across the river dense volumes of smoke arose and from the many railroad yards the shriek of locomotive whistles mingled with the rumble of moving cars. The great stock yards and the rolling mills and the foundries were adding their quota to the atmosphere that was irritating the vapory masses in the sky.

Traitorously the storm crept upon the city, and even as the people wondered why the shadows of vapor were behaving in a manner so unusual they framed their battle front and brought to being the tornado, the child of unusual atmospheric conditions, the concentration of the power of the elements. In less than ten minutes it caused damage to property that cannot be replaced in years and loss of life horrible to dwell upon. It swept a city from end to end, attacked a swollen river, lined with shipping, made of it a waste of muddy water, showing here and there on its surface a wreck, and rushed on through the little city across the bridge, demolishing it most utterly. It left behind a long trail of blood and twisted ruin.

When the force of the wind abated from every door and every place of shelter men and women swarmed with blanched faces and trembling lips. Every thoroughfare was a vista of broken signs, overturned vehicles, ground and shattered glass and twisted wires. Lights were snuffed out by the fury of the gale and the wonderful current that propels so many of the cars of the city was rendered useless. In the downtown business districts, where the damage was slight, the streets were crowded with citizens anxious to get to their homes to reassure loved ones. All felt that a dreadful calamity had occurred, but none could say the extent of it.

While the news of all the fatalities was being circulated in the manner that news was circulated in the olden time, when town criers were the chroniclers of the events of the day, night was falling rapidly. The telephone system of the city was useless and the rapid transit conveyances stood idle in the streets. Light was at a premium. Candles were called into requisition and gas jets that had not seen service for years were pressed into use. The streets were wildernesses of risk. On every hand the wires were spitting and snapping and from roofs pieces of debris were falling suddenly and without warning. An hour before the usual time the town was buried in a black pall as in a dungeon. Out of the west came another storm, resembling the first, and terrified mortals fled from it wildly and aimlessly. All the time the rain beat down desperately.

Night came on a city thoroughly and pitifully demoralized. In all its vast extent there was not a man who knew what had been accomplished by the terrible wind.

Ghastly Tales Told.

About 7 o'clock the eastern horizon took on a ruddy appearance, and through the blinding rain long tongues of fire could be seen mounting high in the air. East St. Louis was on fire. There were fires to the south and to the east and to the west. The city was walled in with flames on three sides and the streets were impassable.

Out of the confusion and chaotic spawn of rumors, it became soon apparent that the bulk of the damage had been done in South and East St. Louis. No one knew the extent of it and all feared to guess. That it was unprecedented was intuitively surmised. Up in the city, where the full force of the charge of the angry clouds was not felt, the ruin gave a faint indication of what it was where the tornado had mowed a path through the solid evidences of the industry of man. A steady stream of travel took its way toward the south and all night long it ebbed and flowed out of scenes of misery and devastation into scenes of devastation and misery. The rain did service in putting out numerous fires the firemen could not reach and then died slowly and sullenly, as though angry at being called upon to render any succor to the victims of its allied friends, the wind and the clouds.

To the Rescue.

Brave men, with heads cool and hearts true, realized, as soon as the full fury of the visitation was spent, that there was work for them to do. The City Dispensary naturally became the central point of news and succor. Every minute news of fresh horrors was received. Ambulances began to reach the city hall loaded down with wounded and dead before any measures looking to their care could be taken. Physicians, full of energy, willing to do their part, came from every district in the city that had not been touched by the storm. Volunteers poured in from every direction, ready to dig and delve or do anything to assist the authorities. Eight hours followed such as never before were ticked off by the clocks of St. Louis; eight hours of terror and uncertainty. The innermost recesses of the highest mountain ranges were scarcely more difficult of access than were the stricken districts. A darkness that seemed all the more impenetrable because it was experienced by a people unused to darkness, hid the view of one side of the street from pedestrians on the other. Wires hung at all angles or lay on the ground, tripping those who tried to cross them at every step. Telegraph poles were spread in every direction in the downtown districts and the remnants of buildings that had stood the brunt of the storm were stacked up like small hills on every corner. Those who ventured into that portion of the city lying south of Clark avenue took their lives in their hands. It was like defying fate to plunge into the vortex of ruin, but fate was defied. Trucks loaded with firemen were sent out to clear roads leading to the hospital from South St. Louis. Then men on them were equipped with wire cutters and axes, and they blazed paths through piles of wreckage.

SCENE IN HICKORY STREET.

The bulk of the horror of the night was grouped at the morgue, at the City Dispensary and at the hospital on Seventeenth and Pine streets. Down the narrow alley back of the city hall ambulance after ambulance swung in, loaded down with suffering humanity. The limited quarters were a repository for the misery of days crowded into hours. Nearly all the victims brought in were completely naked, stripped by the violence of the storm. Speed was necessary in treating them and the gentle, kindly words of the surgeon who has plenty of time were not spoken. It was hurry, hurry, hurry. A man with one fractured leg would give way on an operating table to a man with both legs fractured, or a woman with her tender flesh hanging in shreds. Little children, torn and crushed, were brought in and laid before the surgeons, their shrill cries and pitiful moans contrasting with the howls of the more powerful adults. They came in a swift stream that seemed to be without end, all night long, and it appeared to those who handled them that the sights and sounds grew more terrible as the hours crept by.

Among the Mangled.

The scenes at the hospital were a repetition of those at the dispensary. It was at the morgue that the full force of the disaster was brought to the understanding. The little slate-colored building on Twelfth and Spruce was the magnet that drew a funeral procession, radiating from every part of the South Side. First, the slabs were filled in the usual way, one body to a slab, and then two slabs were placed together and made the resting place for four bodies. Still the corpses came. They were dumped in like grist into a mill. The slabs were soon crowded and the ice boxes were put in use. It took but a short time to fill the boxes and the doors were closed for a few minutes, while a general shifting of the mutilated forms was made. The next time the doors were opened from six to eight bodies were placed on a slab and the boxes were filled to the top, as a boy piles wood into the big box behind the kitchen stove. When all the receptacles provided for the use of the dead were full to overflowing, the tired morgue attaches laid the bodies on the floor, and those who came to search for loved ones were confronted by a spectacle well fit to stagger a grave digger.

All night long St. Louis and East St. Louis were cities alone in their terrible desolation, almost entirely cut off from communication with the rest of the world, and without exception the streets of this city were dark tunnels, and her homes were the homes of fearful people. Dead and dying, death and injury, were the sole topic of conversation. To those who slept came dreams of rushing storms carrying the bloody victims of its fury in outstretched arms. To those who spent the night in work in the devastated district came a surfeit of sickening experiences that will haunt them for months to come. And in all the horror of the black night and its terrible developments reigned a feeling of dread for what might be disclosed by the day. When the first gray coloring in the eastern sky gave evidence of the coming of the light, the watchers gazed with mingled feelings of thankfulness and fear. Objects became discernible dimly as the sun mounted higher on the course of his daily journey, emphasizing the ruin that was rather felt than seen in the gloom of the night.

After the Storm.

The first reports of the great storm were considerably exaggerated, as is usually the case when such a calamity occurs. It was impossible in the confusion and darkness to obtain definite information, and the stories of havoc and fatality were magnified by the exciting influences of the situation. The number of killed, which was hastily estimated at 1,000, is now known to be less than 500 for St. Louis and East St. Louis, while the destruction of property may be put at not to exceed $5,000,000. It is impossible to tell how many were wounded, but the list is likely to be several times as large as that of the dead; and there are hundreds of houseless and destitute families, thankful in their distress that they escaped with their lives. The work of succoring the needy is being carried on with all possible diligence and effectiveness. There was a quick response of public sympathy and charity to the demands of the occasion, and well organized efforts of relief give assurance that no suffering will be neglected and no means spared to restore general comfort and happiness. It will take some time to repair the property damages, but the undertaking is already in progress and will be pushed forward with characteristic American pluck and enterprise until the last vestige of the misfortune is removed.

It will take at least two years to repair the damage done by the tornado. It is estimated that in St. Louis at least 7,500 houses were destroyed, although the officials of the building commissioners' office are inclined to place it at 10,000. The number of buildings destroyed or damaged at East St. Louis will not fall below 500, which means a loss from which the Illinois town will not recover in many years. The tornado was not a respecter of classes, and made no distinctions. It swept away the palaces of wealth as well as the hovels of the poor. It spared neither institutions of mercy nor the monuments of productive industry. While the money value of the damage is estimated in aggregate at not over $5,000,000, these figures do not convey an adequate idea of the tremendous losses sustained by the great catastrophe. The losses entailed by suspended business operations and the money that will be required to clear away the wrecked factories, blocks and dwellings will swell the total loss to an incredible figure.

THE ST. LOUIS TORNADO IN THE HEART OF THE CITY.

KILLED BY THE WIND.

Nearly One Thousand Lives Blown Out in the Last Sixty Days.

Nearly 1,000 persons have been killed by tornadoes and windstorms of lesser violence during the last sixty days. The figures at hand show the number of dead to be 795, a total that will undoubtedly be swelled to much larger proportions when the full loss of life at St. Louis is ascertained.

THE SILENT SHORE.

BY JOHN BLOUNDELLE BURTON.

PROLOGUE.

"And you are certain of the year he was married in?"

"Perfectly—there is no possibility of my being mistaken. He was married on New Year's Day, '58; I was born in May, '59."

Two men, both about the same age, twenty-five, were seated in a private room at an inn, known as the Hotel Bellevue, at Le Vocq, a dreary fishing town with a good though small harbor, a dozen miles west of Havre.

Down below the cliff on which the inn stood, the port was visible, and in the port was to be seen an English cutter, the Electra, in which the friends had run for Le Vocq when the storm, that had now been raging for twenty-four hours, broke upon them.

The first night in the inn, to which they had come up after seeing the yacht made snug and comfortable in the harbor below, and the sailors left in charge of her also provided for, passed easily enough.

They had stood all the morning looking out of the window disconsolately, had smoked pipes and cigarettes innumerable, and had yawned a good deal.

"What are we to do to prevent ourselves from dying of ennui, Philip?" the one asked the other.

"Jerry," the other answered solemnly, "I know no more than you do. There is nothing left to read, and soon—very soon, alas!—there will be nothing left to smoke."

The one called Philip began looking about the salon that was at their disposal, whistling plaintively, and peering into the cupboards, of which there were two.

"Hullo!" he suddenly exclaimed, "here is a great mental treat for us—a lot of old books; and precious big ones, too! I wonder what they are? Ah! old registers of bygone years."

"Nevertheless, let us see them," the other answered; "at any rate we shall learn what kind of company the house has kept."

So, obeying his behest, Philip brought them out, and they sat down "to begin at the beginning," as they said laughingly; and each took a volume and commenced to peruse it.

Every now and then they told one another of some name they had come across, the owner of which was known to them by hearsay, and they agreed that the "Hotel Bellevue" had, in its day, had some very good people for its guests.

They found several titles—English—inscribed in the pages of the register, and also many prominent names belonging to the same nationality.

"Probably half these people have occupied this very sitting room at some time or other," Philip said to Gervase. "I only wish some of them were here now, and that——"

He stopped at a sudden exclamation of his friend, who was gazing fixedly at the page before him.

"What kind of a find is it now, Jerry?" he asked. "Any one very wonderful?"

"It must be a mistake," the other said in a low voice. "And yet how could such a mistake happen? Look at this!" and he pointed with his finger to a line in the book.

"Why!" the other exclaimed, as he read, "Aout 17, 1854, L'Hon. Gervase Occleve and wife." Then he said, "Your father, of course, before he inherited his title?"

"Of course! There never was any other Gervase Occleve in existence, except myself, while he was alive. But what can it mean?"

"It means that your father knew this place many years ago, and came here; that is all, I should say. It is a coincidence, but after all it is no more strange that he should know Le Vocq than that you should."

"But you don't see the curious part of it, Philip! My father had no wife in 1854! He never had a wife until he married my mother, and then he was Lord Penlyn and no longer known as Gervase Occleve."

And then followed the conversation with which this story opens.

"It is a strange thing," Philip said, "but it must be a mistake."

After a few moments spent in thought, Gervase turned to his friend and said, "The landlord, the man who stared so hard at me yesterday when we came in, was an elderly person. He may have had the hotel in '54, might even remember this mysterious namesake of mine. I think I will ask him to come up."

In a few minutes the landlord tapped at the door. When he had received an invitation to enter, he came into the room and bowed respectfully, but, as he did so, Lord Penlyn again noticed that his eyes were fixed upon him with a wondering stare; a stare exactly the same as he had received on the previous day when they entered the hotel.

"We found these registers in your cupboard, and, for want of anything else to read, we took them down and have been amusing ourselves with them. I hope we did not take a liberty," began Gervase. "In going through this book—the one of 1854—I have come upon a name so familiar to me, the name of Gervase Occleve, that——"

But before he could finish his sentence the landlord jumped up from his chair, and was speaking rapidly while he gesticulated in a thorough French fashion.

"Occleve—of course," he cried. "That is the face. Sir, Milor! I salute you! When you entered my house yesterday, I said to myself, 'But where have I seen him? Or is it but the spirit of some dead one looking at me out of his eyes?' And now that you mention to me the name of Occleve, then in a moment he comes back to me and I see him once again. Ah! Milor! but when I regard you, then in verity he returns to me, and I recall him as he used to sit in this very room—in that very chair in which you now sit."

The young men had both stared at him with some amazement as he spoke hurriedly and excitedly, repeating himself in his earnestness, and now as he ceased, Gervase said:

"Do I understand you to say, then, that I bear such a likeness to this man, whose name is inscribed here, as to recall him vividly to you?"

"Yes, you are his son! It must be so. There is only one thing that I do not comprehend. You bear a different name."

"He became Lord Penlyn later in life, and at his death that title came to me."

"And so he is dead! He can scarcely have lived the full space of man's years. And Madame your mother? She is well?"

For a moment the young man hesitated. Then he said:

"She is dead, too."

"Pauvre dame," the landlord said, and as he spoke it seemed as though he was talking to himself. "She was bright and happy in those days so far off, bright and happy once; and she, too, is gone. And I, who was older than either of them, am left! But, Lord Penlyn," he said, readdressing himself to his guest, "you look younger than your years. It is thirty years since you used to run about these sands outside and play; I have carried you to them often——"

"You carried me to those sands thirty years ago! Why, I was not——"

"Stop!" Philip Smerdon said to him in English, and speaking in a low tone. "Do you not see it all? Say no more."

Later on, when the landlord had left the room after insisting upon shaking the hand of "the child he had known thirty years ago," Gervase said:

"So he who was so stern and self-contained, who seemed to be above the ordinary weaknesses of other men, was, after all, worse than the majority of them. I suppose he left this poor woman when he married my mother, I suppose he left the boy, for whom this man takes me—to starve or to become a thief preying on his fellow men. It is not pleasant to think that I have an elder brother who may be an outcast, perhaps a felon!"

"I should not take such a pessimistic view of things as that," Philip said. "For aught you know, the lady he had with him here may have died between 1854 and 1858, and, for the matter of that, so may the boy; or he may have made a good allowance to both when he parted with them. For anything you know to the contrary he might have seen the boy frequently until his death and have taken care to place him comfortably in them world."

"In such a case I must have known it. I must have met him somewhere."

So well did the landlord remember Mr. Occleve's face, even after all these years, that ever since Lord Penlyn had been in the house he had been puzzling his brains to think where he had seen him before. He certainly should not, he said, have remembered the child he had played with so often, but that his likeness to his father was more than striking. To Madame, his mother, he saw no resemblance at all.

"But I did not tell him," he said to himself afterwards, as he sat in his parlor below; "I did not tell him that on the second summer a gloom had fallen over them, and that I often saw her in tears, and heard him speak harshly to her. Why should I disturb the poor young man's meditations on his dead father and mother?"

On the next day the storm was over, and the Electra was skimming over the waves and leaving the dreary French coast far behind it.

"It hasn't been a pleasant visit," Lord Penlyn said to Philip, as they leant over the bows smoking their pipes and watching Le Vocq fade gradually into a speck. "I would give something never to have heard that story!"

"It is the story of thirty years ago," his friend answered. "And it is not you who did the wrong. Why let it worry you?"

"I cannot help it! And—I dare say you will think me a fool!—but I cannot also help wondering on which of my father's children—upon that other nameless and unknown one, or upon me—his sins will be visited!"

CHAPTER I.

Ida Raughton sat, on a bright June day of that year, in her pretty boudoir, looking out on the well-kept gardens of a West End square, and thinking of an important event in her life that was now not very far off—her marriage. The wedding day was fixed for the 1st of September. Her future husband was Gervase Occleve, Viscount Penlyn.

She was the only daughter of Sir Paul Raughton, a wealthy Surrey baronet, and had been to him, since her mother's death, as the apple of his eye—the only thing that to him seemed to make life worth living.

That she should have made a sensation during her first season was not a thing to astonish Sir Paul, nor, indeed, any one else. Ida Raughton was as thoroughly beautiful a girl, when first she made her appearance in London society, as any who had ever taken their place in its ranks.

Tall and graceful, and possessed of an exquisitely shaped head, round which her auburn hair curled in thick locks; with bright hazel eyes, whose expression varied in accordance with their owner's thoughts and feelings, sometimes sparkling with laughter and mirth, and sometimes saddened with tears as she listened to any tale of sorrow; with a nose the line of which was perfect, and a mouth, the smallness of which disguised, though it could not hide, the even, white teeth within, no one could look at Ida without acknowledging how lovely she was. Even other and rival debutantes granted her loveliness, and the woman who can obtain such a concession as this from her sisters has fairly established her right to homage.

As she sat in her boudoir window on this June day, thinking of her now definitely settled marriage, she was wondering if the life before her would be as bright and happy as the one she was leaving behind forever.

That, with the exception of the death of her mother, a sorrow that time had mercifully tempered to her, had been without alloy. Would the future be so?

There was no reason to think otherwise, she reflected; no reason to doubt it. Lord Penlyn was young, handsome and manly, the owner of an honored name and well endowed with the world's goods. Yet that would not have weighed with her had she not loved him.

She had asked herself if she did love him several times before she consented to give him the answer he desired, and then she acknowledged that he alone had won her heart.

She recalled other men's attentions to her, their soft words, their desire to please; how they had haunted her footsteps at balls and at the opera, and how no other man's homage had been so sweet to her as the homage of Gervase Occleve.

It was supposed by some of their circle—though erroneously supposed, she told herself—that another man loved her. Perfectly erroneously, because that other man had never breathed one word of love to her; and because, though he would sometimes be in her society continually for perhaps a week, and then be absent for a month, he never, during all the time they were thus constantly meeting, paid her more marked attention than other men were in the habit of doing.

Yet, notwithstanding this, it had come to her knowledge that it had been whispered about that Walter Cundall loved her.

This man, Walter Cundall, this reported admirer of hers, was well known in society, was in a way famous, though his fame was in the principal part due to the simplest purchaser of that commodity—to wealth.

He gave dinners that men and women delighted in getting invitations to; but it was noticed that, though his chef was a marvel, he rarely ate anything but the soup and joint himself, and that, while others were drinking the best wine that Burgundy, or Ay, or Rheims could produce, he scarcely ever quenched his thirst with anything but a tumbler of claret.

But he would sit at the head of his table with a smile of satisfaction upon his handsome face, contented with the knowledge that his guests were happy and enjoying themselves.

This man of whom Ida was now thinking, and whose story may be told here, had commenced life at Westminster School, to which he had been put by his uncle, a rich owner of mines and woods in Honduras, from which place he paid flying visits to England once a year, or once in two years.

The boy was an orphan, left by his mother to her brother's care, and that brother had not failed in his trust.

The lad went to Westminster with the full understanding that Honduras must be his home when school days were over; but he knew that it would be a home of luxury and tropical splendor. There, after his school days, he passed some years of his life, attending to the mines, seeing to the consignments of shiploads of mahogany and cedar, going for days in the hills with no companions but the Mestizos and the Indians, and helping his uncle to garner up more wealth that was eventually destined to be his.

Once or twice in the space of ten years he came to Europe, generally with the object of increasing their connection with London or Continental cities, and of looking up and keeping in touch with his old school-fellows and friends.

And then, at last, two or three years before this story opens, and when his uncle was dead, it came to be said about London that Walter Cundall, the richest man from the Pacific to the Gulf of Honduras, had taken a house in Grosvenor place, and meant to make London more or less permanently his residence. Other places had been purchased one by one, and he used all his possessions—sharing them with his friends by turn; but London was, as people said, his home. Occasionally he would go off to Honduras on business, or would rush by the Orient express to St. Petersburg or Vienna; but he loved England better than any other spot on the globe, and never left it unless he was obliged to do so.

This was the man whom gossip had said was the future husband of Ida Raughton—this tall, dark, handsome man, who was, when in England, a great deal by her side.

But gossip had been rather staggered when it heard that, during Mr. Cundall's last absence of six months to the tropics, she had become the affianced wife of Lord Penlyn.

It wondered what he would say when he came back, as it heard he was about to do very shortly, and it wondered why on earth she had taken Penlyn when she might have had Cundall. It talked it over in the drawing rooms and the ball rooms, at Epsom and on the lawn at Sandown, but it did not seem to arrive at any conclusion satisfactory to itself.

"I suppose the fact of it is that Cundall never asked her," one said to another, "and she got tired of waiting."

Did she think so herself, as she sat there that bright afternoon? No, that could not be possible! Ida Raughton was a girl with too pure and honorable a heart to take one man when she loved another.

(To be continued.)

Ventriloquism in China.

A man who witnessed the performance gives the following description of what a ventriloquist in China did:

The ventriloquist was seated behind a screen, where there were only a chair, a table, a fan and a ruler. With the ruler he rapped on the table to enforce silence, and when everybody had ceased speaking there was suddenly heard the barking of a dog. Then we heard the movements of a woman. She had been waked by the dog, and was shaking her husband.

We were just expecting to hear the man and wife talking together, when a child began to cry. To pacify it the mother gave it food; we could hear it drinking and crying at the same time. The mother spoke to it soothingly and then rose to change its clothes.

Meanwhile another child had been wakened and was beginning to make a noise. The father scolded it, while the baby continued crying. By-and-by the whole family went back to bed and fell asleep. The patter of a mouse was heard. It climbed up some vase and upset it. We heard the clatter of the vase as it fell.

The woman coughed in her sleep. Then cries of "Fire! fire!" were heard. The mouse had upset the lamp; the husband and wife waked up, shouted and screamed, the children cried, thousands of people came running and shouting.

Children cried, dogs barked, the walls came crashing down, squibs and crackers exploded. The fire brigade came racing up. Water was pumped up in torrents, and hissed in the flames.

The representation was so true to life that every one rose to his feet and was starting away, when a second blow of the ruler on the table commanded silence. We rushed behind the screen, but there was nothing there except the ventriloquist, his table, his chair and his ruler.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

HISTORY OF M'KINLEYISM.

At every protectionist gathering and in every protectionist organ assertions are constantly being made about the effects of both the McKinley and Wilson tariff laws in which facts are either wholly disregarded or are so manipulated as to mislead all who may be induced to place the least faith in them. For instance, nothing could be more audaciously false than the general assumption by protectionist writers and speakers that the people of the United States were never so prosperous as during the years when McKinleyism was in full operation. This statement has been repeated over and over again, even on the floor of Congress, despite the fact that every person who has arrived at the age of discretion knows that it is not true.

It is worth while to take a retrospective glance at some of the events which occurred during the closing year of the Harrison administration—that being the time usually selected by the spellbinders as affording the best examples of the happy contentment with which the McKinley method of making people rich by taxing them inspired its beneficiaries. This much vaunted system of producing peace and plenty had then been in full swing for two years. If a tariff verging on the prohibitory could have brought about beneficial results the year 1892 should have been a year of incomparable prosperity. The actual facts, however, show quite the contrary.

In 1892 the surplus which was in the treasury when President Cleveland vacated his office in 1889 had entirely disappeared, while the national revenue from 1889 to 1892 had fallen short of the expenditure by nearly the same amount; and it was only by seizing the trust fund of $54,000,000 which had been deposited by the national banks to secure the redemption of their notes that Secretary Foster was enabled to avoid an issue of bonds. The importation of the raw materials necessary to the successful conduct of the business of manufacturing had become difficult and expensive, and in some cases impossible. Wages had been steadily going down till, in the latter half of 1892, the discontent of labor had become so fierce that in many places it amounted to insurrection. In June of that year the Iron League discharged 1,500 men because they were Knights of Labor, and the Homestead steel works closed, throwing 3,000 men out of work. In July an attempt was made to land Pinkerton men at Homestead; several of them were killed, and, on the 10th, the national guard of Pennsylvania was called out. On the 11th there was a battle between union and non-union miners at Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, and a number of men were killed. Martial law was declared, and on the 16th President Harrison, by proclamation, called on all persons in insurrection in Idaho to disperse. On the 18th warrants were issued for the Homestead leaders charged with the murder of Pinkerton guards. On the 22d the iron-workers at Duquesne struck, and on the 30th troops were summoned to that point. Aug. 1 the building trades in New York went on strike, and all buildings in that city stopped; but lack of funds and the vast number of idle men ready to take their places compelled many of the men to return to work, and the strike failed. On the 13th the miners in Eastern Tennessee rebelled against the competition of convict labor, and liberated the convicts in order to get rid of them. On the 14th the switchmen on the Lehigh Valley Railroad struck, and during the next two days troops were hurried into Buffalo. On the 17th the strike extended to the West Shore and New York Central switchmen, and more troops were called out. On the 19th and 20th one thousand Tennessee miners attacked the militia at Coal Creek and defeated them. On the 23d the switchmen on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad and also on the Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburg Railroad struck; these strikes failed. During the remaining days of August all the employes of Carnegie & Co. and of Schoenberger, Speer & Co., of Pittsburg, struck; these strikes also failed. During September the grand jury returned true bills for murder against 167 Homestead strikers, and the Coeur d'Alene miners were tried for conspiracy, and four were convicted. On October 12 the yardmen of the Big Four Railway struck; and on the 27th another hundred armed deputies were sent to Homestead. On Nov. 5 a general strike against a reduction of wages was ordered by the Amalgamated Council of New Orleans; it failed on the 11th. On the 17th and 18th 1,500 men abandoned the strike at Homestead and applied for reinstatement; they were taken back on signing an agreement not to join any labor organization. The month closed with the strike of the electric wire men and the failure of the Stone City (Ill.) Bank for half a million of dollars. The most significant event of November, however, was the election on the 8th, when the public discontent was expressed by the casting of 1,500,000 votes for absolutely new parties and principles. During December the telegraph operators on the Rock Island Railway system struck, and 5,000 men were discharged from the Chicago packing houses, owing to dull business. There were heavy shipments of gold, and a fall in the price of industrial stocks in the New York market.

Here is a very incomplete account, much curtailed for want of space, of the condition of the business of the country during the crowning year of McKinleyism. But 1892 was not the only year of trouble and disaster. The evil effects of Republican policies, financial and economic, were felt both before and after that year. The culmination came in the panic of 1893; and it was not until confidence had been restored and industry relieved by the abrogation or reduction of the duties on raw materials, that business began to resume its normal condition of prosperity. Practical people would do well to remember that like causes produce like results, everywhere and always, and that what McKinleyism did in the past it will certainly do in the future if they shall suffer themselves to be deluded by the lies and sophistries of its advocates.—Philadelphia Record.

"Prosperity" for Farmers.

The census reports show that in the twenty years from 1870 to 1890 the value of the farm lands in the great, wealthy and thickly populated State of New York fell from $1,272,875,705 to $968,127,286, a decline of more than $300,000,000. Between 1880 and 1890 the total number of farms decreased from 241,058 to 226,223, a reduction of 14,835.

No further testimony is needed to show that the farmers whose lands have thus decreased in value and those who were forced to give up their farms could not have been prosperous during the period referred to. All fair-minded men will agree that falling values and fewer farms are signs of a depressed farming industry.

The significance of these facts appears when it is remembered that from 1870 to 1890 the country had a high protective tariff, which taxed everything the farmers used, and discouraged foreign trade. All the time that farm values were shrinking the blessed tariff was getting in its best work. How do the American farmers like the results?

The McKinley boomers are howling that the restoration of the high taxation policy will bring prosperity. Before accepting these delusive promises would it not be well for sensible men to ask: "If twenty years of protection brought only depression to such a great farming State as New York what reason is there to believe that more protection would have a different effect?

Trifling with the Truth.

The American Economist, organ of the Protective Tariff League, weeps briny tears over the alleged decline of the Syracuse, N. Y., salt industry under the Wilson tariff. Claiming that there has been a falling off in production since 1892, owing to the abolition of the salt duty, the Economist says: "Yet the cost to the consumer has not been reduced."

Of course if the price of salt has not been reduced there would be no reason for complaint on the part of the American salt producers. But it so happens that there are trade journals which make it a business to collect and publish statistics of prices from year to year. In its last annual review of the prices of the principal articles of consumption Bradstreet's quotes the record of the price of salt per sack as follows:

In 1891, $1.05; 1892, $1; 1893, $1; 1894, 80 cents; 1895, 80 cents. These figures show that the prices of salt are now per cent lower than under the McKinley law. Yet the Economist brazenly asserts that the cost to the consumer has not been reduced. This is a fair sample of protectionist truthfulness.

Following a Blamed Poor Mother.

A Nebraska farmer who had lost a calf went in search of the runaway and found it with some stray steers. He tried to drive it home, but the foolish calf ran after one of the steers and went galloping over the prairie. Tired, hot and dusty, the farmer stopped and shook his fist at the calf, shouting: "Keep on, then, darn you, you'll soon find what kind of a blamed mother you've took up with."

The foolish farmers and workingmen who are running after McKinley may not listen to reason about the desert into which the high-tariff prophet is leading them. But if they keep on they will mighty soon find what kind of a blamed mother they are following.

Strip Off Their Shirts.

Senator Gorman yesterday proposed two perfectly sound and adequate measures for the relief of the treasury, but the Senate would have neither of them. Senator Sherman declared that he would "take the shirt off the people rather than violate our national credit." And yet he would agree to neither revenue taxes on tea and coffee nor to treasury certificates unless the Dingley buncombe higher-tariff bill were first accepted. After all propositions to increase the revenue had been rejected our wonderful Senate proceeded to pass a $10,763,000 fortification bill in the face of a treasury deficit of $30,000,000.—New York World.

Live and Let Live Illustrated.

A Rhode Island woolen manufacturer has raised the wages of his employes from 10 to 15 per cent. He made a cutdown about two years ago in order to keep his employes at work and his mill in constant operation. But now that business is again booming this true disciple of live and let live has rewarded those who stood by him at a sacrifice by sending checks to them covering the sum lost by the cutdown during the dull period. This sort of voluntary profit-sharing and loss-sharing between mill employers and their "hands" if made universal would soon leave socialism with nothing practical to contend for.—Boston Globe.

Nothing Good Endorsed.

The Senate has defeated the proposed beer tax, of course. It merely meant needed revenue from a proper source. There was no politics in it. It protected nobody. It gave nobody any advantage over his competitors in business for which he might be willing to pay in the shape of campaign-fund subscriptions. It was just a sensible, straightforward revenue tax, and so it had to be defeated.—New York World.

The Heritage of Successful Men.

The ruthless politician who poaches upon the preserves of favorite sons and publicly humiliates them in their own States invariably leaves a crop of heart burnings behind which may ripen into a harvest of regrets for him later on.—Kansas City Times.

The Farmers Lose by a High Tariff.

Our farmers lose doubly by a protective tariff, because they have to pay exorbitant prices for clothes and tools, and they are cut off from the markets of the world.—Kansas City Times.

WOMAN'S RIGHTS IN LOVE.

WOMAN'S rights! Why the very first right we expect is to be treated better than anybody else—better than men treat each other as a body, and better by the individual man than he treats all other women. I abominate the idea of equality and to be mentally slapped on the shoulder and told I am "a good fellow." I shirk from the idea of independence and cold, proud isolation with my emancipated sister-women, who struggle into their own coats unassisted, and get red in the face putting on their own skates, and hang on to a strap in the street car in the proud consciousness that they are independent and the equal of men. I never worry myself when a man is on his knees in front of me putting on my overshoes, as to whether he considers me his equal politically or not. It is sufficient satisfaction for me to see him there. If he hadn't wanted to save me the trouble I suppose he wouldn't have offered. He may even think I am not strong enough for such an arduous duty. That wouldn't hurt my feelings, either. I have an idea that he likes it better to think that I cannot do anything troublesome for myself than to believe that I could get along perfectly without him. In fact—here's heresy for you, oh, ye emancipated—I do not in the least mind being dependent on men—provided the men are nice enough. Let them give us all the so-called rights they want to. I shall never get over wanting to get behind some man if I see a cow. Let them give us a vote if they will. I shall want at least three men to go with me to the polls—one to hold my purse, one to hold my gloves, and the third to show me how to cast my vote.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Home-Made Flower Vase.

A charming flower vase may be made in the following manner: Cut imitation petals of the tiger lily in stiff white muslin; sew a tiny line of fine wire down the center of each leaf, and finally cover with white velvet, which should be gummed onto the muslin and then cut to its shape with very sharp scissors. When quite dry paint the dots and lines on each petal with oil paint, using it as dry as possible. Now make the stamens of wire, which must be painted, and gum an atom of brown velvet onto the top of each. Make a foundation of thin cardboard covered with silk or velvet, and sew the various petals and stamens into this, arranging them in as perfect a manner as possible. Draw them together so as to make a hollow space in the center of the flower, and into this insert an old vase or a cheap glass tumbler; tie this round about half way up, with a pretty, bright-colored ribbon, arranged as shown in the sketch, and use the tumbler itself for holding flowers, or even a small fern. Various flowers may be effectively copied in this way and used as a foundation for a pretty flower vase, the scarlet poppy, purple clematis, crimson peony and white water lily being among the most suitable for this purpose, while the cost is infinitesimal, as quite small scraps of material are usable, and even the crinkled papers make up very charmingly if velvet and silk are not at hand.

UNIQUE AND USEFUL.

The Witty Woman.

Wide reading is not good conversation and one may talk about a thousand things and not make one of them entertaining. A good talker must be a judge of character and must possess a sense of humor. If she lacks the first of these attributes she will not fit her topic to her companions. If she lacks the second neither man nor devil can save her from being frequently and mortally dull. Then no woman will ever talk really well if she is impressed with a desire to trot out her learning, to parade her long headedness and to show—discreetly—the blue stocking which she wears. We go to the dictionary when we want definitions, not to dinners. Nor will the truly witty woman deal in perpetual epigrams or fire off a bon-mot at every subject introduced. The witty woman will take as well as give, for she loves wit in others, and stirs it up by her sympathy and her pretty art of listening. She will be sparing of the fun and reticent of generalities. No woman has more success among men than the witty woman and, strange to say, even the stupid male adores her. The witty woman is one of the joys of life. Even if she has a large waist and small income she will find a welcome everywhere.

Evening Coiffure.

Gay Mackintoshes.

Mackintoshes are now classed among the summer novelties. The latest importations are wonderful to behold. One which is particularly light in weight is a brilliant scarlet in color striped with black lines and flecked with gold. Another is a large green and blue plaid conspicuous enough to attract attention wherever it may be worn. These mackintoshes have the long English cape and are made without sleeves.

Heavy Hats Injurious.

Heavy hats are condemned by the doctors as a serious means of producing headaches, wrinkled foreheads and gray hair; but the season's millinery apparently ignores any of these good reasons for the regulation of size and weight in headgear, and hats are larger and more heavily trimmed than ever. "Picture-hat headache" is a fashionable complaint just at present.

COOL, COMFORTABLE MORNING TOILETS.

Popular Fabrics for Summer Gowns.

New and striking effects in the way of cotton gowns always appear after the first of May. New cotton crepes, organdies, dimities and piques delight the eyes of every one able to wear cotton gowns. I say "able," for many women from climate, health or occupation are debarred from wearing any but woolen gowns. Even heavy Irish linen has been taken for midsummer wear, and gold lace appears on grass linen.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Three Uses of Glycerine.

Mixed with equal parts of bay rum it is a shaving lotion which soothes the skin and temper of the man who uses it. Rubbed on shoes it preserves the leather and renders it waterproof. A few drops of glycerine put in the fruit jars the last thing before sealing them will keep them from molding.

Rainy Day Skirts.

Bicycle dress has brought about a reformation for some women in skirts for rainy days. They are worn short enough to clear the ground by four or five inches. For women who cannot hold up their skirts neatly and at the same time effectually this fashion is a blessing.

Blindness May Result.

The use of belladonna to beautify the eyes is said to be a growing evil among women whose vanity oversteps the bounds of good sense, but if they persist in its use blindness is pretty sure to be the result.

Great Possibilities.

Audley, the great money-lender of the Stuart times, purchased an office in the Court of Wards, which practically placed the fortunes of what are now called "wards in chancery" in his hands; and to one who asked the value of it he replied: "It might be worth some thousands of pounds to him who, after his death, would instantly go to heaven; three times as much to him who would go to purgatory; and nobody knows to him who would venture further."

The foreign immigration to United States for the last year was the smallest since 1879. The total number of arrivals was 258,536.

Will Try It.

There is every day, additional evidence that people are determined to try the experiment of free silver. All the papers teem with it. All the money centers talk about it, expect it to be tried and are getting ready for it. Every state convention now being held and nearly every congressional convention, and even county conventions put in resolutions in favor of free silver. There is a growing feeling, that the danger will be less than was at first feared. There is a timely belief that such sapeguards will be thrown about the radical change proposed as to avoid what might otherwise be injurious results. There is a feeling, too, that if it is to be tried at all, it should be tried by the democratic party, which is as fully the natural friend of silver, as the republican party is of gold. The trial must be a fair one and not a half way matter. It must be an honest trial, made in good faith and by its friends. And best of all is the fact that on this issue and the tariff issue the party can be reunited, and again present an unbroken front to the common enemy of both a low tariff and silver money.

Democratic Caucus.

The democratic voters of DeKalb Co. and all others wishing to co-opererate with them are called to meet on Saturday June 13, 1896, at 2 p. m. at the usual place of holding their caucuses, for the purpose of selecting delegatas to the state convention, June 24, 1896, at Indianapolis, Ind.; also delegates to the county convention to be held in Auburn, on Saturday June 20, 1896, at 10 a. m. also delegates to the Judicial conheld in Auburn, Sat. June 20, '96, 12:30 p. m., also delegates to the Joint Representative convention to be held at Albion, Thursday June 18, 1895, at 1 p. m. The basis of representation to the above named convention is proportioned to the several townships as follows:

Township	State,	County,	Rep,	Jud.
Butler	½	7	1	1
Concord	1	20	2	2
Fairfield	1	19	2	2

Mrs. Elizabeth Reed

One of The Old Residents of Jackson Tp, Passes Away.

Tuesday's Daily.

The news was brought to town to-day of the death of Mrs. Elizabeth Reed who died at her home in Jackson tp. at 12 o'clock last night. Mrs. Reed has long been suffering from some lingering complaint. She was taken bedfast only about ten days ago and since that time she failed fast until she answered His summons. It is thought consumption was the cause. For a number of years Mrs. Reed has resided with her son on a small farm. She has labored hard during her life to make a success on the farm. Her son Charley was so afflicted that it was always necessary for her to be with him. But her labors are ended. She has joined the happy throng above. In her youth Mrs. Reed was a member of the M. E. church, but during the latter half of her life she lived a faithful and worthy member of the United Brethren church. Though she resided about ten miles from the church, she could most alway be found in her pew at any service. Mrs. Reed was bornin 1834, being 62 years of age at her death. She leaves brothers, sisters, and six children. Three daughters and one son reside in Auburn, namely: Mrs. Chas Picker, Mrs. Frank Furnish, Mrs. Lydia Donalson and James Reed, also a daughter Mrs. Jacob Carper, at Auburn Junction and the youngest son Charley who resided at home and scores of friends and neighbors mourn for her.

The funeral services will be held at the Hopewell church in Jackson township, June 10 at 2. p. m., Rev. J. D. Brosy of the Lutheran church officiating. The interment will take place in Evergreen cemetery beside her husband. Mrs. Reed said she was ready to die. She asked her neigbor, P. P. Lochner to select her pall bearer and helparrange for the funernal. She alsowanted Rev. Brosy to officiate.

BUTLER.

The bicycle works have laid off about twenty-five men owing to the failing orders. General indications point to an early and radical reduction in the price of these much prized pleasure, business and time saving machines.

Peter Bachtel was among the first to commence cutting clover in this vicinity. He commenced mowing on the fourth breaking any former known record in this township.

A first-class sensation took place on east Green street last Sunday morning, nothing less than the kidnapping of a little four year old girl. Frank Shimer a former resident of this place now living in Elkhart, married a daughter of Charles Pinchin several years ago. Mrs. Shimer died about three ago leaving the little girl to the care of her mother who has since cared for her under most trying circumstances as her husband has suicided. Mr. Shimer has again married and last Sunday morning suddenly appeared at the quiet residence of the old lady, and brutally beating the grandmother off, forcibly bore the child away, amid the cries and protests of the family and neighbors. The affair created much indignation. He was arrested later on at Kendallville and is now in custody.

Mrs. Nancy Hook, living on the south side, came near having a fire last week. Timely observation by neighbors saved her house.

T. C. Fralick, of Chicago, formerly of Butler, has sold their Garrett property and will build in Chicago.

J. A. Campbell and Curt Miller wheeled to Montpelier O., last Thursday. They witnessed a four to 0 ball game and a bicycle race, with 43 starters. Frank Fanning, of Butler, scoring third in the race.

JOHN R. MOODY.

John R. Moody, son of Daniel and Mary A. (Davis) Moody, was born April 12, 1817, in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, and died at his home in Auburn on the 2d day of June, 1896, being seventy-nine years, one month and twenty days old at the time of his death. At the age of eight years he removed to Stark county, Ohio, where he lived until he was nineteen years of age, at which time his parents and their entire family, consisting in all of thirteen children, removed to this county, and here he has almost continuously resided for the last sixty years. On the 28th of March 1840, he was married to Miss Mary Ann Patterson, a daughter of William Patterson, a resident of the state of New York. Immediately after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Moody moved upon their farm two miles west of Auburn where they resided until the year 1856, during which time there was born to them eight children, three sons and five daughters, six of whom are still living. These are: Caroline Hall, now dead; Daniel D. Moody and Mrs. Addie Fair, wife of Wm. H. Fair, these being twins; Wm. L. Moody, a resident of Payne, Ohio; Orrin S. Moody, who resides in Butler township; Ada and Ida Davie, also twins, who reside at Malcom, Iowa; and one, a twin of Caroline, died in infancy.

In the fall of 1856 Mr. Moody and his family removed to Butler township in this county, where they lived an unbroken family until February 1862, when the devoted wife and mother passed away.

In August, 1863, he was united in marriage with Mrs. Barbara E. Stoner, widow of Wm. Stoner, and daughter of Abram Fair, who survives him. By this union there was born to them one daughter, Mrs. Christena V. Zent, whose tender affection and loving fidelity have been for some time like a benediction to the deceased parent and the now bereaved mother.

All the children except the two daughters at Malcolm, Iowa, were present at his death, and followed the beloved form to its last resting place. He was interred near the old Butler township home, at Cedar Chapel, the services being at the home here in Auburn, at 10 a. m. of June 4, Rev. F. C. Colvin of the Presbyterian church officiated. Mr. Moody was one of the earliest settlers in this county and among the best known. As a citizen he always stood high. His sterling integrity had its origin in fixed principles, by which his whole life was guided. Truly, one of the fathers of the community has passed to his reward.

From Michigan.

We have before us a letter from G. W. St. Clair at Bethel. Branch Co., Michigan, which says:

"We are having fine weather up here. We had a good rain last night, which did everything good. Corn is growing finely, but wheat will be only half a crop on account of rust and fly. Prospect is good for all kinds of fruit, vegetation of all kinds, far ahead this year. We had a mess of new potatoes for dinner to-day, June 8, the first of any around here. We are all well and doing nicely."

CARD OF THANKS.

We desire in this way to show our gratitude to all our friends and neighbors for their loving kindness and sympathy during the sickness of our dear husband and father and for their sustaining sympathy at the last sad rites. They will always be held in remembrance.

HIGH PRICED HOUSE.

ARCHITECTURAL BEAUTY IN INTERIOR FINISH.

Cherry and Pine Are Cheap Woods that Give Pleasing Effects—Should Be Finished in Their Natural Color—Avoid Much Machine Work.

Handsome Interiors.

The wood finish and joiner work of a house puzzles many a man who contemplates building. The estimates for the various styles of finish differ quite materially, and yet the matter is one that cannot be settled off-hand by the question of price, as the owner wants to be sure that he will get satisfactory results, for this is the one part of the house that is abiding. If the matter of money does not cut any figure, of course the problem is simple. There are the rich and valuable hardwoods that produce the most beautiful effects when finished by competent cabinetmakers, such as mahogany (both San Domingo and white), butternut, sycamore and quartered oak, which can be used appropriately in the different rooms, and the results will be a constant pleasure to the eye and a gratification of the asthetic sense.

These luxuries, however, are impossible to most house owners, as the question of cost must dominate most plans, so that the choice is restricted to the cheaper hardwoods and the few soft woods that are used for the purpose. Chestnut and ash are satisfactory in certain cases, but the result is rarely pleasing if they are used for all the joinery work, having little beauty of grain and lacking in warmth of color. Cherry is immeasurably better than either, but it should always be used in its own beautiful soft color, with rich satin effect. Cherry that is stained to imitate mahogany deceives no one, loses all its natural beauty and is always an abomination.

It is only within the past few years that one of the best American woods, with fine color and effective grain, has been used for interior finish. This is pine, and few woods yield a better effect. Time was when pine was freely used, but was always grained to imitate the various hard woods, the art of the grainer being wonderfully perfected. Many panels in the doors of the old-time house—are marvels of misdirected art—the height of philistinism—which has happily fallen into desuetude. After graining came the return to the painting of woodwork in solid colors, and in some few cases this is not to be condemned at present. Houses that from their situation are bound to be dark sometimes gain from the woodwork painted in light warm tones. But paint will not long remain fresh, becoming scratched and grimy, and then nothing can be done save to paint it all over again, at considerable cost. On the contrary, wood that is oiled, waxed, shellacked or varnished can be touched up in spots whenever it is needed, and at comparatively no expense.

For cottages and small inexpensive houses, perhaps the best results are obtained by the use of cherry and pine, both in their natural colors. Both woods harmonize well, and there are no violent contrasts where the two are compelled to meet. The use of hard woods, like oak, chestnut, or ash, for a few rooms, finishing the rest of the house in any soft wood, makes a contrast that will always be displeasing to the critical eye. Whitewood and basswood are sometimes used, but these have no grain at all to speak of; when stained, they are always vile; in natural finish they are not to be commended, but they are not to be commended on account of their lack of durability. A single dig from a carelessly used rocking chair will gouge out a piece as effectively as a chisel.

The one prime caution in the use of any wood is to avoid as much as possible machine work. The stair rail should be large and worked with simple curves. The balusters should be firm, of good size and plain. Most cheap houses sin mainly in their mantels, generally being monstrosities built up of cheap machine molding and tawdry spindles and rosettes. The line of a mantel should be simple, the general design should be severely plain, and if the size of the room will warrant it, it should be massive. The artistic eye of the architect can here be shown to the careful selection of design in [illegible] and tasteful draughting of detail in stairways and interior woodwork. Such details should never be left to the carpenters, contractors or builder, but be shown and selected before by the architect.

FIRST FLOOR.

We show here a house that can be built for about $12,000, together with the interior view of hall and staircase from the first floor.

General dimensions: Extreme width, 62 feet 6 inches; depth, including veranda, 78 feet 8 inches. Heights of stories: First story, 10 feet 6 inches; second story, 9 feet 6 inches; attic, 8 feet.

SECOND FLOOR.

Exterior materials: Foundation, piers; first story, clapboards; second story, gables and roofs, shingles. Outside blinds to all windows except those of parlor, library, dining and drawing rooms.

Interior finish: Hard white plaster; plaster cornices and centers in parlor, library and dining room. Hard pine flooring in hall, dining room, kitchen, servants' hall; soft wood flooring elsewhere. Red baywood trim in first and second stories, except in kitchen and pantry, where soft wood is used. Ceiling of hall and dining room paneled to imitate open timber work. Panels under windows in parlor, main halls, library and dining room. Wainscoting in kitchen and bath room. Stairs, baywood. Interior woodwork finished in hard oil.

Accommodations: The principal rooms and their sizes, closets, etc., are shown by the plans. No cellar. Billiard room, hall, two bedrooms and tank in attic. Open fireplaces in parlor, dining room, sitting room, library and three bed-rooms. Two bath rooms in second story, and two independent water closets.

Cost: $8,405, not including mantels range and heater. The estimate is based on New York prices for materials and labor. In many sections of the country the cost should be less.

Extravagant Salaries of Singers.

Now that several operatic organizations are likely to be in the field next season, a combination of managers is urged with the object of reducing extravagant rates of pay to something like reasonable figures. No such salaries are paid at Covent Garden, in London, which, outside of the principal Russian opera houses, probably pays more to its performers than any other European operatic theater. But even there the pay is small compared to the price demanded by singers when they come to this country, and not a few of them sing there for nothing or a merely nominal rate, for the purpose of acquiring a reputation which will enable them to ask a high price in this country. Sir Augustus Harris offered Mme. Nordica $200 a night to sing with him last season, and as she was not in need of a London indorsement the proposition was refused. Only the important artists receive liberal salaries, and the effect of the difference is plainly noticeable in the lists of the artists employed here at the Metropolitan and engaged for the London season.

A new phase of the question comes up in the case of the German singers and a striking instance of this matter occurred in the case of Wilhelm Gruening, the tenor, who sang with Walter Damrosch's season. He took back with him $24,000 as the reward of his season, and of this sum one-half was paid to Pallini of Hamburg, of whose company the German tenor was a regular member. As it was, the singer's reward undoubtedly exceeded anything he had ever received in his own country and as he was the best singer available his manager was compelled to accept Pollini's terms. Klafsky had the same difficulty when she came to this country, but rather than send half her earnings back to Pollini she broke her contract with him, and probably the union of the German managers—called the Castel verein—will prevent her from singing in Germany.—New York Sun.

A Masonic Sign.

A man is known by his motions—the looker-on has the discerning eye of a fellow-craftsman. Such is the point of a street scene reported by a St. Louis newspaper. A stranger in Boston stood in front of a Columbus avenue apartment house in process of construction, apparently interested in what he saw, and picked up a brick, which he turned over in his hand one or twice.

"I will give you a job if you want it," said the foreman, who had observed the stranger.

"What kind of a job?" asked the other, as he shook the brick dust from his gloves.

"Laying brick, of course," was the answer. "I know from the way you picked up that brick that you are a brick mason, and we are short-handed with the cold weather on us."

"Thank you," answered the stranger. "Once I would have jumped at your offer. Thirty-five years ago I wandered these streets looking for such a job and couldn't find it, though I needed it as much as any poor fellow in the city. I took Greeley's advice and went West, where I have laid tens of thousands of bricks and employed men to lay millions for me. I don't need the work but I am pleased that you recognized in me a member of the craft."

The stranger was one of the largest contractors in Louis.

Information by the Baron.

"It is a mystery to me how you could accumulate so large a fortune dealing in cattle," said the King of Bavaria to Baron Hirsch.

"Ah, your Majesty," returned the Baron, "my dealings have been with cattle as well as in cattle."

EDUCATIONAL COLUMN

NOTES ABOUT SCHOOLS AND THEIR MANAGEMENT.

Have a Place for Everything and Keep Everything in Its Place—Protection for School Teachers—Educational Progress in the South—Notes.

An Orderly Room.

"A place for everything, and everything in its place," is a maxim nowhere more necessary than in the schoolroom. Unless the rule be constantly impressed and observed, disorder and much waste of time will inevitably follow. Picture a room in which the rule appears to be wanting: books litter the window sills, the boards are half cleaned, maps and other specimens of work are pinned to the wall without the slightest semblance of order, the teacher's desk is covered with odds and ends of various kinds, and the children's desks are likewise untidy. Another picture shows a room of a different character. An open cupboard door reveals neat rows of books, boxes, papers, and other materials; window sills are bare but for a half dozen house plants standing in shining saucers. On the teacher's desk are arranged the books and materials necessary to the day's work, while the children have nothing on theirs but the slate and pencil.

Comment on the order and general working of these two classes is unnecessary. Disorder in these external matters does not bespeak orderliness of spirit, but rather the reverse, and there is no doubt as to the effect upon character of a strict observance or orderliness and neatness in all things. Try to have the children take a pride in their room, and encourage them in every effort to make it pleasant and attractive. Though nothing be done towards decorating, it can be kept clean and neat. If this spirit prevail there will be no hats on the floor, no papers about the desks, no dirty slate cloths (sponges and a clean rag should be the rule), and no untidy desks. There will be pictures on the walls and on the unused blackboard, plants in the windows, and perhaps a flower glass on the teacher's table.

In the early summer, when wild flowers and shrub blossoms are plentiful, the children take great delight in bringing their little bouquets to "the teacher," and it is sometimes difficult to know what to do with them all. I have always provided myself with two or three earthenware jars to hold this deluge of flowers, for of course none can be discarded. They hold a great deal, and make a pretty ornament on the window sill, where there is no danger of the water being spilled.

It is a great deal easier to keep everything in its place than we sometimes think. All that is necessary is to return everything to its accustomed place as soon as we are done using it.

"Order in everything" must be our motto if we would have a successful school; the order to which love, sympathy, and regard for others are the incentives. The influence of orderliness in these so-called small matters reaches far beyond the school walk and the school life, and cannot be too highly estimated.—Educational Journal.

Protection for Teachers.

The principal of one of the Chicago public schools was made the other day the victim of a peculiarly brutal personal assault on the part of an aggrieved parent whose boy had failed to pass an examination. If the case were an isolated one, it would hardly call for comment, but several incidents of the sort have occurred during the past year or two, and the offenders have unfortunately escaped with a trifling fine. This time, it appears, the ruffian is likely to receive something like his deserts. The school authorities are determined to make an example of the assailant, and see that he is punished to the full extent of the law. There are too many parents nowadays who, instead of seconding the disciplinary efforts of their children's instructors, are inclined to antagonize them, and hastily to assume that if a child does not get along well at school it must be the teacher's fault. Instead of taking it out of the boy in the good old way, they take it out of the teacher in the improved modern fashion. A teacher is a public officer, and a physical assault upon a teacher should be treated more seriously than such an offense committed against a private individual. It is a matter of the highest concern to the State that teachers should be made to feel that the law will give them full protection in the discharge of their duties, and that they should not be terrorized into an unduly lenient treatment of idle or vicious children by fear of personal violence. The attack now in question has called out widespread sympathy for its victim, and the criminal proceedings against his assailant will be watched with interest by teachers everywhere.—Harper's Weekly.

Keep Close to the Ground.

Or as our genial and direct Hawley Smith puts it, "lower your hind sight." This remark is occasioned by the writer's recently repeated experience in the institute field. We who are working with teachers as institute instructors, as superintendents or editors need to bear in mind that the good that is done will depend upon what we do that appeals to the intelligence and understanding of the average teacher. That teacher in the institute, that teacher in the district schools does not need long and dry disquisitions upon psychological queries or philosophical casuistries or discussions of apperception or elaboration of any phase of concentration or co-ordination so much as she needs a little plain every-day work in "readin'," "ritin'," "rithmetic," together with something concerning the management of an ordinary school of ordinary boys and girls. Give us less of "folderol," less of trimming and more of definite material, simple and direct application to everyday work. The institute season will soon be here. Will you, fellow instructor and county superintendent, note what other workers with you have to say on this subject? There isn't any disagreement among us as to what should be done, but somehow when we plan and work and outline what is to be done at our institutes we get away from notions in which we all agree and try to introduce the novel, the startling and that which seemingly lifts our institute and our work above the level of the "other fellow."—Exchange.

Progress in the South.

Supt. Hogg, of Fort Worth, Texas, estimates that while the South has gained 54 per cent. in population during the last twenty years, the increase in enrollment of school attendance is 130 per cent. School property has increased in value from $16,000,000 to $51,000,000. Of the $320,000,000 expended for education during the last eighteen years, one-fourth has been for the colored population. Florida leads the van in this work, having an enrollment of 66 per 100 of her population as compared with 61 in other Southern States.

THE GRADUATING CLASS.

To Stop Hiccoughs.

A new method of stopping hiccoughs is said to have been accidentally discovered in a French hospital. It consists in thrusting the tongue out of the mouth and holding it thus for a short time.

A Desert of Salt.

In the accounts of Capt. Vaughan's travels in Persia a description is given of the great salt desert in the northern part of that country, extending 360 miles from east to west and 150 miles from north to south. The desert is a vast dish-shaped depression, the central portion lying from 1,000 to 2,000 feet lower than the margin, and near its western rim is a salt-bed whose area is 440 square miles.

The Colors of Childhood.

Professor James Sully in his studies of childhood compares the mental processes of white children in civilized lands with those of full-grown savages, and discovers some remarkable resemblances. Among other things he finds that the favorite colors of the savage, red and yellow, are those which white children first take notice of, and of which they remain especially fond during the period of childhood. So, too, the savage adult and the white child find a common pleasure in all bright, shining and glittering things.

The Stormy Equinoxes.

The popular belief that storms are more frequent about the time of the equinoxes, or when "the sun crosses the line," in March and September, receives some slight degree of support from the recent investigations of Professor Hellmann concerning the weather of Europe. In southwestern Europe March is the stormiest month, while in the British Islands and Norway January takes the lead in that respect; but considering Europe as a whole, it appears that storms preponderate near the seasons of the equinoxes.

A Curious Boulder.

In the mysterious Ice Age, when great glaciers advanced from the north over the northern part of the United States, many strange rocks were brought from the regions beyond the St. Lawrence and the great lakes, and left far from their place of origin, scattered among the hills and plains of New England and the Ohio and Mississippi valleys. One of these rocks, recently found near Columbus, Ohio, proves to be particularly interesting and curious. It is not more than a foot and a half in diameter, but it is plainly a relic of glacial times, and nobody can tell for certain whence it came. There is no rock resembling it within hundreds of miles. The supposition is that the ice carried it from a point north of Lake Huron to the place where it was found. Its composition shows that it was of volcanic origin.

American Amber.

The world's greatest source of amber is the shores of the Baltic Sea. Amber is the fossilized resin of several species of pine trees. In small quantities it has been found in various parts of the globe, including the United States, but up to the present time no American deposit of amber extensive enough to be of commercial value has been discovered. Quite recently, however, amber has been found at Cape Sable, on the Magothy River, in Maryland, and this arouses the hope that it may yet be discovered in paying quantities in this country. The deposit at Cape Sable has been known since 1821, but only lately has a careful investigation of it been made. The fossil tree-trunks in which bits of amber are embedded are not, like those of the Baltic region, pines, but are believed by their discoverer, Mr. Arthur Bibbins, to be specimens of the sequoia.

A Strange People.

During the last two years expeditions sent out by the Bureau of American Ethnology have collected many interesting facts about the Seri Indians, who live in the western part of the State of Sonora, Mexico, along the shore of the Gulf of California, and on the island of Tiburon in that gulf. The facts have recently been summarized by Prof. W. J. McGee, of Washington. From time immemorial Seriland has remained practically unexplored, partly because it lies behind a desert barrier, and partly on account of the warlike reputation of its fierce and bloodthirsty inhabitants, who "profess a passion for alien blood, always gratified save when they are deterred by fear." The Seri Indians are described as of "superb physique, able to run down fleet game and capture half-wild Mexican horses without ropes or projectiles; able to run across the desert, waterless and foodless, so rapidly as to escape pursuing horsemen; able to abstain from food and water for days; able habitually to pass barefoot through cactus thickets and over jagged rock slopes without thought of discomfort." They speak a distinct language, and strictly practice monogamous marriage. Their hatred for alien peoples is hereditary. The remains of ancient ruins in Seriland indicate that its inhabitants have always kept their country free from foreign invasion, and that for centuries their customs and arts, which are crude and simple, have remained unchanged.

Phenomenon of the Tide Rip.

A "tide rip" phenomenon of the sea was encountered in the Indian Ocean recently by the ship Francis, which arrived at this port yesterday. The tide ran in many directions, apparently almost at the same time, and the big ship was whirled around by it like a top or took peculiar and erratic sheers until she became uncontrollable and could not be kept on her course. It was feared at times that she would go to pieces, for the tide seemed to increase in force. For fourteen hours the Francis was at the mercy of this peculiar action of the ocean currents, and soon afterward a cyclone struck and partially dismasted her, a disaster which has been before reported.

Two stowaways, William H. Beatty and Stephen Munday, who had traveled almost all the way around the globe without the expenditure of a cent, were brought on the Francis from Passaroean, Java. They were formerly members of the crew of the British steamship Rio, which arrived at Java some time before the Francis left there for Philadelphia. In some way they were left behind by the Rio, and then they stowed away in the coalroom of the Francis, where fuel is kept for the "donkey" engine and other uses. They were discovered several days after the Francis left Passaroean, and there was no alternative but to bring them along on the long voyage, which lasted 121 days.

An examination made by the immigration officials developed the fact that one of the men, Beatty, was a native of Florida and the other an Englishman. They were glad to leave Java, being unable to earn more than 10 cents a day in competition with the natives.—Philadelphia Record.

PROPAGATING WILD ANIMALS.

Proposal to Permit Them to Multiply on a California Preserve.

California, which does nothing by halves, is to have the greatest animal preserve on earth. Here will be no tame and toothless lions, no jaguars that lap milk from a saucer, no elephants nourished on popcorn and circus gingerbread. No. This is to be a simon-pure jungle of the good old days before the circus tent was ever heard of. The Ringling Brothers are the movers in this extraordinary project and their agent is now negotiating for a large tract of wild and thickly wooded land at Long Beach, near San Pedro Bay, Southern California.

The territory will be inclosed by a stone wall, surmounted by an iron fence. Caves will be made to afford hiding places, and the parent animals once turned loose in this wilderness will be left to their own wills, sweet or otherwise. Two commissioners are now journeying around the world to purchase animals to stock the concern. As the principal denizens of the preserve are of the family of carnivora, the animals upon which they naturally prey will be provided for food.

There will be tracts set apart for delicate and mild-mannered quadrupeds like the camel, giraffe and zebra. A great timber inclosure will be built inside the outer guards, to confine the elephants. Herbs and grasses indigenous to the native clime of the herbivora will be imported and planted within the park for their sustenance. The monkey farm will be a feature of the jungle. There will, it is expected, be animals enough born into this strange beast garden to stock the circuses of the country for years unnumbered.

Disappears in the Quicksands.

The steamship Coos Bay, which arrived in port to-day from the Mexican coast, brought news of the loss at Altata of the Danish bark Lottie. The Lottie, having finished loading a heavy cargo of dye wool, prepared to sail for Hamburg. There are two separate channels in the bay, the dividing line being a long and treacherous bar of quicksand. Captain Clausen of the Lottie summoned to his aid the steam schooner Altata, which is about the only available vessel for towing service there.

The bark got along well enough in the wake of the steamer until she reached a narrow portion of the channel she was traversing at a point where the bar was breaking with unusual force. Here the Lottie got into trouble. Swinging around on the hawser, she struck a shallow spot and in a moment began to pounding upon the bar. The Altata could not pull the bark out of her dangerous position. The captain and crew of the Lottie knew what it meant to go ashore in quicksand, and they lost no time in getting out the boats and making for the shore.

At daylight the sea was calmer and Captain Clausen and some of his men visited their vessel. All that remained in sight was her deckhouse and masts, the hull having disappeared in the quicksand.

The men, although realizing that it was a risky undertaking, crawled upon the deckhouse, and in that way managed to get into their living quarters. They recovered their clothes and valuables, and the captain secured his instruments and charts.

Captain Jenson of the Coos Bay says that when he left Altata about twelve days ago the Lottie had completely disappeared.—San Francisco Examiner.

How a Man May Float.

It has been proved that a man weighing 160 pounds needs only about 200 cubic inches of air within his body in order to float with his head above water. This amount of air is easily inserted into the hollow space beneath the skin by means of an aseptic syringe. Even simpler is the use of a hollow needle and a thin rubber hose, eighteen inches long, into which this needle is inserted. A little aseptic cotton placed at the open end of the rubber hose is all that is required. The skin is simply raised, the hollow needle introduced into it, and then the other end of the rubber tube is taken into the mouth and the man's own breath blown into it. Two deep respirations, which are blown into each side of the breast, would prove amply sufficient to float a man, however heavy.

Remarkable Knives.

In connection with a manufactory at Sheffield is a suite of showrooms, in which are exhibited, besides samples of the class of work produced, a number of invaluable curiosities. Chief among these is the celebrated Norfolk knife exhibited during the exposition of 1851, comprising a richly carved pearl handle and seventy-five large blades, containing, in addition to etchings of the queen and other members of the royal family, charming views of the royal residences and other notable places. Another marvel of construction is a knife equipped with 1,896 blades—a blade for every year in the Christian era. It was commenced in 1822, and since that time one blade has been added each year.

DOMESTIC MARTYRS.

Lots of women suffer constantly, and seldom utter complaint.

Good men rarely know the pain endured by the women of their own household, or the efforts they make to appear cheerful and happy when they ought to be in bed, their suffering is really so great.

Our habits of life and dress tell sadly upon women's delicate organizations.

They ought to be told just where the danger lies, for their whole future may depend upon that knowledge, and how to overcome it.

There is no need of our describing the experiences of such women here, they are too well known by those who have suffered, but we will impress upon every one that these are the never-failing symptoms of serious womb trouble, and unless relieved at once, a life will be forfeited.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound never fails to relieve the distressing troubles above referred to; it has held the faith of the women of America for twenty years.

It gives tone to the womb, strengthens the muscles, banishes backache and relieves all pains incident to women's diseases.

ROUNDS A CENTURY.

TENNESSEE CELEBRATES ADMISSION TO STATEHOOD.

Inaugural of the Centennial Exposition Is Also Performed—Imposing Parade at Nashville—President Thomas Raises a Flag.

Centennial Is Celebrated.

The 100th anniversary of Tennessee's admission to the Union as a State was celebrated in Nashville on a most elaborate scale. Thousands of visitors from all the cities and towns in the State were in attendance, besides hundreds from various other States, including the Governors and State officials.

It is estimated that in spite of a heavy rain from 10,000 to 15,000 people took part in the great parade. There were scores of carriages with national, State and municipal dignitaries, attended at the front and rear by bands of music; 3,000 State and Federal soldiers, including four companies of cavalry, each 100 strong; the officers and assistants of the centennial, the entire Woman's Board, the Ladies' Hermitage Association, the Tennessee Historical Society, scores of secret orders, traveling men's associations, postoffice employes, trades and labor societies, Confederate veterans, 1,000 wheelmen, 2,500 citizens on horseback, scores of organizations, 2,500 colored people representing the societies of that race. At the grounds 10,000 children paraded and welcomed the vast procession while cannons roared.

There was a proclamation and flag raising by John W. Thomas, president of the exposition, followed by elaborate anniversary exercises. The principal address was by J. M. Dickinson, who spoke for an hour. He gave an elaborate history of Tennessee, and traced its progress to the present under the heads of religion, education, patriotism, law and order, Democratic government, emancipation, the war and recuperation.

Exposition to Be Held in 1897.

The celebration of Monday and Tuesday commemorates the centennial of Tennessee's appearance among the States of the Union, but the exposition in memory of the event will not really open until May 1, 1897. It will be the first industrial exposition ever held by any State in commemoration of its birth, and, judging by the work already done and the plans for the future, it will be large enough and beautiful enough to give it a high position among American fairs. For three years the plans have been under discussion, and work upon the grounds and buildings has been in progress since the latter part of 1895.

SOME OF THE TENNESSEE CENTENNIAL BUILDINGS.

It is estimated that the entire cost of construction and preparation of the grounds will amount to $1,000,000, to which the salary list and other necessary expenses will add some $500,000 more. Many of the buildings are already nearing completion, and the beautifying of the grounds is well under way.

HENRY M. TELLER.

The Man Who Will Represent Colorado Republicans at St. Louis.

Henry M. Teller, United States Senator and delegate-at-large to the Republican convention from Colorado, seems to have cornered his party out in the mountain region, and will go to the convention with the vote in his vest pocket. Mr. Teller is a statesman who has traveled and has seen a great deal of life in Washington. He was born in New York, Allegheny County, just sixty-six years ago, and before he had left his native State he was a lawyer. In 1858 he came West and stayed in Illinois for a matter of three years. Then he went further west, and, liking Central City, settled there. Senator Teller never held any office until Colorado was admitted as a State into the Union. He then was made United States Senator, and took his seat Dec. 4, 1876. President Arthur made him Secretary of the Interior, in which capacity he served until March, 1885. Since that time he has been twice returned to the Senate. Mr. Teller was always a strong silver man.

HENRY M. TELLER.

DUEL IN LEBANON STREETS.

Wallace Riley Killed by Thomas Allen in a Quarrel Over Their Children.

At Lebanon, Ind., Wallace Riley, for many years a prominent resident, was killed instantly by Thomas Allen, a stock buyer. Allen's son, aged 17, had been keeping company with Riley's daughter, aged 24. On account of the difference in the ages of the young people both fathers objected to their marriage, but the couple succeeded in securing a marriage license and were married. Immediately after the marriage they left for Putnam County, and remained there until a telegram advising them of the tragedy called them home. Riley denounced the elder Allen as helping on the marriage. The men met on the streets Saturday afternoon. Riley said: "Defend yourself! One of us is going to die!" Riley pulled his revolver. Allen said he was unarmed, and the two repaired to Hooton's hardware establishment in search for a weapon for Allen. They were finally separated before any blood was shed.

Monday morning Riley was on the streets early, and was loud in his claims that he was after Allen. Riley was just coming out of the postoffice room when Allen drove up in his carriage, alighted and passed in. After getting his mail he started to leave the postoffice, when Riley accosted him with drawn weapon. Like a flash Allen drew his pistol and the firing began. Riley fired two shots and Allen four. When the smoke cleared away Riley was lying in the postoffice door, and Allen's son, who witnessed the affray from his father's carriage, had received a severe wound in the right side. Allen was arrested. Both men are wealthy and influential.

DEATH OF KATE FIELD.

Brilliant Newspaper Writer Expires in the Hawaiian Islands.

"Kate Field died of pneumonia" was the brief cable message received in Chicago from ex-Minister Thurston announcing the death of perhaps the best-known woman connected with American newspapers. Miss Field went to the Hawaiian Islands several months ago in search of health. Miss Field was born in St. Louis in 1840. She was the daughter of Joseph N. Field, an Englishman, who was brought to this country by his parents, who were exiled from Ireland. She received her early education in the schools of St. Louis, and later entered a seminary in Massachusetts. After her graduation she visited Europe, and while there she became acquainted with George Eliot and the Brownings. OLD TIPPECANOE IN BRONZE.

Statue of William Henry Harrison Unveiled in Cincinnati.

On Decoration Day there was unveiled in Cincinnati an equestrian statue of the ninth President of the United States, William Henry Harrison. The movement for this memorial began five years ago with the organization of a Harrison memorial association, composed of some of the leading citizens of the Queen City. The association secured some funds by subscription, supplemented by a bill in the State Legislature authorizing a tax levy that warranted the expenditure of $25,000. The association was afterward merged into the Harrison statue commission, which carried the work to completion after much aggravating delay. The statue as it stands has cost about $28,000, but the extra amount has been provided for. The statue is the work of Rebisso of Cincinnati, who designed the equestrian statue of Gen. Grant at Chicago and the McPherson statue at Washington. It is in bronze and represents the hero of Tippecanoe in the military accoutrements of the period in which his reputation as a fighter was made.

SENATE AND HOUSE.

WORK OF OUR NATIONAL LAWMAKERS.

A Week's Proceedings in the Halls of Congress—Important Measures Discussed and Acted Upon—An Impartial Resume of the Business.

The National Solons.

In the Senate Friday the bills repealing the law relating to rebates on alcohol used in the arts, and amending the law concerning the distilling of brandy from fruits were passed. The latter authorizes the exemption of distillers of brandy made from fruits from the provisions relating to the manufacture of spirits, except as to the tax thereon. The House spent almost the entire day debating the Johnston-Stokes contested election case from the Seventh South Carolina district. The Republicans were badly divided. Those who favored seating the contestant, Johnston, who ran on a Populist-Republican ticket, finding themselves slightly in the minority when the voting began, inaugurated a filibuster which lasted until the conference report on the naval appropriation bill came to the rescue, and the House recessed before final action was taken. Johnston's partisans were outvoted—105 to 95, and 103 to 99—the first vote being on the minority resolution declaring Johnston entitled to a seat, the second on the majority resolution declaring him not entitled to it. An effort will be made to reconsider.

Mr. Cullom of Illinois spoke at considerable length in the Senate Monday against the pending bill to prohibit the issue of bonds. The President returned to Congress three private pension bills, with his veto in each case. In the case of two of the bills, granting pensions to Mrs. Amanda Woodcock and Jonathan Scott, both originating in the House, he points out that, owing to careless descriptions in the bills, the pensions could not be paid under their terms. In the other, a Senate bill granting a pension to Helen M. Jacob, the President forcibly sets out his objections to allowing pensions to soldiers' widows who remarry. The President says: "There is no duty or obligation due from the Government to a soldier's widow except it be worked out through the deceased soldier. She is pensioned only because he served his country and because through his death she as his wife has lost his support. In other words, she becomes a beneficiary of the Government because she is a soldier's widow. When she marries again and thus displaces the memory of her soldier husband and surrenders all that belongs to soldier widowhood she certainly ought not, on the death of her second husband, be allowed to claim that she is again the soldier's widow."

The Senate Tuesday, by a vote of 32 to 25, passed the Butler bill to prohibit any further issue of bonds without the consent of Congress. The debate was sharp and bitter, but all the amendments were defeated and then the final vote taken, on which the bill was passed. The filled-cheese bill was taken up and made the unfinished business. Mr. Allison introduced a joint resolution for a scientific investigation of the Bering sea seal fisheries. At 7 o'clock Mr. Hill moved to adjourn, and as the motion was carried, Mr. Hill exclaimed: "And may God save the country." The House devoted itself to passing the river and harbor bill over the President's veto and to unseating by a vote of 162 to 39 John J. Walsh, the Democratic member from the Eighth New York district, whose place will be filled by John Murray Mitchell, Republican. Both of these actions were foregone conclusions, so that they excited comparatively little interest, although there was a full house to vote on the river and harbor bill. It was passed by 220 to 60, many more votes than the two-thirds necessary to override a veto, and it was passed without debate, although Mr. Dockery (Mo.) protested vehemently that debate had been promised. Thirty-nine Democrats voted to override the presidential objections and twenty-six Republicans stood by Mr. Cleveland.

The Senate Wednesday followed the lead of the House and passed the river and harbor bill over the President's veto by the following vote: Yeas—Republicans: Aldrich, Allison, Burrows, Cannon, Carter, Chandler, Clark, Cullom, Davis, Dubois, Elkins, Gallinger, Gear, Hale, Hansbrough, Hawley, Lodge, McBride, Mitchell (Oregon), Nelson, Perkins, Pettigrew, Platt, Pritchard, Quay, Sherman, Shoup, Squire, Teller, Warren, Wetmore, Wilson, Wolcott—33; Democrats: Bacon, Berry, Brice, Faulkner, George, Gibson, Gorman, Jones (Arkansas), Lindsay, Mills, Mitchell (Wisconsin), Morgan, Pasco, Pugh, Tillman, Turpie, Vest, Walthall, White—19; Populists: Jones (Nevada), Butler, Peffer, Stewart—4; total, 56. Nays—Democrats: Bate, Chilton, Hill, Smith, Vilas—5. The House began clearing the decks for final adjournment by extending the length of the daily sessions. A partial conference report on the general deficiency bill was agreed to and the bill sent back to further conference. The Murray-Elliott contested case from the first South Carolina district was debated for four hours. The majority report favors the seating of the contestant, who is a colored man, and who was seated by the Fifty-first House in place of Elliott.

WANT BONDS BARRED

SENATORS ADOPT THE BUTLER MEASURE, 32 TO 25.

Further Issues, Without Consent of Congress, Prohibited—Lively Debate Precedes the Vote—Pass River and Harbor Bill Over President's Veto.

Anti-bond Bill Passed.

At 7 o'clock Tuesday night the long struggle in the Senate over the bill to prohibit the issue of bonds came to an end and the bill was passed by a vote of 32 to 25. The bill as passed covers only three lines, as follows:

"Be it enacted that the issuance of interest-bearing bonds of the United States for any purpose whatever without further authority of Congress is hereby prohibited."

The vote on its final passage was as follows:

YEAS.
(Republicans.)
Brown, Cannon, Dubois, Hansbrough, Mitchell (Ore.), Pettigrew, Pritchard, Teller, Warren, Wolcott—10
(Democrats.)
Bacon, Bate, Berry, Chilton, Daniel, George, Harris, Jones (Ark.) Mills, Morgan, Pasco, Pugh, Tillman, Turpie, Vest, Walthall, White—17.
(Populists.)
Allen, Butler, Jones (Nev.) Peffer, Stewart—5.

NAYS.
(Republicans.)
Aldrich, Allison, Burrows, Chandler Cullom, Davis, Gallinger Hale, Hawley, Lodge, McBride, Nelson, Platt, Quay, Wetmore, Wilson—16.
(Democrats.)
Brice, Caffery, Faulkner Hill, Lindsay, Mitchell (Wis.) Palmer, Smith, Vilas—9.

The voting did not begin until 6:30 p. m., at which time the chamber was dimly lighted and the galleries almost empty. A flood of amendments were first voted down, all being defeated. One by Mr. Aldrich of Rhode Island gave the executive power to issue bonds in certain emergencies, another by Mr. Aldrich provided that the act should not impair the obligation to pay in coin. Mr. Hill's amendment that treasury notes be retired when redeemed was tabled—43 to 12. Mr. Quay's amendment for the substitution of coin notes for treasury notes was defeated without a yea and nay vote. The last preliminary vote was on Mr. Hill's motion to postpone the subject until next December, which was defeated. Then came the final vote.

River and Harbor Bill.

The report of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors recommending the passage of the bill over the President's veto was made by Chairman Hooker, and the report was read. Mr. Hooker moved the passage of the bill, saying that the committee was of the opinion that the President's message covered every possible objection to the bill and that the report answered all objections. "Many members have asked me for time to debate this matter," he said, "and to yield to their requests would take much time. Without expressing any opinion on the question whether there be debate and to test the opinion of the House on the question whether debate is necessary I will demand the previous question."

Instantly Mr. Dockery (Dem.) of Missouri was on his feet demanding recognition, but the speaker told him that debate was not in order. Members were shouting "Vote, vote," but the voice of Mr. Dockery pierced the uproar, shouting: "The gentleman agreed with me yesterday to have debate on this bill. This is unfair, unjust, unmanly." The House demanded the previous question—178 to 60 by a rising vote, and only 46 rose to sustain the request for yeas and nays.

"Under the rules the vote on the passage of the bill must be taken by yeas and nays," the speaker announced. "Is there no rule by which we can have debate?" asked Mr. Dockery. "Not if the House orders the contrary," said Speaker Reed. "And the House has so ordered—to stifle debate," responded Mr. Dockery.

The bill was passed by a vote of 220 to 60, a wide margin over the necessary two-thirds.

The Democrats who voted to pass the bill over the veto were:

But H's Slick Schemes, Though Carefully Planned? Do Not Pan Out.

Thursday's Daily.

A few days ago we had an item relating to the efforts of someone out in Cherryvale, Kansas, to obtain money under suspicious circumstances, if not by actual forgery. The Peoples Bank at Cherryvale, Kansas sent a dispatch to the First National Bank in Auburn, asking if S. S. Shutt was good for $2600. The Bank here replied that he was, but had no deposits in this bank. Later on, a draft signed by S. S. Shutt calling for $100 was sent to the bank here for collection, but was returned to Cherryvale with a statement that it was a forgery. It appears that the bank at Cherryvale had advanced $20 on this draft, as appears by the following letter from Mr. Mitchell the cashier of the Peoples Bank there, to Chas. McClellan, cashier of the First Narional bank here. The letter is dated May. 28. and reads:

CHAS. MCCLELLAN Esq. Cash.
Auburn, Ind.

Dear Sir:

Your telegram of to-day, saying draft of S. S. Shutt was protested, and was evidently a forgery, is just received.

We are not surprised at the information since we had received your former telegram stating that Shutt had no money in your bank. Though we hardly expected it was a forgery. Had concluded after some conversation with the man that he was a little "off." He was introduced to us by a real estate man from whom he had bought a farm, and we advanced $20 on this draft. He closed contract for a farm and real estate agent had us telegraph you whether you would pay his draft for $2600. Your answer was received promptly, but we said nothing to him about it, thinking would await news from the draft before doing anything. Yesterday morning about six o'clock he left the town, and we have no trace of him since.

We felt safe, depending on your statement in first telegram that he was "perfectly good for the amount", but its being a forgery puts a different face upon the matter.

This man is a German or of German descent. About 40 years old weighs about 135 or 140 pounds, light hair, mustache and eyes, and a front upper tooth gone or a very wide space between teeth in upper jaw. Wore suit of gray clothes. Tells of having recently lost his wife.

Will you please tell us if the genuine S. S. Shutt is now at home or if he is or has been recently in this country, describing him etc. This man evidently is from Spencerville, as he found some people here who are from near there, and he also knows you and the President of your bank, giving us both your names and something of the history of C. A. O. McClellan. Perhaps you can help us to unravel the thing, and help to recover what we advanced with expenses. If you can we shall be under many obligations. Will be pleased to hear from you soon.

Very truly,
CHAS. MITCHEL,
Cash'r.

From this letter, it will appear why he was so anxious to get that particular amount, $2,600. For, failing to get it as "S. S. Shutt" at the National Bank, he tried to secure it by a draft sent to the Farmers Bank here, signed "John Boots" as noted in our former item. But it seems that while he was still posing as "S. S. Shutt" he wanted to make hii identity as Mr. Shutt doubly sure, so he concluded to show the Kansas people, that he was going to locate permanently among them, by resigning all "offices and emoluments" appertaining to him in DeKalb Co. State of Indiana. So he wrote a letter to James Henderson, of the Board of county commissioners tendering his resignation as "justice of the peace." The following is the letter in full:

To the Honorable Board of Commissioners Decalb County Indiana

Gentlemen:

I here-by tender my resignation of the office of Justice of the Piece of Concord Township in the county Decalb and State of Indiana, and here-by authrize you to take charge of all Books belonging to the Township including the two Dockets. Said Books you will find at my office at the residence of John Dellinger.

S. S. SHUTT.

Dated at Cherryvale Kans May 27, 1896

It might be well to note that Mr. Shutt is not a justice of the peace and never has been.

In conclusion we might note one or two schemes in which Abe was a party, just before his disappearance, when it is believed he went to Kansas. He went up to Corunna last fall, and bought a lot of lumber of M. E. Reynolds, and was to pay a big price for it. He hired a number of teams to haul it to the railrood grounds for shipment. Here it was dumped in a big pile, and Abe took the first train and pulled out, leaving the teams unpaid as well as the hotel bills, and Reynolds had to haul his lumber back. He has not been heard of since. He had before that tried to sell timber belonging to parties living near here, but was caught at it, and stopped. If this Cherryvale business, is not the work of the industrious and much imprisoned Abe Johnson, we are greatly mistaken. Every step shows his style.

Friday's Daily.

When we published some articles yesterday, about the man supposed to be Abe Johnson, we did not suppose it was a case of "to be continued." But to-day brings out another chapter. This morning's mail brought to the First National Bank another installment of Abe's drafts. This one was sent by the Exchange Bank, at Lyndon, Kansas and was for $2180 which we suppose is the price of another Kansas farm. It was made by "Samuel S. Shutt," and in order to insure its payment, a letter to John Boots was sent along in the one containing the draft and advice. It is in the handwriting probably of the cashier, A. A. Downer, but was evidently signed by "Abe" himself. We append this letter in full, and call attention to the way Abe spells "Samuel" by leaving out the "u." He has evidently forgotten how the most prominent man near his former home, does spell his name. The letter is dated at Lyndon, Kansas, June 3, 1896, and reads:

JOHN BOOTS Esq.
Auburn, Ind.

Dear Sir:

I have drawn a sight on my account at the First National Bank of Auburn for $2180. Please take my certificate of deposit to the Bank and endorse it over to them and have them give me credit on my personal account that there may be funds to meet this draft, and this writing shall be your authority for signing my name to the certificate of deposit.

Yours truly,
SAMEL S. SHUTT.

Of course, the draft was returned to Lyndon with the information that it was a forgery.

The author of all these forgeries is without doubt, Abe Jonnson, whose life from the time he was old enough to figure in such jobs, was made up of two lines. One was getting into trouble by forgeries of a foolish sort, and the other staying in the state prison or jail to atone for it. He is not very bright mentally, and has a mania for this sort of trouble.

And the Kansas gobelin will get him if he don't watch out.

Saturday's Daily.

To-day came another letter from Kansas, or rather a draft from Abe Johnson, signed by S. S. Shutt. Like the one we spoke of yesterday, it was forwarded from Lyndon, the amount this time being somewhat reduced, it calling for only $1,450. We suppose he had bought a cheaper farm this time. The National Bank was directed to remit to a bank in Chicago. But of course, the bank did not remit. They have already tried to make the Kansas people understand that Abe is a forger and his transactions in general are frauds. But the Kansas people seem slow to catch on.

Monday's Daily.

Abe Johnson, is still signing an honored name to dishonest paper. Will the people out west never understand this? When cashier Albert Robbins of the Farmers Bank opened his mail morning, he found two sets of drafts sent in by the Pawnee National of Pawnee City, Nebraska. One was for $100 and was dated June, 5. Two others were for $37,700 and $200, dated June 6. Both were signed "S. S. Shutt," and directed to Albert Robbins. The accompanying statement, had the two added together, and contained the request, "Please place the above with the Hanover National Bank of New York, for our credit and oblige." Of course the Farmers Bank is "onto Abe's curves," and when the Pawnee Bank gets the returns from to-day's mails it will be in a situation to judge of Abe Johnson's financial standing, and we hope will not be a loser by his wiles. From the change in location, it is plain he has discovered a penitentiary toward the setting sun and is working his way slowly and laboriously towards it. He'll get there by and by. His acquaintance with men of good financial standing in this county, evidently enables him to play a sleek game. So far however, he seems to be only $20 ahead while rapidly nearing state prison.

Tuesday's Daily.

—In correcting proofs for yesterday's DAILY, a bad error crept into the article concerning the drafts which came to the Farmers Bank. It should have read, "One draft was for $100 and dated June 5, and two others were for $3,700 and $200, dated June 6. Making a total of $4,000, which came to the Farmers Bank. We have also since learned that a draft for $100 signed by "S. S. Shutt," from the First National Bank of Harton, Kan., was received at the National Bank here yesterday. The three drafts which came to the Farmers Bank were from Pawnee City, Neb.

Changes

There are medicines which change the action of organs and tissues. When a part does not properly perform its work, they restore it to health. Such remedies are called "alteratives."

Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil, with Hypophosphites, is one of these remedies. This is largely because of certain drugs which naturally exist in the oil, as iodine and bromine. If you are neither hard sick nor real well; if you feel below your usual standard, these alteratives will change your condition and bring back your health and strength.

SCOTT'S EMULSION has been endorsed by the medical profession for twenty years. (Ask your doctor.) This is because it is always palatable—always uniform—always contains the purest Norwegian Cod-liver Oil and Hypophosphites.

Put up in 50 cent and $1.00 sizes. The small size may be enough to cure your cough or help your baby.

Stabbing Affray.

There was a wicked affair on our streets Saturday evening about nine o'clock, in which Charlie Miles and Wallace Wasson were the principals. The trouble however, began it appears, on Thursday evening when Wasson, who is a son of Lewis R. Wasson, of Concord township, came in to hear the band. It appears that young Miles was also at the public square, and had a girl with him. It is claimed that the girl walked off with Wasson and remained with him and it is supposed this angered Miles. Saturday evening young Wasson was in town again, and the two met accidently at the south side of the public square. Miles accosted Wasson with the remark "We might as well have this out now. Shall we have it out here or go outside the town limits?" Wasson replied that he did not know there was anything "to have out" and then added, "If there is, we might as well have it out right here as anywhere." At that Wasson felt a blow on his face, and as Miles was preparing to strike again, Wasson saw a gleam, as of a knife blade He sprang and caught Miles' arm at the wrist, but Miles jerked away, pulling the knife out through Wasson's hand in such a way as to cut to the bone down across the palm to the wrist cutting the wrist band of the shirt clear through and making a terrible wound. Charlie Fox and another young man happened along and separated them. It was then discovered that Wasson's face was cut by the first blow, and was bleeding freely. He was led to Trout's livery stable and his face bathed, and every effort made to stop the flow of blood, but in vain, and he was then assisted to Dr. Buchtel's office. The Doctor found his hurts were serious. The lower part of the nose was almost severed from his face, and hung by only a small piece. It had been bathed with cold water till it was cold, which would make it more uncertain as to healing. But it was treated with hot water, etc, to restore natural heat, and then sewed on. Of course he could not inhale anything to kill the pain, the nose being helpless, and all the operation had to be done without. The injured hand was also treated, both wounds appearing to be made with a keenly sharpened knife. As soon as the wounded man was in a condition to be moved he was taken home, though by this time he was getting weak from loss of blood. Miles was not arrested. But the whole affair, is a terrible one, and on the part of young Miles, must have been premeditated. A sad part of it all is, that Miles' mother, is a window, a most estimable lady, who is obliged to labor for her own support. And it will be remembered that her daughter; a promising young lady died of consumption about three years ago.

Monday. We met Wasson to-day and find in addition to the parts named, one finger has the end nearly cut off. We have it wrong, about the girl. She was walking with Wasson, when Miles came up and talked to her, and afterwards it appears he told that Wasson had called him names. This, Wasson denies. When the boys met Saturday evening, he says four boys met him, but it was dark and he could not recognize them. He don't even know which struck him, or whether both cuts were made by the same man or two different men, or whether by a knife or razor. He thinks Fred Fox separated them, but Joe Link says he came up while they were fighting and pulled them apart. Wasson had hit Miles a big blow just then. His hurts are bad but there is a prospect that they will heal all right.

A Living Picture.

Mr. G. A. Stillson, a merchant of Tampico, Ill., writes, August 10th, 1891: "Clinic Kidney Cure is meeting with wonderful success. It has cured some cases here that physicians pronounced ncurable. I myself am able to testify to its merits. My face to-day is a living picture of health, and suffered twenty-seven years with the disease, and to-day I feel ten years younger than I did one year ago. I can obtain some wonderful certificates of its medical qualities." 26 Robbins & McCord.

Mrs. H. A. Croy.

Mrs. Margaret Croy, wife of Rev. H. A. Croy died last evening about seven o'clock, at their home in Gas Addition. As often noted in our columns she had for several months been a sufferer, with a fatal disease, some form of internal cancer, and had been gradually wasting away. At times, it was thought she was better, but to those who realized the character of her disease, there was no hope for any relief but in death. She was a patient sufferer, always resigned to what she knew was but the question of a short time, and said she was not only ready and willing to go, but anxious to close these months of suffering. She will be taken to-morrow morning to Columbia City, and interred beside her first husband in the old Scott Cemetery in Troy township in Whitley County. Her age was 53. Mrs. Croy was highly regarded by all who knew her.

My daughter Mattie, aged 14, was afflicted last spring with St. Vitus dance and nervousness, her entire right side was numb and nearly paralyzed. We consulted a physician and he prescribed Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. She took three bottles before we saw any certain signs of improvement, but after that she began to improve very fast and I now think she is entirely cured. She has taken nine bottles of the Nervine, but no other medicine of any kind.

Editorial Meeting.

The Knights and Knightesses of the Quill, Pencil and Scissors Take Two Days of Solid Enjoyment.

Friday's Daily.

The Northern Indiana Editorial Associal hold their 27th annual meeting in Ft. Wayne yesterday and day before. The fraternity of this county was represented by F. W. Willis and wife, Editor Miner, and J. A. Barns and wife, the ladies being members. There was not quite as large an attendance as usual, but the papers read and addresses, were of even more than ordinary excellence and value. Fort Wayne covered herself with glory, by her unstinted hospitality and courtesy, just as she always does on any occasion, when these qualities are in demand. The day sessions were held in city council chamber, and the evening meeting was at the Masonic Temple. At the Temple, Mr. Tillo read an address of welcome, which was excellent as long as it lasted, but at about the point where he had said what he thought was enough, two big policemen stalked onto the stage and arrested him. To add to the fun, as the audience continued to cheer, the cops brought him back, in the most approved style for an "encore." The Hayden Quartet gave us seveal selections, as did also Miss Leo Long, all the songs being in the highest order of musical talent. The play gotten up by the "Newspaper gang" was immense, viewed from any stand point. The "gang." ought to "hire a hall." The evening closed with a banquet at the Wayne Club, given by Mr. Tillo, representative of the Chicago Newspaper Union, Ft. Wayne Branch. It was a fine affair, and newspaper people are infallible judges in this line. And right here, we wish to thank Mr. Tillo for especial favors, including an immense boquet of the loveliest flowers, a gift to Mrs. Barns, who as toastmistress presided at the banquet.

The next day, we were taken in hand by the city railway company and conveyed to the Asylum for Feeble Minded, and then out into the country to their new summer resort at "Swift's Farm." Here, the business of the Society was finished in a brief session. Then there was a lovely and most appetizing lunch, which had been provided by the railway company. On our return, we saw the ball game between Ft Wayne and Washington, and of course saw fine work. It should be added that everything possible was done for the comfort and pleasure of the guests, for which the visitors feel their thanks are due to the press, the city council, city railways and in short, to the citizens all. We shall allude in a future article, more fully to the Asylum, and the summer resort.

Genuine Tarantula.

Albert Weaver Found One of the Ugly Things This Morning.

Thursday's Daily.

Albert Weaver was picking off some bananas from a bunch which hung in front of Hebel Bros. store this morning when he discovered a genuine tarantula hanging to a nest like that of a spider, and all neatly hanging close to the stem of the banana bunch. Of course it was quite cold this morning and the long leged and hairy specie appeared to be dead. Albert's hair stood straight up and he declared he would never pull another banana. The boys got a glass fruit jar and place it in and then warmed the jar over a light. This soon livened it up and everybody was wondering what it was. Webster gives the defination of the tarantula as follows: "A species of spider. Its bites sometimes produces a trifling effect, about equal to the stang of a wasp, and popularly supposed to be cured by music." Tarantism is a fabulous disease supposed to be produced by the bite of a certain spider, the tarantula, and considered to be incapable of cure except by protracted dancing to appropriate music. It is said that the tarantula can leap like a frog, going several feet at one leap.

Fire at St. Joe.

Wednesday's Daily.

Special to the DAILY COURIER.

Last night about ten o'clock our citizens were aroused by an alarm of fire sounded on the streets and in a short time it was discovered to be the residence of Charley O'Neal in Hamburg addition to the town. Mr. and Mrs. O'Neal had retired for the night and were sound asleep, when they were awakened by Henry Hull, one of their near neighbors, and informed that their house was on fire. Soon there was a large crowd on the scene, but all efforts to save the building were of no avail, but the contents were all removed without much damage except to the carpets. The origin of the fire may be traced to a defective flue. Mr. and Mrs. O'Neal had just moved to this place from the South this spring and are considered among our best residents. The burning of this house removes one of the landmarks of the town as it was the first built here when the B. & O. was constructed in 1873. It was insured and Mr. O'Neal is undecided as to whether he will rebuild or not.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife While I was pastor of the Baptist church at Rices Junction she was brought down with pneumonia succeeding lagrippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interuption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in working and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottle free at Robbins & McCord's drug store Regular size 50c and $1:00.

COURT.

Saturday's Daily.

Yesterday and day before the Van-Fleit case, from Garrett, was in court tried by a jury. The state had charged that he, as a justice of the peace, had taken illegal fees amounting to $1.50. Although this was probably owing to his inexperience, it got him into court. But when the case was examined it was found that although some of his fees were charged too high, others were charged too low, and he was really about 80 cents lower on the total than the law had fixed it. So the jury took about five minutes to bring in a verdict of acquittal. It was the result of spite work.

To-day the case against the Standard Oil Company for selling oil not properly branded, came up. The defendant proved that the sending of that bill of oil to Indiana, was an accident. They have different grades of oil, and when Michigan, Ohio or Indiana parties want oil, it will be sent them from the warehouse in which is the oil that has been tested to suit the laws of that state. It was decided that the mistake of sending Ohio test oil to Indiana and selling it was not a crime for which he could be punished. John F. Fink, the agent who handled the oil, was acquitted.

ELECTRIC BITTERS.

Electric Bitters is a medicine suited for any person, but perhaps more generally needed in the Spring, when the languid exhausted feeling prevails, when the liver is torpid and sluggish and the need of a tonic and alterative is felt. A prompt use of this medicine has often averted long and perhaps fatal bilious fevers. No medicine will act more surely in counteracting and freeing the system from the malarial poison. Headache, Indigestion Constipation, Dizziness yield to Electric Bitters. Only fifty cents per bottle at Robbins & McCord's Drug Store.

Thanks To All.

To the citizens of Auburn and vicinity:

I wish to thank my friends and patrons, through this valuable paper, for their kindness and patronage during the first season of the new opera house. It shows to me that our people are worthy of a nice opera house, and they appreciate the same. The house will be closed as far as opera and dramatic companies are concerned, until the next season. I have endeavored to place before you the very best attractions I was able to procure, some of which cost me large guarantees, but I must say when I have told the company was No. 1, they came out and filled the house, and many times so much so that standing room even was not to be had. For this I wish to extend my sincere thanks. On next season I shall use my best endeavors to book nothing but the very best of companies and give to you a class of entertainments superior to those seen in large cities, for the same money, or less. You may rest assured that should any worthless or rotten company work their way into my house, they will be turned down at once and the money refunded to you if possible.

Yours Respectfully,

J. C. HENRY, Mgr. and Prop.

For 25 Cents.

If it required an annual outlay of $100 00 to insure a family against any serious consequences from an attack of bowel complaint during the year there are many who would feel it their duty that they could not afford to risk their lives, and those of their family for such an amount. Any one can get this insurance for 25 cents, that being the price of a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. In almost every neighborhood some one has died from an attack of bowel complaint before medicine could be procured or a physician summoned. One or two doses of this remedy will cure any ordinary case. It never fails. Can you afford to take the risk for so small an amount? For sale by Davenport the Druggist. 26

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

The fac-simile signature of Chas. H. Fletcher is on every wrapper.

DUN'S REPORT.

No Improvement in the Market—Fluctuations Benefit Individuals Only.

R. G. Dun & Co. says in their weekly review of trade:

Speculative action has not the least changed the business outlook. The fictitious price made for wheat and cotton meant no good except for individuals, and the change to prices more nearly in accord with actual relations of demand and supply only conforms to conditions which have been well known for months. The attacks on stocks recently was so plainly artificial that its influence passed with the day and neither in foreign relations nor in domestic business was there anything to justify alarm. The government report as to wheat indicated a much smaller yield than anybody really expects, but that has become so much the rule that the report had no real influence, and the principal effect was the serious depreciation caused by large sales in anticipation of the report, which seemed to be thoroughly known in advance to some speculators. The government estimate as to cotton was unexpectedly favorable and has caused a decline of more than half a cent in a single week.

A Brute's Neck Saved.

West Baden (Ind.,) special: Near French Lick Springs, Alexander Breedlove criminally assaulted Effie Stogsdill, 11 years of age. In a short time a large posse of excited citizens were scouring the woods. Breedlove was captured and taken before Squire W. J. Prow at West Baden, and pleaded guilty to the charge of assault. The guests of the hotel at West Baden Springs were much wrought over the affair, and it was only by prompt action of the officers that the ruffian's neck was saved. The girl was seriously injured. Breedlove was spirited away overland by Officer Dickey to the County jail at Paoli, to await the action of the Circuit Court.

Outrage by Tramps.

Ulrichsville (O.) special: A gang of tramps held up a south bound C., L. & W. train in the South Ulrichsville yard, and they succeed in riding as far as Newport. Nine shots were fired by the daring fellows, and Brakeman Harris was hammered over the face with the butt end of a revolver in the hands of one of them. Some time during the night a car standing on the Panhandle spur, near the C., L. & W. freight house, was broken into and twelve pairs of ladies' shoes were taken from boxes belonging to R. B. Shaffer, a local dealer. The police have not been able to run them down yet.

Died While Signaling Danger.

John Ammon, agent for the Clover Leaf at Douglass, Ohio, was stricken with paralysis while standing on the platform of the station with a red flag in his hand, signaling down a freight train to prevent its being wrecked at a culvert which had been washed out a short distance down the track. The train came to a stand still, and the trainmen found Ammon to be dead, the attack being fatal. Ammon was one of the oldest agents of the Clover Leaf.

A Hold-Up.

Montgomery (Va.) special: The westbound express on the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad, was held up between Cotton Hill and Kanawha Falls, by three men, who, after a short fight with the train crew, made their escape without securing any booty. Jack Maynard of Scary, W. Va., L. M. Martin and George F. Stringer of Richmond, Va., were subsequently arrested near the scene of the attack, and are in jail.

War on Saloons.

The woman city government at Ellis, Kan., is at war with illegal liquor venders, and all but two violators have been prosecuted and languish in jail. At the recent election the women promised, if given control of the city, to drive out gamblers and "jointists." They have made good the pledge. The County Attorney is being prosecuted on the charge of accepting money from a "joint ist."

Hesing Will Bolt.

Postmaster Washington Hesing of Chicago announces that if the Democratic party declares for free silver and the Republican party declares for a gold standard, he and his paper, the Chicago Staats Zeitung, will bolt the Democratic party and work for the Republican nominee.

Starts on a Long Tramp.

Sam. M. Montgomery, a well-known young man of Versailles, Ky., started on a tramp to San Francisco. He expects to make forty miles a day, and calculates on walking the distance by the first of October.

The Cyclone Scared Him So.

John R. Best, a wealthy lumber dealer, committed suicide at his residence, St. Louis, Mo., by cutting his throat with a razor. His act was due to the temporary aberration of mind produced by fright at the violence of the recent cyclone. Mr. Best was manager for the Big Four Lumber Company, of Arkansas.

The G. R. & I. Railroad Sold.

The Grand Rapids and Indiana Railroad has been sold to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company for $500,000 subject to first and second mortgage bonds.

Repudiated Their Bonds.

The City Council, of Kent, Ohio, has decided not to make any levy to pay interest on the $80,000 improvement bonds, the money from which was used to buy factories, which didn't prove successful. This is a repudiation of the debt, and suits will doubtless follow, which will test the legality of the bonding business. Spitzer & Co., of Toledo, bought the bonds.

Heavy Losses.

Advices received here from Canea, Island of Crete, announce that the insurgents on Saturday, defeated the Turkish troops and captured four guns and 200 Martini-Henry rifles. Both sides sustained heavy loss.

WILL CALL MILITIA

If Milwaukee's Sheriff Does Not Protect Property.

Milwaukee special: Formal notice has been served upon the Sheriff of Milwaukee county to-day by the electric railway company that he must protect the company's suburban lines and the men who worked thereon, and if unable to do so a call must be made on the Governor to order out the troops. The notice was served through company's attorney. As a result of this notification, Sheriff Stanley took a force of thirty deputy sheriffs to Silver City, the suburb where riots occurred, and lined the railway track with fires. Cars were run on that line during the night without disturbance last night for the first time in four weeks. The two men shot the other night are still alive, but Motorman Breen can not live. The police have learned that the party in ambush numbered twelve or fifteen persons. Six arrests have been made.

Cuban Affairs.

A dispatch to the Madrid Imparcial from Havana, says that the Cuban harvest this year will be only one-eighth that of 1895. The authorities are concerned regarding the condition of the laborers in the island, and are trying to prevent them from joining the insurgents. Four months pay is owing to the army. The dispatch adds that the forces of Maceo are overrunning the Province of Pinar Del Rio.

Havana special: On Thursday last a force of Havana volunteers who were acting as a garrison on the Precioso estate, near Cardenas, met a large rebel party and an engagement took place, in which the volunteers were defeated and compelled to retire. Several of the government's force were killed and two wounded. Lieutenant Vasquez and two other Spaniards were captured, but were released after signing a document in which they bound themselves to never again fight against the Cuban patriots.

An Editor Shot.

San Francisco special: John Hays, assistant editor of the San Francisco Journal of Commerce, was shot and fatally wounded by Mrs. W. R. McDougall in a room at a lodging house, No. 330 McAllister street. The murderess then shot herself twice through the breast and expired by the side of her victim. Hays was removed to the receiving hospital, where he died a few minutes later. The murdered man made an ante-mortem statement to the effect that he had been intimate with Mrs. McDougall, but desired to break their acquaintance. When he so informed the woman she became violently enraged, seized a pistol and shot him through the breast as he lay on the bed. Before he could disarm her she fired two bullets into her own breast, dying almost instantly.

Stabbed in Court.

Maysville (Ky.) special: At Flemingsburg, during a trial, while certain testimony referring to a daughter of John Hanley was given by a witness, the father of the girl became enraged at Charles McIntyre, the defendant, and pounced upon him with a knife, and would have killed him in the presence of the court had not members of the bar interfered. Hanley leaped over the table and threw McIntyre to the floor, stabbing him twice in the back and once in the right hand, and had the knife pressed to his throat, when caught and separated by Judge Boone. During the excitement County Clerk McCreary leaped out of a window, receiving serious bruises.

Manley Gives It Up.

The Boston Journal publishes the following dispatch from St. Louis:

"I would vote for Reed if I stood alone, simply because I believe he is the representative of the party in the country, the strongest and ablest man that we have in public life to-day. I hope his friends will stand by him in this convention. His name will be presented to the convention by Senator Lodge. The vote in the national committee was so overwhelmingly for McKinley that it settles his nomination on the first ballot. It is useless to deny this; it is conceded on all hands.

"J. H. MANLEY."

An Offer to Harrison.

A New York newspaper has offered Gen. Harrision $10,000 to go to St. Louis and write for it his impressions of the national convention. The proposition was that the General should not be limited to space, but the paper wished it understood that it would expect at least 100 words a day. It was announced at the General's home that he had not seriously considered the offer. He will not accept it.

Tornado in Michigan.

Lansing (Mich) special: A tornado struck this city from the west shortly after 11 o'clock Monday, and a terrible wind and rain storm followed. It was the worst storm experienced here in years. Trees were uprooted, scores of them were broken off and numerous outbuildings were overturned. The rain fell in torrents.

A Monstrous Iceberg.

St. Johns (N. F.) special: An enormous iceberg almost completely bars the narrows at the entrance to this harbor, and has caused great damage to vessels entering port. Over 100 craft have been forced to anchor off the entrance.

Death of a Millionaire.

W. J. Young, the millionaire lumber man, died at Clinton, Iowa, after a prolonged illness. He was 69 years old.

G. O. P. CONVENTION.

ST. LOUIS GREETS THE REPUBLICAN HOST.

Fourteen Thousand Workers and Shouters Will Have Seats in the Great Auditorium—Splendid Building for the Convention.

All in Readiness.

St. Louis Correspondence:

Thirteen thousand six hundred and one persons will have seats in the great auditorium erected for the Republican national convention. A few more chairs may possibly be squeezed in. The contractor and architects planned a building big enough to hold 14,000 chairs, and when the real push and crush begins, the full number may be utilized, but if there were twice 14,000 chairs, it is doubtful if the number would be large enough to seat all the people in St. Louis who want to see the doings on the first day of the convention.

This great white auditorium will shelter the ghosts of many dissipated booms before the nation is much older. The building is of wood, covered with blocks of white staff, which give it the appearance of glistening marble. The building stands on the site of the new city hall, and must be completely removed by Oct. 1. It cost $70,000, and many people would like to see it remain for future use of conventions and the like, but others who remember the fate of the Chicago World's Fair buildings, regard it as a menace in case of fire and will be happy when the last of it is torn down.

There are 100 and more exits and entrances, and in case of panic or fire, it is estimated that the building could be emptied in five minutes. In this and many other respects, it is superior to the buildings in which national conventions of the past have been held, although it is the largest. The Minneapolis convention hall had but 11,000 seats, and there was smaller space at each of the preceding conventions.

An Immense Structure.

The auditorium has a frontage of 260 feet and a depth of 180, covering an area of 46,800 square feet. The space allotted to the delegates and alternates covers an area of 18,000 square feet in the center of the auditorium. The seats in this immense inclosure are on a level, and not in tiers. Immediately in front of the speaker's stand are 924 seats for the accommodation of delegates. There are two inclosures for alternates, one to the right and the other to the left of the delegates' seats. Each of these inclosures have accommodations for 462 alternates. The entire space allotted to the delegates and alternates is open, with no pillars to obstruct the view. The speakers' platform occupies a central position on the northern side of the hall, just in front of the delegates, and just opposite the main entrance.

SERGEANT-AT-ARMS BYRNES ENTERTAINING APPLICANTS FOR POSITIONS.

The roof immediately above the spaces assigned to the delegates and alternates is really a canopy of glass. The glass frames can be raised or closed at will, giving the hall an abundance of both light and air. Should one of the famous hot blasts of St. Louis hit the town at the time of the convention the building will not be the bake oven which some of the delegates fear. Dozens of ventilating fans will keep the air in the auditorium in motion, although the efforts of some of the cyclone orators could be counted upon to perform that feature of the program.

Around the square pit assigned to the delegates and alternates on three of the sides are vast tiers of seats for the public. The fourth side will be apportioned among specially invited guests and the public. On either side of the speakers' platform are the tables for the newspaper reporters. Each press table has been fitted with a pneumatic tube connecting with the telegraph offices located under the tiers of seats at the back of the speakers' platform. While more than a thousand newspaper men will attend the convention, it is not expected that more than 400 will do active work in the auditorium. Two hundred wires or more will run out of the building and there will be operators enough to keep them red hot with news all the time.

A gallery, forty feet wide, which runs around the four sides of the building, extending back up to the roof, has chairs for 6,000 of the public. Of the 8,000 chairs down stairs the public will have the use of about 4,500. At least 50,000 of the good citizens of St. Louis and the nearby towns expect to sit out the convention from the beginning to the end, so it is quite evident that some of them are going to be disappointed. From the outside, however, they can at least hear the band of 150 pieces play the campaign airs. This band is to be located on a stand in the central part of the northern gallery.

Leading Lights.

Aside from Maj. McKinley the two most conspicuous men at the convention will be the great Marcus Aurelius Hanna and the Hon. Joseph Benson Foraker. Hanna expects to replace Tom Carter, of Montana, as chairman of the national committee, and upon Foraker has fallen the honor of presenting the name of the Ohio statesman to the convention.

The centers of interest when the convention is not in session will, of course, be the headquarters of the various candidates. There rumors will fly quicker than rain drops in an April shower, and extraordinary tips, "straight from the inside," will circulate with the freedom of a green goods man's circulars. Some of the Ohio boomers have their headquarters at the Planters', but a considerable portion of the delegation sleep at the Southern. Ohio is well represented at the Southern. One large room is used as general headquaters for Ohio people. These rooms are on the ground, or office, floor. Upstairs on the parlor floor, adjoining the Reed headquarters, are the McKinley headquarters, taking up five rooms. The Morton headquarters and the Allison headquarters are also at the Southern. Senator Quay has the ladies' ordinary at the Planters', the ladies' parlor at the Lindell and two parlors at the Laclede for his headquarters.

The personage of greatest importance at this stage is Sergeant-at-arms Byrnes, of Minnesota, who has been on the ground off and on for several weeks, attending to the details of the convention arrangements. These are the days when the Sergeant-at-arms begins to perspire. He is the busiest man in town—the one who receives the greatest number of letters, answers more questions, is the most sought after by the incoming politicians, and the one who is supposed to present the most unruffled front all the time. The man with the silver platform plank in his pocket is among the early comers. He is P. H. Lannon, publisher of the Salt Lake Tribune.

Among the other celebrities early on the field are National Committeeman M. H. De Young of California, known familiarly as "Mike," who is fond of anything there is excitement in, from a political convention to a running race, and National Committeeman Powell Clayton of Arkansas, one of the stanchest of the original McKinley men and a political fighter from the ground up. Cy Leland of Kansas, who has represented that State on the national committee for twelve years, and National Committeeman Grant of Texas also got in early.

Then there are ex-Congressman A. C. Thompson of Ohio, who has been in charge of the McKinley forces in the field while waiting for the larger hosts to arrive, and Col. Swords of Iowa, who occupies the important position of sergeant-at-arms of the national committee. Col. C. B. Wing, of Cincinnati, a member of Gov. Bushnell's staff, has come in advance to prepare the people of St. Louis for the advent of the Young Men's Blaine Club of Cincinnati, one of the largest marching organizations in the country.

Discrimination Is Denied.

James Cox, secretary of the Business Men's League, denied emphatically that the negroes were being discriminated against by the hotels. He said that Committeeman Hill of Mississippi had no right to complain if he could not find hotel accommodations. A letter had been written to him more than a month ago, telling him that unless early application was made all the rooms at the hotels would be taken. In this letter the Business Men's League offered to engage rooms for Mr. Hill and the Mississippi delegation. He did not reply to this.

"Furthermore," continued Mr. Cox, "Mr. Hill has not been to see us since he came to the city. If he will come here we will find him good rooms and board. All this talk about the color line is nonsense. We made the promise to take care of the colored delegates and will do it. If they refuse to come and let us know they desire lodgings, then the fault is not ours."

This convention is unique for two reasons, and before it is over it will probably be unique for several more. In the first place it is the first time that the leaders of the G. O. P. have taken a Southern city for its meeting place since the war. In the second place, exactly forty years ago the first convention of the Republican party was held in Philadelphia on June 16, 1856.

PRESS BUREAU AT M'KINLEY HEADQUARTERS.

It is the opinion of shrewd politicians that the convention will be either a very short or a very long one. There will be more than 900 delegates to handle, the greatest number that has ever attended a national convention, and the number of contesting delegations will be very large. This latter fact means many dreary waits before actual business begins.

A WOMAN DELEGATE.

Mrs. Fales Will Represent New York County at the Populist Convention.

Mrs. Imogene C. Fales has been elected a delegate to the national Populist convention at St. Louis by the Populists of the city and county of New York. This is the first time that such an honor has been awarded to a woman. Mrs. Fales has studied economics for twenty years and is an ardent believer in the principles of the radical division of the Populist party, as embodied in the Omaha platform. She is about 40 years old, and possesses a brilliant mind. Mrs. Fales has traveled extensively abroad, and is thoroughly conversant with the social status of all the large cities.

MRS. IMOGENE C. FALES.

FIVE TONS OF BOGUS MONEY.

Seized by the Secret Service Department of the Treasury.

At Washington within the next few days will be destroyed five tons of counterfeit money, machines and other necessary articles used in the manufacture of the "queer." This amount of "stuff" has been gathered by the secret service division of the treasury, and occupies so much room that its destruction has become necessary. As much care is taken of the bogus money as there is of the good. Every cent must be accounted for. Three of the most trustworthy men in the Treasury Department will be selected to superintend the destruction of the counterfeit. Every package will be opened in their presence, and they will watch the counting of the contents, which must correspond to the memoranda in the record book. Finally, all of the coin, as well as metal tools and other apparatus, will be carried down stairs and put aboard one of the big ironclad wagons which are used by the department for carrying money.

By a special arrangement with the Secretary of the Navy, one of the great blast furnaces in the gunshop will be placed at the disposal of the committee. The weighty packages will be taken from the wagon and stacked up in front of the furnace, which is like unto that one which was seven times heated. Into it the stuff will be unceremoniously shoveled, the coin first and then the counterfeiters' machines, engraved steel plates for false notes, implements of various kinds, etc. Such things as jimmies and brass knuckles go with the rest. In the lot will be a great quantity of metal tokens, representing money, such as are used by manufacturing and mining companies, particularly in the South, for paying their employes.

Together with the lot go in not a few things of odd sorts. Among them are advertising tags of tin, made in rude imitation of silver quarters. These are not intended to serve a criminal purpose, but the secret service gobbles them just the same. In the collection now on hand are a number of so-called coin clusters, intended for paper weights. They represent clusters of gold and silver pieces. What is cast into the furnace, including the machinery, etc., is reduced to unrecognizable shapes and sold to junk dealers.

Thus far nothing has been said of the way in which the paper counterfeits are destroyed. They are put into a big tank with hot water and acids and are cooked and stirred about for many hours, until at length they are reduced to the condition of pulp. The pulp is dried, pressed into thick sheets and sold for paper stock. The process is the same as that which is applied to the damaged paper money redeemed by the treasury. Into the great vat a few days hence will go large quantities of "flash money," which term is used to describe the printed advertisements in imitation of the national currency, with which the country is at all times flooded, notwithstanding the utmost efforts of the Government to suppress them. They are confiscated wherever the detectives of the secret service come across them. Calendars bearing likenesses of silver certificates and hat bands with representations of gold coins come under this head. Not long ago a large number of soda water checks resembling nickel pieces were seized in Chicago.

ANDERSON'S ESCAPE.

How a Real Estate Dealer's Presence of Mind Averted a Disaster.

A circus trick seldom seen out of the sawdust arena was performed by Mr. L. E. Anderson, a St. Louis real estate man, a few days ago. It narrowly averted a collision and probably saved a man's life, although Mr. Anderson himself was painfully though not seriously injured in the fray. Mr. Anderson is considered to be the crack horseman of St. Louis. He is the owner of a fine saddle horse, a spirited animal, with which he is on the most intimate terms.

A few evenings ago he rode out to Forest Park, as is his daily custom. The animal was in high feather and sped lustily along one of the narrower driveways of the park. Suddenly Mr. Anderson noticed a bicycle rider scorching toward him. There was no time for clearing away, and a collision seemed inevitable. With rare presence of mind Mr. Anderson gave his horse the spurs, lifted him up by the bridle and made him stand on his hand legs. The scorching wheelman, scarcely realizing the danger he was escaping, passed underneath horse and rider unharmed. It was a remarkable spectacle for those who were lucky enough to be near. But the horse careened in some way, and Mr. Anderson's left hand was broken in the middle. It will be some time before he will be able to use it again. The inspiration of the moment and the instantaneous obedience of the animal to its master's touch saved the wheelman's life, or at least his limbs, for a moment later he would have run into the cluttering horse.

GENERAL WARNER.

Man Who Inspired the Bolt in the Prohibition Convention.

Adoniram Judson Warner, the president of the Bimetallic League, who inspired the bolt of the silver men in the Prohibition national convention, has written a few books on the financial problem. In 1882 he published "Sources and Value of Money," and in 1887 "Appreciation of Money." He is an all-round man. He was a captain at the beginning of the war in a regiment from Pennsylvania and was rapidly promoted to lieutenant colonel, colonel, and finally brevet brigadier general. He took part in most of the engagements of the Army of the Potomac and was wounded at Antietam. After the war he read law and was admitted to the Indianapolis bar. He moved to Ohio to conserve his coal and railroad interests, and it was from that State that he went to serve his country in Congress. He sat, as a Democrat, in the Forty-sixth, Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses and was appointed on many important committees of these Congresses. Gen. Warner is a Virginian by birth, and is 62 years old. He graduated from Beloit, and was at one time principal of the Lewiston, Pa., Academy.

ADONIRAM J. WARNER.

CAUGHT A HOBO.

These Two Old Maids Don't Need a Man Around the House.

The village of North Rose, N. Y., was excited Monday when Mary Jane Hurley and her old maid sister, Sarah Ann Hurley, tramped in from the country leading an unkempt tramp, around whose neck was a rope, while his arms were bound together behind his back. The hobo was taken to Justice of the Peace Oakes, who was eating breakfast. He suspended the meal to inquire into the cause of the tumult in front of his house.

It appears that the tramp, who was wending his weary way from Port Glasgow to North Rose, stopped for the night in Hurley's barn. The two old maids live alone three miles from North Rose, and do weaving for a living. They own a farm of two acres, and keep a cow and some chickens. Monday morning the tramp got up and began milking the cow in a tomato can. He was seen by Mary Jane, who was coming with a pail on the same errand. She sneaked up behind the tramp, pulled him over backward and held him fast until her sister, in answer to screams, came out to see what was going on. The tramp was tied securely, his hands pinioned behind his back; while a piece of clothesline was wrapped around his neck, by which he was led to town by Mary Jane, the other sister following, armed with a horsewhip to keep the prisoner in order.

The tramp said he meant no harm in sleeping in Hurley's barn nor in milking the cow. He claimed to be Patrick Flynn, a potter from Catskill, on his way to Akron, O. The amazons insisted that Flynn be made an example of. They shuddered to think how he might have burned up the barn. The tramp was charged with petit larceny, disorderly conduct and vagrancy.

NATIONAL SOLONS.

REVIEW OF THEIR WORK AT WASHINGTON.

Detailed Proceedings of Senate and House—Bills Passed or Introduced in Either Branch—Questions of Moment to the Country at Large.

The Legislative Grind.

Mr. Morgan gave the Senate a spirited revival of the Cuban question Friday, after which most of the day was spent in waiting for conference agreements on appropriation bills. Mr. Morgan urged the adoption of his resolution calling on the President for information of the Americans taken on the Competitor and now under sentence of death at Havana. The Senator asserted that the President's inaction was a violation of law. Mr. Morgan declared that Congress should not adjourn without authorizing the President to send warships to Cuba to demand the release of the American prisoners. On the suggestion of Mr. Sherman, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Senate went into secret session, where, after a further argument by Mr. Morgan, his resolution was placed on the calendar, a parliamentary move equivalent to postponing action. In the House, Mr. Grosvenor called up his resolution requesting the President and the several cabinet officers for a detailed statement of the removals from office since March 3, 1893, and the appointments since that date, together with the number of ex-soldiers who have been appointed, promoted, reduced or removed. The resolution was adopted—147 to 48. The vote on the contested election case of Martin vs. Lockhart from the Seventh North Carolina district resulted 113 to 5. Mr. Martin came forward and took the oath. The Rinaker-Downing contest from Illinois resulted in favor of Mr. Rinaker.

President Cleveland Saturday vetoed the general deficiency appropriation bill. The President objected to it because of provisions for the payment of French spoliation and Chouteau claims and other items which he does not enumerate. When the message was read to the House a motion to pass the bill notwithstanding the veto was lost—40 to 149. Thereupon the House promptly sent to the Senate a new bill without the features to which the President objected. This was not done without some spirited debate, during which the President was bitterly attacked. The Senate had barely a quorum, and nothing of importance was done.

The new deficiency bill, framed to meet the objections of the President's recent veto, passed in the Senate Monday, as it came from the House, amid great cheering. When the immigration bill was taken up Mr. Morgan of Alabama spoke in support of his amendment, that the restrictions of the act should not apply to persons coming to this country from Cuba. He said no country had contributed a better class of people to this country's population than Cuba. In the House, the Sherman resolution relative to Virginia bonds was adopted. A special deficiency bill providing for the pay of salaries of members seated by the House and for several other minor matters was passed under suspension of the rules; also a bill to establish a site for the erection of a penitentiary at Fort Leavenworth, Kan. The conference report on the Indian appropriation bill containing the compromise relative to the old settlers' claim was agreed to and the bill sent to further conference. Mr. Daniels again called up the Aldrich-Underwood contested election case. This aroused the ire of the Democrats. The question of consideration was raised, but this time the House decided, 130 to 68, to consider the case. During the progress of the roll call many of the Democrats left the hall. Mr. McMillin of Tennessee attempted to force a division on the conference report on the District of Columbia bill as a means of developing that no quorum was present, but Mr. Dalzell of Pennsylvania, who was temporarily in the chair, manipulated the parliamentary situation so as to prevent this, and subsequently, despite the warm protests of Mr. Terry of Arkansas, declined to entertain an appeal from his decision. The District of Columbia appropriation bill was sent back to further conference, and the house took a recess.

The Senate Tuesday agreed to final conference reports on the naval and Indian appropriation bills. The resolution for an inquiry into the circumstances of the award of the statue of Gen. W. T. Sherman was defeated. A supplementary deficiency bill, covering mileage of new members of the House and other minor items, was passed. A House bill was passed authorizing the Attorney General to select a site and secure plans for a Federal prison on the military reservation at Leavenworth, Kan. The House gave its final approval to conference reports on two of the four appropriation bills—the naval and the Indian bills. Most of the day in the House was devoted to the consideration of the Aldrich-Underwood contested election case from the Ninth Alabama district. The Democrats attempted to filibuster, but were overcome, and when the vote was taken the contestant, Mr. Aldrich, who is a brother of Mr. Aldrich who was seated in the place of Mr. Robbins, was given the seat by a vote of 116 to 107. Fifty Republicans voted with the Democrats against this action.

A number of bills were passed by the Senate Wednesday, including the important bill giving trial by jury and other safeguards in prosecution for contempt of court. The measure has been vigorously urged by labor interests, particularly railroad employes. It is the outcome of the agitation resulting from the imprisonment of Eugene V. Debs for contempt of an injunction issued at the time of the Chicago strike. The bill as passed continues the power of summary punishment when an offense is committed in the immediate presence of a judge. But in indirect contempts, such as violation of an injunction, the bill provides that the accused shall be given a full hearing, with opportunities to summon witnesses and offer a defense. The Senate bill to increase the pay of the letter carriers was passed. An enormous amount of business was transacted by the House. Fifty-three bills and joint resolutions were passed, the most important of which, probably, was the bill appropriating $200,000 for the Transmississippi exposition at Omaha. Bills were passed to extend the scope of the investigation of the Agricultural Department into the question of road improvements, to authorize the Butler and Pittsburg Railroad to construct a bridge across the Alleghany river, and to grant permission for the erection of a monument in Washington in honor of Samuel Hahnemann. A bill was passed to pension the widow of the late Brigadier General John H. Gibbon at the rate of $50 per month. A bill was passed to amend the shipping laws so as to provide still further for the comfort and health of sailors.

THE SILENT SHORE.

By John Blundell Burton

CHAPTER II.

A few days after Ida Raughton had been indulging in those summer noontide meditations, Walter Cundall arrived at his house in Grosvenor place.

Things were so well ordered in the establishment of which he was master, that a telegram from Liverpool, dispatched a few hours earlier, had been sufficient to cause everything to be in readiness for him.

He walked into his handsome library, followed by a staid, grave man-servant, and, sitting down in one of his favorite chairs, said:

"Well, West, what's the news in London?"

"Not much, sir; at least nothing that would interest you. There are a good many balls and parties going on, of course, sir. Sir Paul Raughton's man and me were a-talking together, sir, last night at our little place of meeting, and he told me as how Sir Paul was going to have quite a large party down at his place, you know, sir, to celebrate—to celebrate—I mean for Ascot, sir."

"Well?"

"Well, of course, sir, you'll be wanted there, too, sir. Indeed, Sir Paul's man said as how his master had been making inquiries about the time you was a-coming back, sir, and said he should like to have you there. And, of course, they want to cele—I mean to keep it up, sir. Now, I'll go and fetch you the letters that have come since I sent you the last mail."

While the servant was gone Walter Cundall lay back in his chair and meditated. He was a handsome man, with a dark, shapely head, and fine, well-marked features.

As he sat in his chair he wondered why Providence had been so unfailingly good to him through his life; why it had showered upon him—while he was still young enough to enjoy it—the comforts that other men spent their lives in toiling to obtain, and then often failed at last to get.

"And now," he said to himself, "let Fortune give me but one more gift and I am content. Let me have as partner of all I possess the fairest woman in the world; let my sweet, gentle Ida tell me that she loves me—as I know she does—and what more can I ask? Ah, Ida!" he went on, apostrophizing the woman he loved, "I wonder if you have guessed how, night after night, during these long six months, I have sat on my veranda gazing up at the stars that look like moons there, wondering if your dear eyes were looking at them in their feeble glory here? I wonder if you have ever thought during my long absence that not an hour went by, at night or day, when I was not thinking of you? Yes, you must have done so; you must have done so! There was everything in your look, in your voice to tell me that you loved me, that you were only waiting for me to speak. And now I will speak. I will deprive myself no longer of the love that will sweeten my life."

The man-servant came back with an enormous bundle of letters that made Cundall laugh when he saw them.

"Why, West!" he exclaimed, "you don't imagine that I am going to wade through these now, do you?"

"I think they're mostly invitations, sir," the servant answered, "from people who did not know when you would be back."

"Well, give them to me. I will open a few of those the handwriting of which I recognize, and Mr. Stuart can go through the rest to-morrow."

Mr. Stuart was one of Cundall's secretaries, who, when his employer was in town, had sometimes to work night and day to keep pace with his enormous correspondence, but who was now disporting himself at Brighton.

The valet came down at this moment to take his master's orders, and to say that his bath was ready.

"I shall dine quietly at the club to-night," Mr. Cundall said, "and then, to-morrow I will make a few calls and let my friends know I have returned. Is there anything else, West?"

"No, sir. Oh, I beg pardon, sir! I had almost forgot. Lady Chesterton called the day before yesterday to ask when you would be back. When I told her ladyship you were expected, she left a note for you. It's in that bundle you have selected, I think, sir."

Cundall looked through the letters until he found the one in question, and, on opening it, discovered that it contained an invitation for a ball on that evening.

As Lady Chesterton was a hostess whom he liked particularly, he made up his mind that he would look in, if only for an hour. It was as good a way as any of letting people know that he was back in town, and his appearance at her house and at the club would be quite enough to do so.

It was eight o'clock when he entered the latter institution, and his arrival was hailed with a chorus of greeting. Two or three of them made up a table and sat down to dinner, and Cundall told them that he was going to Lady Chesterton's later on.

But neither here, nor over their coffee afterwards, did any of his friends tell him that he would meet there the girl he was thought to admire, attended in all probability by her future husband, Lord Penlyn.

As, at eleven o'clock, he made his way up the staircase to greet his hostess, he again met many people whom he knew, and, by the time he at last reached Lady Chesterton, it was rapidly being told about the ball room that Walter Cundall was back in town again.

"I declare you look better than ever," her ladyship said, as she welcomed him. "Your bronzed and sunburnt face makes all the other men seem terribly pale and ghastly. How you must enjoy roaming about the world as you do!"

He answered with a smile and a remark that, after all, there was no place like London, and that he was getting very tired of rambling, when he turned round and saw Ida Raughton coming towards him on the arm of Lord Penlyn.

"How do you do, Miss Raughton?" he said, taking her hand and giving one swift look into her eyes. How beautiful she was, he thought; and as he looked he wondered how he could have gone away and left her without speaking of his love. Well, no matter, the parting was over now!

"How do you do, Penlyn?" he said, shaking him cordially by the hand.

"When did you return?" Ida asked. Until this moment she had no idea that he was back in England.

"I landed at Liverpool late last night," he answered, "and came up to town to-day. Lady Chesterton, hearing of my probable arrival, was kind enough to leave an invitation for me to-night."

Before any more could be said the band began to play, and Lord Penlyn turned round to Cundall and said:

"I am engaged for this dance, though it is only a square one. Will you look after Miss Raughton until I return?"

"With pleasure, or until some favored partner comes to claim her. But," turning to her, "I presume you are also engaged for this dance, 'though it is only a square one.'"

"No," she said, "you know I never dance them."

"Shall we go round the rooms, then?" he asked, offering her his arm. "It is insufferably hot here! How cool and pleasant the conservatory looks!" he said, as they passed the entrance to it. "Shall we go in and sit down until you are claimed for the next dance?"

She assented, and they went in and took possession of two chairs that were standing beneath some great palms and cacti.

"I should think that after the heat you have been accustomed to you would feel nothing in England," she said.

"In Honduras we are suitably clad," he answered, laughing, "and evening dress suits are not in much request. But I am very glad to be wearing one again, and once more talking to you. I can do as I please now, I could not hitherto. I will tell you what I mean. Until a month ago the property I owned in Honduras required my constant attention and necessitated my visiting the place once at least in every two years. But of late this has become irksome to me—I will explain why in a moment—and my last visit was made with a view to disposing of that property. This I have made arrangements for doing, and I shall go no more to that part of the world. Now," and his voice became very low, but clear, as he spoke, "shall I tell you why I have broken forever with Honduras?"

"Yes," she said. "You have told me so often of your affairs that you know I am always interested in them. Tell me."

Then, as the strains of the waltz were heard from the ball room, he said:

"It is because I want to settle down in England and make it my home. Because I want a wife to make that home welcome to me, because I have long loved one woman and have only waited until my return to tell her so. Ida, you are that woman! I love you better than anything in this world! Tell me that you will be my wife!"

For answer she drew herself away from him, pale and trembling visibly, and trying to speak.

"You cannot have heard," she said, "no one can have told you that——"

"That what! What is there to tell?"

"That I am engaged."

"Engaged!" he said, rising to his feet. "Engaged! while I have been away. Oh! it cannot be, it is impossible! You must have seen, you must have known of my love for you. It cannot be true!"

"It is true, Mr. Cundall."

"True!" Then he paused a moment and endeavored to recover himself. When he had done so he said very quietly, but in a deep, hoarse voice: "I congratulate you, Miss Raughton. May I ask who is the fortunate gentleman?"

"I am engaged to Lord Penlyn."

He took a step backward and ejaculated:

"Lord Penlyn! Lord——"

Then once more he recovered himself, and said: "Shall I take you back to the ball room? Doubtless he is looking for you now."

"I am very sorry for your disappointment," she said, looking up at him with a pale face; his emotion had startled her, "very sorry. I would not wound you for the world. And there are so many other women who will make you happy."

"I wanted no other woman but you," he said.

CHAPTER III.

Lord Penlyn and his friend and companion, Philip Smerdon, had returned from their yachting tour about a fortnight before Walter Cundall arrived in London from Honduras.

The discovery he had made at Le Vocq had had such an effect upon his thoughts and mind that he almost dreaded meeting Ida Raughton.

He was an honorable, straightforward man, and, with the exception of being possessed of a somewhat violent and obstinate temper when thwarted in anything he had set his heart upon, had no perceptible failings.

Above all, he hated secrecy, or secrecy's next-door neighbor, untruth; and it seemed to him that, if not Ida, at least Ida's father, should be told about the discovery he had made.

"With the result," said Philip Smerdon, who was possessed of a cynical nature, "that Miss Raughton would be shocked at hearing of your father's behavior, and that Sir Paul would laugh at you."

Philip Smerdon stood in the position to him of old school fellow and playmate, of a 'Varsity friend, and, later on, of companion and secretary.

Had they been brothers they could scarcely have been—would probably not have been—as close friends as they were.

When they were at Harrow, and afterwards at Christ Church, Oxford, they had been inseparable, and, in point of means, entirely on an equality, Philip's father being a reputed, and, apparently, enormously wealthy contractor in the North.

But, one day, without the least warning, without a word from his father or the slightest stopping of his allowance, he learned, by a telegram in a paper, that his father had failed for a stupendous sum, and was undoubtedly ruined forever.

The news turned out to be true, and Philip knew that henceforth he would have to earn his own living instead of having a large income to spend.

Lord Penlyn offered his friend the post of his secretary combined with steward, which at that moment was vacant by the death of the previous holder.

"But companion as well," he said, laughingly. "I am not going to have you buried alive at Occleve Chase when I want your society in London, nor vice versa, so you had better find a subordinate."

Smerdon took the post, and no one could say with any truth that his friendship for Lord Penlyn stood in the way of his doing his duty to him as his secretary.

He made himself thoroughly master of everything concerning his friend's property—of his tenants and his servants; he knew to a head the cattle belonging to him, and what timber might be marketed annually, and regulated not only his country estate but also his town house.

And, that his friend should not lose the companionship which he evidently prized so dearly, he thought nothing of traveling half the night from Occleve Chase to London and of appearing fresh and bright at the breakfast table.

For, so deeply had Penlyn's goodness to him in all things sunk into his heart, that he never thought he had done enough to show his gratitude.

They had been busy this morning—the morning after Lady Chesterton's ball—in going over their accounts, and in making arrangements for their visit, in the forthcoming Ascot week, to Sir Paul's villa, near the Royal course.

Then, while they had paused for a few moments to indulge in a cigarette, the conversation had again turned upon that discovery at Le Vocq.

"I tell you what I do mean to do," Penlyn said; "I mean to go and see Bell. Although he could have known nothing of what was going on thirty years ago, he may have heard his father say something on the subject. They have been our solicitors for years."

Mr. Bell listened to his client's story, smiling faintly once or twice, at what seemed to his worldly mind, too much remorse for his father's sin on the part of Lord Penlyn, then he said:

"I never knew your father, but I should think the whole affair a simple one, and an ordinary version of the old story."

"What old story?"

"The story of a person of position—forgive me, Lord Penlyn, we are men of the world" (he said "we," though he considered his client as the very reverse of "a man of the world"), "and can speak plainly; the story of a person of position growing tired of a responsibility, and then—dropping her."

"To starve with her—with his offspring!"

"I should not imagine it!" Mr. Bell said with airy cynicism. "I never saw the late Lord Penlyn, and scarcely ever heard my father mention him. If you like I will have all the papers relative to him gone through; but it is thirty years ago! If the lady is alive she would surely have turned up by now. And I may say the same of the son."

"He may not even know the claim he has."

"Claim! my lord, what claim? He has no claim on you."

"Has he not? Has he not the claim of brotherhood, the claim that my father deserted his mother? I tell you, Mr. Bell, that if I could find that man I would make his the greatest restitution in my power."

The lawyer looked upon Lord Penlyn, when he heard these words, as a Quixotic young idiot, but of course he did not say so.

But he did promise to go through all the papers in his possession relating to the late lord, and to see about this particular case.

Two nights afterwards Penlyn received a letter from him, saying that there was not the slightest trace in any of the Occleve papers in his possession of the persons about whom they had spoken.

"And," he concluded, "I should advise your lordship to banish the whole affair forever from your mind. It is now too late for you to obtain any information about it."

(To be continued.)

PIGS HER PETS.

The Strange Fad of a Wealthy Society Woman in Baltimore.

Two pigs are the pets of a wealthy society woman in Baltimore and she is so fond of them that when she has not company they dine from silver troughs on her own table. When they were very small—tiny little piggie-wiggies, as the fair owner says in speaking of them—they had whisky given to them to retard their growth. They drank their whisky at an age when ordinary pigs are getting their first taste of skimmed milk, and the desired effect was procured. Their mistress engaged a maid especially to care for them and the maid brushes and washes and powders them until they are as sweet and dainty as it is possible for pigs to be.

Each of the troughs on the table bears the name of the pig that eats from it and the pigs have had high chairs of oak, upholstered with leather, made for their accommodation. The pigs have been in the habit of eating the daintiest of food and they are helped to it by their maid. When they want more of a certain dish they express their desire by a short grunt.

They never squeal. When their education was first undertaken they did squeal and it was not pleasant to hear. Every time one of the pigs squealed it was punished by being taken from the table. Most pigs squeal at night when they huddle together and try to get the softest place in the sty, but these pigs never were in a sty. They don't sleep together. They have separate beds and these are of polished brass, and the mattresses are of curled white hair. Every night the sleepy little pigs are tucked into their soft white beds and the maid covers them with the finest elder-down coverlets. The beds have lace curtains at their sides, tied with silk ribbons.

The maid sleeps in the same room with the pigs, and if one is ill in the night she gets up and attends to it. If it is very ill she rouses her mistress, and the doctor is called in. Another duty of the maid is to take the pets out for an airing in their carriage. The pigs have pretty gold collars with their names on them and are very intelligent. They answer to their names and perform a few little tricks, such as jumping over their mistress' hands, standing on their hind feet, etc. They are both fond of music, and will run to the music-room every time they hear any. They seem to prefer plaintive, soft airs.

Dr. Nansen.

Dr. Fridtjof Nansen began making his experiments in the far north when he was about 21 years of age. Apart from his reputation as an intrepid explorer he is a recognized authority in many departments of zoology, and his published papers on various anatomical subjects are of considerable interest and importance. Mrs. Nansen, like most Norwegian women, whether they need it for a livelihood or not, works hard. She gives lessons in music and sings in public. Before their marriage Dr. Nansen and his fiancee agreed that their mode of life should not be changed—that he should not abandon his explorations and that she should continue her teaching.

What to Cultivate.

"If a girl is anxious to marry——" began the maid.

"Yes?" said the woman of the world, encouragingly.

"If she is anxious to marry and marry well, from the point of view of society, I suppose she should prepare herself as she would for a profession."

"Certainly."

"There are some things that she should cultivate assiduously, and others to which she need devote little attention."

"There are."

"Well, what would advise her to cultivate particularly?"

"A wealthy relative who is likely to die soon."—Chicago Evening Post.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

A DELUSION: NOT A DOCTRINE.

The chief difficulty in combatting the preposterous claims of the McKinleyites lies in the fact that their theories are not based on facts or logic, but are wholly a matter of faith. No amount of reasoning, no statement of facts, can do anything to convince men who worship the high tariff fetish that their idol is a humbug and a fraud.

The persistence of the delusion that men can tax themselves and everybody else rich, is due to the willingness of most people to accept as truth any plausible statement if it only coincides with their prejudices and short-sighted selfish inclinations. The basis for the revival of McKinleyism at this time is the undeniable fact that there are a great many poor people in this country. The high tariff apostles come to these poor men and tell them that if heavier taxes are put on foreign goods, American goods will be dearer and so everybody will be made rich. Without stopping to ask how giving more of the products of their labor in taxes, and paying higher prices for what they buy, will help those who are now poor, the discontented classes shout "Hurrah for McKinley! Down with cheap goods and up with tariff taxes! We want the man who promises us prosperity."

Charlatans and quacks have always existed and probably will always continue to find credulous dupes who swallow their fairy stories. But surely the history of popular crazes and of successful impostors has never shown greater gullibility on the part of the people than the present blind worship of McKinleyism.

Why Exports Declined.

The McKinley organs are trying to show that the Democrats are responsible for the decline in the export of farm products during the past few years, and are telling the farmers that a policy which enables foreign nations to trade more freely with this country has made them buy less of our agricultural staples than if we discouraged foreign commerce by prohibitive tariff laws.

The real reason for the falling off in our shipments of farm products was the enactment of the McKinley bill. That declaration of hostility against goods made in other countries forced foreign nations to look for other markets for the manufactures they had been sending to the United States. Part of these markets they found in South America. In order to sell to the people of that country it was necessary to take something in exchange. That something has been chiefly meats and wheat, of which great quantities are now annually shipped to Europe, displacing the same products formerly exported from this country. European imports of meats and grain from Russia, India, Australia and Canada have also been increased during the same period.

This opening of new sources of supply for food-stuffs has been gradual, but none the less steady, since McKinleyism shut our doors in the face of the people of Europe and said that we did not want to buy from them. Of course it was only natural that they should retort by refusing to buy from us, and by developing trade with other countries. If the American farmers think that putting higher taxes on goods made by foreigners will encourage the latter to buy more of our surplus farm products, they are very much mistaken.

The Meaning of McKinleyism.

Vague promises that if the Ohio Major is elected President the country will in some mysterious way become more prosperous, should not blind the American people to the real nature of McKinleyism. Four years ago that word was understood to mean a policy of high taxation, dear goods, and restricted foreign trade. This was the form in which it was embodied in the McKinley tariff, and after a full and fair discussion for over two years the people rejected the policy and ordered the tariff repealed.

Nothing has happened since 1892 to change in the slightest degree the essential nature of McKinleyism. It is now, as then, a demand for special tariff privileges for the benefit of a few trusts and manufacturing monopolists. It is a scheme by which seventy million American consumers are to be taxed on the goods they buy, in order that a small number of millionaires may make greater fortunes. It means class legislation in the interests of men who furnish money to buy votes and corrupt the sources of popular government. It is a bold assertion of the right of some men to get rich at the expense of the masses who produce all wealth.

The popular verdict in 1892 was that McKinleyism was a fraud and robbery. Theft is always theft, no matter what it may be called. Four years ago the American people voted against stealing under the form of law. Is there any reason why the same people should now vote in favor of high tariff robbery, merely because the McKinleyites are this year calling their leader "prosperity's advance agent?"

The Tariff Can Wait.

Just before he sailed for Europe on Saturday Mr. Andrew Carnegie told a representative of the Iron Age that all other issues must be subordinated to that of honest money; that nothing can be settled till this shall have been settled, and that no general prosperity will be possible without it. Of the tariff he said:

"I agree with George B. Roberts, President of the Pennsylvania Railroad, who is a typical man of affairs of this country, and, indeed, of the world, since he is at the head of the largest organization and gives employment to more labor than any other man. I agree with him when he says that the tariff can wait."

President Roberts and Andrew Carnegie are not politicians; neither are they doctrinaires. They are intelligent, broad-minded men of affairs who have no interest apart from the general welfare. When such men speak it is to the interest of the country to stop and listen; and it is especially the business of the political gatherings which take charge of the country's welfare to give heed to their disinterested words of counsel and admonition.—Philadelphia Record.

A Protectionist Movement.

The movement of shipbuilders to get "discriminating duties" placed on imports that come to us in foreign ships is entitled to no popular support. There is already in their interest a prohibition of foreign ships engaging in our coastwise commerce. There is also a prohibition of Americans owning foreign-built ships. Now they want the consumer to pay extra duties if he cannot get an American ship to bring his goods over at a reasonable rate. It is a shameless proposal. It would probably lead to retaliation, and thus defeat the purpose of the greedy protectionist. It takes cargoes both ways to make shipping pay. If we allow no foreign ship to bring goods into our ports, the foreigner will not allow our shipowners to carry goods into his ports. The net result would be a hobbling of commerce and an artificial enhancement of prices. The consumer is "gouged" enough already. Let us have no more artificial restrictions on commerce to his hurt.

How to Hit Trusts.

Trusts rob the people through high prices. Protection shuts out the competition of foreign goods and enables the trusts to charge more than a fair price for their products. If the American farmers and workers are tired of being robbed by monopolies they should vote for lower tariff taxes on all articles controlled by trusts. If they want to strengthen the power of the combines and monopolies they should vote for McKinleyism and high protection. This is a country in which the majority rules. If the people prefer high taxes and high prices they can have them. They will have no reason to grumble if they elect McKinley and find that they have a President who is willing to aid the trusts by giving them more protection.

Everything on Tariff.

The Republican nominee for the Presidency will stand for nothing on the financial question and for everything in sight on the tariff question. The people have twice expressed their opinion of McKinleyism, and we cannot see what object they would have in reviving the odious thing, coupled with a financial straddle—Memphis Commercial-Appeal.

SHE WAS EXPANSIVE.

Seats Were Too Crowded When She Was Fully Rigged Out.

He looked troubled as he pushed two matinee tickets through the box office window and asked:

"Can you give me two more seats next to those?"

The ticket seller hastily looked through a bundle of tickets that he took from one of the little pigeon-holes in front of him and shook his head.

"I can give you two seats just in front of them," he said.

"Won't do," replied the man in front of the window. "Can you take these back and give me four in the row just ahead?"

"No; there are only two left there," answered the ticket seller.

"I don't see how I am going to arrange it," said the man who wanted the tickets, thoughtfully. "I must have three seats together."

"Three!" exclaimed the ticket seller. "I thought you wanted four together?"

"I do," returned the other, "but that isn't absolutely necessary. If I can get three together I can sit somewhere else myself."

"I should think it would be pleasanter to divide the party evenly," suggested the man in the box office.

"It would," admitted the man outside of it, "but it can't be done. You evidently don't understand the case. You see, I bought these tickets with the intention of taking a young lady to the matinee, and it never occurred to me that I would need more than two seats."

"Overlooked the chaperon, I suppose?"

"Chaperon nothing! When I pay for a chaperon there'll be skating in August. I overlooked the fashions—that's what I overlooked. I saw her last night in the gown she expects to wear, and now I am trying to buy a seat for each of the sleeves. That's why I must have at least three seats in a row. If you can give them to me, trot them out; if you can't, say so, and I'll send word to her that I am sick and give my tickets to someone else."—Philadelphia Times.

Advice for Consumptives.

"I have watched it carefully," observed a popular physician, "and I think I am safe in saying that very few persons get much, or, indeed, any benefit, especially those who are suffering from lung troubles, by visiting California, Florida, or elsewhere, unless they rough it. The hotels there are like they are everywhere—good and bad—the good ones being in the majority. The food is about the same as that furnished by hotels in the East, is cooked and served in about the same way. What one needs is a total change, and the only way they can get it is by roughing it. Instead of going to elegant hotels, they should live in the open air as much as they can, and, if possible, sleep in tents. Everything should be done exactly opposite to the way they do things at home."

Drying Fruit by Electricity.

It is suggested that the drying of fruit, which requires great care and a certain regulation of the temperature, offers a promising field for electric heating. Fuel for heating by steam is often expensive, but fruit districts usually have abundant water power that could be used for driving dynamos. The electric current would prove serviceable in a variety of ways in addition to heating.

There can be no joy to-day while we are worrying about to-morrow.

WHAT WOMEN WEAR.

STYLES FOR THOSE WHO WANT TO LOOK PRETTY.

Changes in Shirt Waist Styles Said to Be Freakish—Jacket of the Novel Zouave Pattern—This Season's Ideas in Graduating Gowns.

Fashion's Late Fancies.

New York correspondence:

IN shirt waists the changes from last year's styles are freakish to a considerable degree, but though there may seem to be but little sense in the changes, they must be followed carefully or garments that are plainly unfashionable will result. In one respect—the sleeves—the change is a decided improvement, for nothing could be cooler or more comfortable than the full, loose bishop sleeve. In considering its generous dimensions, it is hard to believe those dressmakers who are prophesying tight dress sleeves by autumn. Still that may come; women must expect that small sleeves will return as soon as all the changes have been rung on full ones, and it does seem as if that had already been accomplished. One other particular that effects improvement is the nature of the materials that are favored for shirt-waists. These are lighter than have been employed heretofore, lawns, dimities, organdies, linons and batistes being leaders in the list, and their use adds appreciably to the wearer's comfort without detracting in the slightest from the garment's beauty. They also lead up to some of the freakish rules pertaining to shirt waists. As all the goods named are too light to be suitable for collars and cuffs, the latter are made detachable, which is by many considered a convenience. Collars and cuffs need not match the shirt, in many cases they do not even harmonize, but collars and cuffs must match each other.

To look at a dozen women in fashionable shirt waists, the unthinking observer might decide that the rules for waist's accessories are of the free and easy sort, but such is not the case. Though some of the rules are whimsical, others are not, and the woman that does not follow the code will suffer quite as much in loss of stylishness as will another that breaks fashion regulations of longer standing. Even if you are fond of doing just as you like, don't wear a linen collar with a silk waist. Don't wear a cloth, satin or silk stock with a wash material waist. Don't wear a ribbon stock and bow with a man-finish-shirt waist or bodice, nor a tailor-collar and man-tie with a fancy and feminine elaborated bodice. It hardly seems as if any sensible woman need be told that the neckgear of the tailor rig pictured with the initial is the correct thing, yet women are seen who, having acquired a handsome and stylish tailor dress, will just ruin its appearance by adding to it neck fixings that are all frills and airy bows. This gown's finish is severity itself, its material being blue mohair, and beneath the jacket there is a manly double-breasted vest of blue pique dotted with white. This is topped by a stiffly starched chemisette standing linen collar and black stock. One caution should be pointed here. If you don't risk a made tie if you have to depend on a metal hook and an adjustment of it over the collar button to hold the tie in place. That hook may not show to yourself, but he is taller than you are and as he looks down at you that fatal metallic gleam catches his eye at the upper edge of the little bow. Then all pretensions to tailor-made correctness are declared to be fakes.

A NOVEL ZOUAVE JACKET.

Bodices that are quite elaborate are frequently worn this summer with shirt waists, but in such cases the waist is no less dainty than as if it were to be worn outside. Then again the outer garment may not be highly wrought, and yet may be of novel design, as is the one shown in to-day's second illustration. Here is a zouave jacket of blue† cheviot, which is also the shirt material, that is slashed on either side so that the shirt waist shows through. Crossing the slashes are silk cords held by cloth-covered buttons, and confining both waist and jacket is a belt of white leather that ends in a fanciful silver buckle. The waist is pink dotted swiss, its turned-down collar almost hidden by the jacket's plain high collar.

ANOTHER NEW CUT OF JACKET.

The turn-over collar is the usual one, but the stand-up collar offers a guarantee of a hand-tied tie, since the tie shows all the way around. Don't wear those ties that are mounted on a stiff piece like a section of stock, which slips under the points of the collar and attaches at the bow with an elastic and loop to the collar button. They look very faky when on, and you are sure to mess the collar getting them in place. Very stunning satin stocks are shown about which pass satin ends that tie loosely in front. Beware of the machine-stitch-hem, though; it may look all right a little way off, but it is not good form. Neither should you take a half yard of ribbon and tie it by slipping it between your neck and the back of the collar button in front, bringing one end above the collar just under your chin and slipping the other out below the collar button and between it and the first stud. If you are not rigged for absolute correctness such a tie may do, its excuse coming in the fact that it is so easy to adjust and that it keeps the collar button from digging into the flesh.

OF THE GRADUATING CLASS.

Another jaunty jacket of the sort that is frequently worn over shirt waists is presented in the next sketch, its costume including a sleeveless blouse of faintly flowered white dimity. A belt of white leather shows in front, and the jacket's wide revers are held down by cloth straps and buttons. Topping all is a wired plain collar. The goods is nickel gray mohair, and the ripple basque may be lined with white silk as desired. Whatever is worn beneath such a jacket, let its nature be readily determined; that is, don't wear a transparent lawn shirt made to take tailor-finish collar and cuffs. Let a shirt waist be a shirt waist, or else have it a fancy waist, and be done with it. In purchasing shirt waists the woman with a narrow back may find difficulty in getting fitted. Her best way is to look for a size that is very narrow across the front. All shirts are made with such full fronts that they will fit, though not perhaps with as much fullness as was intended. The back will be proportionately narrow. The neck may be a little snug, but you can put a little slit in at the back and it will not show when the collar is adjusted.

Simplicity rules in graduation effects, but any amount of expense is gone to in many cases to secure exquisite needlework, hand run tucking and insertion, and thread lace can be added till the expense will suit the fondest mamma, yet her proud daughter will hardly look the sweeter for the money hidden away in the details of her gown, and the dotted muslin miss next to her will not suffer a bit in contrast. Still there was never yet a class of considerable size graduated that some of its members didn't pass beyond the mark of good taste in striving to outdo the others. One method of trying to escape the rut of conventionality is to dress in the quaintly demure manner of grandmother's day. This is not infrequently resorted to, but seldom with better results than are shown by the last picture. This dress is of white China silk, plain for the skirt, and in the bodice gathered in to a white satin belt. The bodice is fitted at bust and shoulders, and has a collar of the same satin that is used for the belt. The sleeves here are elbow puffs that are worn by long gloves, but ordinarily long sleeves are worn. The only bit of garniture dominates the whole, being the Marie Antoinette fichu of white mousseline de soie. This is edged with an embroidered ruffle and is tied in a knot in front with ends hanging down on the skirt. Of the two graduation rigs shown, the first is the safer, just because it is on conventional lines. It is a temptation to essay something "different," but these attempts are seldom entirely successful and most of the dresses are wisely planned. Time was when a girl's graduation dress was as useless thereafter as her wedding gown, but it is not so now, the dainty, girlish gowns being made are eminently suited for incorporation in the wardrobe of the summer to follow.

JOINT SENATOR.

Dr. Nusbaum is Nominated after a Short and Spirited Contest.

The first local campaign for a nomination is over. The contest for the joint senatorial nomination came off at Garrett yesterday afternoon. The meeting was called to meet in the Wagner opera house at 2 p. m. and was called to order by W. J. Frederick, chairman of DeKalb county. Mr. Wm. N. Showalter, chairman of Noble county joined him on the rostrum and soon after, on motion of John Picker, A. J. Baxter was made chairman. Mr. Sharpless, of Noble, was made secretary. Notion by Dr. Teal, seconded by C. Curie, that we have a committee on resolutions. Dr. Teal and John Moorehouse, of Noble, and C. Curie and W. L. Blair, of DeKalb, were named as members of the committee, the fifth man, John Harris, of DeKalb, being named by the chairman. While the committee were absent, nominating speeches were made. D. D. Moody poke for Dr. W. H. Nusbaum and W. J. Frederick for James Kelham. Both speeches were good and elicited rounds of applause from the friends of the two candidates. When the committee on resolutions reported, it was a strong indorsement of free silver at 16 to 1, without international agreement. It also indorsed the tariff plank in the democratic national platform of 1892, and in a third resolution indorsed Gov. Mathews for the presidency. The resolutions as read, were unanimously adopted.

The convention then proceeded to nominate the two candidates. DeKalb was first alphabetically, and Noble conceded her right to vote first anyhow and decide the candidate. Finally, it was decided to give the votes of both counties to the secretary and have them opened by him and read, and then both to be announced. This was done and the vote showed that DeKalb gave Nusbaum 16½ votes and Kelham, 9; 1 vote from Franklin and ½ from Troy being absent. Noble gave Nusbaum 22 votes and Kelham 7, the total being Nusbaum 38½ and Kelham 16.

Dr. Nusbaum was then called to the platform and made a brief speech, thanking the delegates for the honor, pledging himself to work for the election. He also paid a high compliment to his competitor. The meeting having concluded its business, was adjourned.

Commissioner.

This is the most important office we have, but up to this date, Tuesday, we have no settled candidate for the southwest district. Frank Teeters, Fred Shultheiss and F. D. Smith have been talked of, but we are told, refused to run. Now comes the report that Cal Grube will be a candidate if the people want him, but will not ask it of his own accord. He would be a good man. He was twice a candidate on the populist ticket for other offices, but we believe has concluded that democracy is the part, after all. The populists have had a chance to learn by the vote of two years ago that the republicans who were supposed to be with them; deserted them on election day, and voted the republican ticket.

Since writing the above we have learned that. R. S. S. Reed will be a candidate, and possibly James Kelham, of Keyser. The COURIER would be satisfied with any of the gentlemen named in the two districts.

A WORD TO TAXPAYERS.

The following statement is due to the voters of the county and is of especial value just now.

Amounts of expenditure connected with the office of surveyor of DeKalb county, as shown by the Auditor's reports for the years ending:

May 31, 1893, year preceding VanAuken's election		$13,910.63
May 31, 1894,	his 1st year,	8,667.75
" 31, 1895,	" 2d "	6,297.81
" 31, 1896,	" 3d "	4,392.23

Can the taxpayers afford to increase the expense of this office by putting into it inexperienced men, as has been shown by numerous recent trials.

Abe Johnson Sure!

The Cashier of the Pawnee City, Neb. Bank Sends a History of His Career.

PAWNEE CITY, NEB., June 13, '96.
ALBERT ROBBINS, Auburn, Ind.

DEAR SIR:—Thinking perhaps you might be interested in our man S. S. Shutt, or rather like to know something as to his career while here, I send you herewith a snap shot which I secured, and think perhaps you can tell by that who it is; if he is, as you say, an old offender. This man contracted for a farm here on last Friday week, and on the following Monday he started out early to stock up. Asked at each of the other banks if he could cash a check on us and was informed he could by being identified, he then had a merchant indorse a check on us with him for $100.00 and received the money at the Pawnee County Bank; was out looking at some cows when your message came which stopped him. He returned the money, seemed quite surprised, and furnished us the money to wire you, that we might get a description of Shutt. When your answer came he told us you had described his father who had been dead eight years (he had remarked previous to the time of your answer that his father was dead so he had to stick to it). Then he informed us that his father-in-law, who lived at Spencerville, had taken him to your bank and that he was not well acquainted with you, but that you had given him a certificate of deposit for his deposit of $4,100 and that the certificate was at home with his father-in-law so he he had a letter written and a special delivery stamp placed on the envelope for his C. D. Later that night he telegraphed to T. O. Mitchell, at Garrett to send him $100. Of course this did not come either, but we received a letter from the cashier there sending the telegram and telling us again he was a fraud.

He looked for his Cert. to get here Friday. On Thursday evening I asked him if he would not leave next day, but no he expected to take possession of the farm, however he did get away and I don't know how, for he was broke. He beat his landlord out of about three days board otherwise he gained nothing and as he acted off at times and informed us that he had been quite sick and was just recovering we did not try and hold him. If you know this picture will you please write us some day what you know about the fellow. Also show this letter to Mr. Chas. W. Camp if opportunity offers and return the picture to us.

Very truly,
H. C. VAN HORNE,
Assistant Cashier.

The Kodak picture as mentioned above is at the Farmers Bank. All who have seen it say it is Abe. The picture is not a very good one as it was a snap shot.

—Bayard Gray, son of the late Gov. Gray was here yesterday. He stopped off between trains long enough to have a short visit with the editor and get supper at the Swineford. He took the evening train to Montpelier, Ohio, where he has some business. He greatly resembles his father, much more so than his brother Pierre.

This is campaign year and everybody has a chance to smoke at some one else's expense. But a prominent Auburn man had a smoke the other day at his own expense. Hi Weaver was going out into the country the other day and on starting put his coat on the buggy seat so as to hang over the back in the usual way, and started off. When he was pretty well out in the country he met Emanuel Stafford and Robert Reed, and they had noticed him coming along, and saw smoke rising from close to him. They called his attention to it and asked if he had got a new kind of road engine. He stopped as they called his attention to it, and looking around found his coat was burning. The back was mostly burned away, as well as one sleeve. He supposes he must have put his pipe in the coat at starting and it probably had fire enough in it to catch, and had been burning more or less all the way

A Hugh Enterprise—A Really Big Double Circus.

The coming of the great John Robinson and Franklin Bros.' Enormous Combined Shows to Auburn, July 1, will be a treat to the citizens of this entire community like they never experienced before. The Robinson's Shows have delighted American amusement lovers for more than three generations, and the Franklin Bros. are the founders of the new school of American showmen. In combining and organizing their shows for the season of 1896 they have spared no money to secure the best for every department. A glance at the list of celebrities under their control will convince the most skeptical that they have been amply rewarded for their lavish outlay, for they are the best in the world in their various lines. The horses, many of them imported, are models of horseflesh, while their stud of trained horses do everything but talk. They will appear at every performance with their original trainer. The Duryea moto-cycle, the horseless carriage, is to be seen only with these great shows. A royal troupe of Japanese, imported expressly for this vast enterprise, and the only double troupe ever brought to this country, is another feature. They would be the whole show in the ordinary circus, but are only a single feature with the Robinson and Franklin shows. Acres of tents are required to accommodate this huge amusement, while one ticket admits to all the combined shows.

The cure of Rheumatism has often taxed medical skill, but it's prevention has been very easy by an occasional use of Simmons Liver Regulator. It keeps the liver well regulated, and the system free from poison. Therein is the secret of health. SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR is SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR—don't forget to take it. The Liver gets sluggish during the Winter, just like all nature, and the system becomes choked up by the accumulated waste, which brings on Malaria, Fever and Ague and Rheumatism. You want to wake up your Liver now, but be sure you take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR to do it. It also regulates the Liver—keeps it properly at work, when your system will be free from poison and the whole body invigorated.

THE BEST SPRING MEDICINE

You get THE BEST BLOOD when your system is in A1 condition, and that will only be when the Liver is kept active. Try a Liver Remedy once and note the difference. But take only SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR—it is SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR which makes the difference. Take it in powder or in liquid already prepared, or make a tea of the powder; but take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR. You'll find the RED Z on every package. Look for it.

AMERICAN ACTRESSES ON THE LONDON STAGE.

OF late years the American "star" has wisely left the London stage alone. The record of American actors in London is not altogether flattering to American judgment. Edwin Booth, above criticism on this side of the water, fell flat in London until "patronized" by Irving, while McCullough, sharply criticised by Americans, was splendidly received. Forrest succeeded, but Joseph Jefferson received only slight attention. Minnie Palmer and Patti Rosa were very popular and Lotta was a distinct failure. Some American actresses and actors have been given the stamp of London approval, but their failure or success in the United States in no wise affected British judgment. Mary Anderson took the metropolis by storm. Her Perdita was pronounced as an "unforgettable creation" and "made the season of 1887-8 memorable." Miss Anderson was the last of the great American "stars" to tempt the uncertainties of the British public. Mrs. Potter was an unfortunate failure. The American actors in London to-day, with the exception of Genevieve Ward, have not yet risen to a "star" position, and many of them are known better to Londoners than to Americans. One of these is Miss Eleanor Calhoun, who went to London on Booth's advice. She has appeared in many classic and new plays and has won a recognized place on the English stage. She is a beautiful Californian. Miss Elizabeth Robins and Miss Marion Lea made their first London appearance five years ago in Ibsen's plays, and have since won high places in the affections of the critics and the people. Miss Robins was formerly a member of the Boston Museum Company. Miss Keith Wakeman and Miss Nannie Craddock were introduced to London audiences by Mr. Willard, and they have both done well. Miss Wakeman made her debut with Palmer's company in New York, and so did Miss Craddock. These young women have assumed prominent parts in Mr. Willard's repertory. Other American actresses now in London are Nancy McIntosh, singer; Alice Atherton (Mrs. Willie Edouin), Miss Elliot Page, Miss Louise Beaudet, who has taken Marie Tempest's place in "An Artist's Model" with great success; Miss Maud Hoffman, whom Wilson Barrett took to London to play in "The Sign of the Cross," and Miss Fay Davis, a pupil of Prof. Hayes at Harvard, who has lately made a decided hit as Zoe Nuggeston in Carton's "The Squire of Dames."

BOLD CUBAN GENERAL

ANTONIO MACEO, WHO HEADS THE INSURGENTS.

A Commander Who Rides in Front of His Army—His Wonderful March of 800 Miles—A Daring and Dashing Career.

A Family of Patriots.

When the news of the present uprising in Cuba reached Antonio Maceo, in banishment in Costa Rica, he quickly gathered about him several veterans of the ten years' war, among whom was his brother Jose, and hurried to the relief of his native island, from which he had reluctantly taken leave seventeen years before. That was in March, 1895. In one short year he traversed the island from one end to the other, breaking down military trochas and defying the Spaniards in their very strongholds. These twelve months have shown him to be more than a guerilla chieftain, a great general—one of the greatest of modern times.

GENERAL ANTONIO MACEO.

Antonio Maceo is a mulatto. He was born at Santiago de Cuba, July 14, 1848. His father was Marcus Maceo and his mother's maiden name was Mariana Grajales. The elder Maceo owned a plantation at Barajagua and kept a pack of mules for hire. From this circumstance the statement has been made that Antonio Maceo was a driver of mules before the war. At the beginning of the ten years' war in 1868, the male portion of the Maceo family consisted of eleven sons, the youngest being Jose, fourteen years of age. The revolution had been in progress several months and the Maceo family had kept aloof from taking part in the uprising, until one day there appeared a band of Spanish guerillas, and the Maceo plantation was soon in ruins. The buildings were burned, the mules stolen and the female members of the family treated in an outrageous manner. The father called his eleven sons around him. All were now grown except Jose. Marcus Maceo exacted from each a promise that they would not lay down their arms until Cuba was free. The blood of the Maceo family now stains the island from one end to the other. The father fell at the battle of St. Augustin. Manuel, Fermin and Justice were killed in the east. Raphael, covered with wounds, left the island to die as an exile. Miguel was killed by a bayonet thrust at the capture of Une Vitas. Julio was shot dead in the engagement at Nee vo Mundos. Felipe and Homas are helpless cripples from their wounds, while Antonio, Jose and Marcus are still fighting.

The military career of Antonio Maceo is singularly brilliant. He was about twenty-one years of age, when he first enlisted. His dauntless bravery led him to take great risks and during the first twelve months of service he received sixteen of the twenty-one severe wounds that marked his body at the close of the ten years' war. Within the year he had been promoted to the position of major.

At the battle of Zarzal, where 2,500 Spaniards were routed with great loss of life, Maceo took a distinguished part. At this juncture in his military career Maceo was destined to meet his arch enemy, Weyler. Among the young brigadiers Weyler had been sent to the front and led a strong force against Maceo at the battle of Guaimaro. Weyler has cause to remember the prowess of the Cuban, for he was completely put to rout, leaving 500 dead on the field. Weyler fled among his scurrying troops and never stopped to look back until he was safely within the Spanish lines at Puerto Principe.

At the battle of Cayo Rey Maceo nearly lost his life. While endeavoring to engage the commander of the Spanish troops in a sword combat he received a bullet in the chest that passed through his body. He reeled in his saddle and was caught by Lieut. Col. Pacheco, who escaped under cover of the smoke, carrying Maceo to a place of safety. In the mountains, fifteen miles from the battlefield, Maceo lingered between life and death for several weeks, with but meager medical attendance. The wound has left him so that his voice has not one-half its original volume.

Into the saddle again, Maceo set out to burn the plantations and thus cripple the resources of Spain. He invaded the rich Guatanamo districts. With him was his brother, Jose, now grown to manhood. He left a blazing waste behind him as he marched to the west. Everywhere the Cuban leader spread desolation with fire and sword.

While preparing to invade Holguin, Maceo received news that came with crushing effect. The Cuban Congress had signed a treaty of peace with Spain. The leader, who had made such sacrifice, could not submit to anything but freedom from Cuba. Calling a council of war at Baragua, he issued the famous document known as the "Protesta de Baragua." He proposed to keep on fighting and repudiate the action of the Congress.

Unwilling to surrender, Maceo still made war on the Spanish for several months. Reduced to absolute want the great spirit of the soldier capitulated in a haughty letter to Martinez Campos, in which he agreed to lay down arms on the condition that a Spanish man-of-war be placed at his disposal to convey him and his officers from the island. Campos accepted the proposal and Maceo disbanded his soldiers under a big tree in the eastern part of Cuba. Maceo went to Jamaica and afterwards came to New York. Some planters in Costa Rica offered him a tract of land on which to colonize his brave followers in the war. He accepted and lived in peace. In 1889 he made a secret visit to Cuba with the intention of stirring up another revolution. The Spanish became aware of his mission and frustrated the plan. During the years of his banishment he studied continually, and has become a good scholar.

As soon as he heard of the present uprising in Cuba, which took place Feb. 24, 1895, he started back to the island, taking with him such veterans as his brother Jose, Crombet, Cebreco and sixteen others. He marched across Camaguez, broke into the trocha of Jucaro and entered Villas province. After defeating the Spaniards at Maltiempo, Coliseo, Paso Real and Calimete, he overran the Villas and Matanzas province, breaking anew the Spanish military lines and invading Havana. Reaching Pinar del Rio, in the extreme west, he had accomplished a march of 800 miles, a military feat that must forever place him among the most distinguished leaders of history.

Probably Eaten by Savages.

The news of a wholesale massacre of white traders and missionaries, among them an American, comes from the island of Manning straits and the Solomon Islands, situated east of the southeastern point of New Guinea. The inhabitants of these islands are mostly cannibals, and it can hardly be doubted that the unfortunate victims have been eaten by their slayers. The atrocities are in British territory except those that have occurred on Manning strait, which is in the German domain. Twelve years ago the Solomon Islands, except their outlines, were almost wholly unknown on account of the hostility of the natives. Since then, however, a number of explorers have explored parts of the islands; and since the group was appropriated by England and Germany, a number of missionary and trading stations have been established. The natives are very ferocious, treacherous and many of them are head hunters.

WOMEN AND HOME

RIVALRY IN CYCLING SUITS.

QUITE a trade is being built up by the fashionable tailors and habit-makers in the line of cycle costumes for ladies, and the trend of style is nearly altogether toward the skirt. Women themselves are giving the movement for the ultra-bloomer and the knickerbocker costumes the go-by, and any man who has persuaded his wife to ride the bicycle with the idea of educating her up to a simpler and less expensive, if less attractive, way of dressing is getting most wofully fooled. Society having taken up the sport, women who lead the cotillon in the winter have to make a decent appearance in the cycle paths of the town. That means rivalries as bad as those which spring up in the season of Easter hats. Whereby the man with the slim purse is made sad and the ladies' tailor waxes opulent.

The simple bloomer costume and the more pronounced knickerbocker rig have taken a sad drop. According to all the authorities no woman wishing to be in the cycling upper ten can afford to discard the short skirt. Knickerbockers of the same material are worn under the skirt, but bloomers are quite "outre." Women who like the diamond frames may appear to wear the skirt by adopting the latest thing in "divided garments," a skirt falling in kilted folds behind to conceal the bifurcation, but undivided in front. On foot the skirt seems to be of the regulation kind and on the diamond frame wheel only expert observers would know that the garment really is divided.

Cycling offers, or will offer, as much or more chance for the display of taste and differences in fashion, as far as dress is concerned, as horseback riding or any other sport or creation, and the tailors and costumers are not slow to take note of the fact.

World's Greatest Heiress

The Baroness Hirsch, who is nominally the legatee of the Hirsch millions, was instructed by her late husband to make this grandchild, Lucienne, her heiress. Lucienne is the daughter of the Baroness' only son. She is a handsome girl, in her teens. The future heiress is being educated in Belgium in royal state. She has her own chapel, a private chaplain and all the appurtenances of a princess, and a very rich princess at that. Lucienne will be the greatest heiress in the world when she is in possession of the late Baron Hirsch's millions.

HEIRESS OF THE HIRSCH MILLIONS.

Society Woman and Author.

Mrs. Van Rensselaer Cruger is the home name of the brilliant authoress, Julian Bordon, whose novels and essays created such a furor some four or five years ago. Mrs. Cruger is one of the leaders of New York society, but while discharging her social obligations punctiliously she has never forgotten that life is made for more serious things than routs, balls and other functions.

MRS. CRUGER.

Building for the New Woman.

The new woman in New York has secured a large lot on Broadway, New York, on which to erect an immense building. The lower stories will be used for business, while above it will be set apart for the accommodation of women, and include banquet hall, parlors, clubrooms, music-rooms, gymnasium, tennis court, bicycle stable, and studios. The women's clubs and societies of the city originated the enterprise and will carry it through.

Li Hung Chang's Wife.

Of the wife of Li Hung Chang, millionaire of millionaires, a writer says: "Marchioness Li is very beautiful, and compared with her fellow countrywomen, an exceedingly learned lady. Her age is more—possibly a great deal more—than 50, yet she looks 30, or even less. The wife of the richest man in the world, she spends royally, although not without keeping a detailed account of her expenditures. In her magnificent home on the banks of the Pei-Ho she lives in great splendor, surrounded by song birds, peacocks, aquaria, pottery, gems and botanical collections. One thousand attendants and servants answer her beck and call. In her wardrobe are guarded 2,000 coats, 1,200 pairs of "trouserettes," and 500 fur robes, made from the finest skins. Her feet have been compressed until they are quite inefficient for the original purpose, and the Marchioness is unable to walk more than a few yards at a time.

Four Varieties of Stitching.

Buttonholing, feather, satin, and cross stitches are called in requisition for this useful edging on white or colored flannel, linen or cambric, wrought with colored silks, shetland wool, or embroidery cotton, and suitable for underlinen, flannel petticoats, knickerbockers, children's pinafores and slips.

USEFUL VANDYKED EDGING.

Women Stick to the Cities.

Excess of females seems to go with demsity of population. Of twelve States which have an excess of females, eight are States that have the densest population. It is, in fact, found that the seven States having the greatest excess of females have also the largest proportionate city folk. The last census shows that seven-tenths of the 1,252 cities in the United States having over 2,500 inhabitants show an excess of females over males. In other words, native males are more numerous in the country than in the cities. The rural population embraces 20,708,894 males and 19,180,961 females, giving an excess of 1,527,963 males, while the cities, numbering 11,358,286 males and 11,373,439 females, show an excess of 14,453 females. The disproportion of women in the cities would be much greater but for the excess of male immigrants. In all the States save North Carolina the males are the more numerous in the rural districts, and in about half the States the city population is predominantly feminine.

Laughter Adds to Beauty.

Laughing is said to produce small wrinkles about the mouth, but no one need have any anxiety about wrinkles thus formed, for they are rather pleasing than not, and often add to the attractiveness of a face, for they show a light and merry heart. "With mirth and laughter let old wrinkles come," as Shakspeare says. Cheerfulness and bright, happy looks always add to beauty, so laughter should certainly be encouraged, even at the expense of a wrinkle or two. It is the lines that come from a peevish, discontented frame of mind that disfigure the face, and have to be fought against.

Hints of All Sorts.

A good remedy for damp walls is to make a strong solution of alum and wash the walls down with it.

Do not soak fresh fish in water before cooking, as this treatment only ruins the flavor and makes it soft.

To clean oilcloths wash always with warm milk. Once in six months scrub with hot soapsuds, dry thoroughly and apply a coat of varnish. They will last as long again.

Oranges should be eaten freely as long as they are in season, for, besides being a delicious fruit, they contain a large quantity of citric acid, so valuable for its medicinal qualities.

For stopping leaks in a cask beat up some whiting with common yellow soap. If this mixture is well rubbed into a leak it will be found to stop it, after everything else has failed.

Rice flour paste makes a delicate cement, suitable for use on satin, silk or thin paper. To make it stir rice flour into a smooth paste with cold water and then gently boil over the fire, stirring all the while.

To shrink woolen goods, such as jerseys, is not difficult. The knotty point generally is how to prevent flannels shrinking. If you wash the jersey in a hot lather you will find it shrinks to any extent, according to the heat of the water.

Rain water is by far the best for washing the face in, as it has a softening effect. If possible never use hard water, but when you are obliged to do so throw a handful of oatmeal into it, or a little pure borax. If your face is inclined to be hard and dry, wash it in hot water before going to bed and then rub in some emollient cream, or glycerin and rosewater.

Penetration of Projectiles.

An ingenious method of testing the penetrative power of small projectiles has been tried in Germany by Herr Muller. A large water trough is divided on the bottom by transverse ribs, and closed at one end by thick gelatine plates. The shot is fired into the end of the trough, when the hole in the gelatine instantly closes up, preventing the escape of the water. Each shot is retained by ribs where it falls, and its position is noted when the water is drawn off after the firing.

THE FINANCIAL LEGISLATION OF CONGRESS REVIEWED.

Mr. Cannon Says the Appropriations Were Small and Economical, While Mr. Sayres Says They Were Enormous and Profligate.

As Viewed by Both Sides.

Chairman Cannon, of the House Appropriations Committee, and ex-Chairman Sayres Thursday made public a joint statement concerning the expenditures authorized by this Congress, discussing them from the Republican and Democratic standpoints respectively

The total appropriations for the session, including permanent annual appropriations, is $515,759,820.49.

Mr. Cannon's statement begins:

"The appropriations charged to this session include $119,054,160 under the permanent laws, of which amount $50,000,000 is for sinking fund and $30,500,000 for interest on public debts, or $3,355,614.40 more than was included at the last session of Congress in the statements of appropriations, and is on account of the increase of $162,315,400 in the bonded indebtedness of the country by the present administration up to February, 1895, the interest and sinking fund charge on account of the later bond issue of $100,000,000 in February, 1896, amounting to $4,400,000, not being included in the estimates of permanent appropriations.

Increase in Public Debt.

"The increase in the principal and interest bearing debt of the country under the present administration amounts to $262,315,400, which entails annual interest charge of $11,492,616, and to meet the sinking fund obligations the further sum of $2,623,154.

"During the administration of Mr. Harrison the principal of the interest bearing debt was reduced $258,192,900 and the annual interest charges $10,327,716.

"The regular annual bills, including deficiencies, as passed by the House made a reduction in the total estimates submitted by the executive of $26,083,191.67; they were increased by the Senate $22,920,442.30, and as they became laws they appropriate $10,636,624.06 less than as passed by the Senate, $12,283,818.24 more than as they passed the House, and $13,374,373.43 less than the estimated requirements of the administration.

Excluding Rivers and Harbors.

"The regular annual appropriations, including deficiencies, made at the last session of Congress amounted to $383,686,896.97, and included no river and harbor bill. Excluding the river and harbor act passed at this session, the regular annual bills as passed by the House appropriated only $373,505,082.25, or more than $10,000,000 less than was appropriated by the last Democratic Congress."

Mr. Cannon criticises the Treasury Department because it has expended $7,377,440 for the present year in collecting the revenue from customs estimated at $165,000,000; whereas for the last fiscal year, 1892, under President Harrison's administration there was collected under the McKinley tariff act $177,452,000 of customs revenue at a total cost of only $6,607,517.

The bills establishing salaries, instead of the fee system, for officers of the United States courts, he says, will save $1,000,000 annually and minimize frivolous and malicious prosecution, and special attention is called to the fact that Congress made no increases of salaries or employes in the Government department.

Table of Appropriations.

The following table of appropriations is given:

Fifty-first Congress ...	$988,417,183 34
Fifty-second Congress.	1,027,104,547 92
Fifty-third Congress...	989,239,205 69
Fifty-fourth Congress—first session	515,759,820 49

The revenues for three fiscal years of the Harrison administration ending June 30, 1892, are given as $1,150,631,214; expenditures, $998,132,501; for the two complete fiscal years of Cleveland's administration, revenues, $611,112,094; expenditures, $723,720,578.

Mr. Sayres, in his statement, says of the total appropriations for the session:

"This sum exceeds the appropriations made during the last session of the Fifty-third Congress by $18,751,299.83, and those of the first regular session of that Congress by $23,529,135.46. It is less than the appropriations by the second session of the Fifty-second Congress by only $3,744,538.72, although at the latter session $39,352,494.85 more was appropriated for pensions than at this session. It is more than those by the first session of the Fifty-first Congress by $21,303,571.84, and $25,464,040.80 less than the appropriations at the second session of the Fifty-first.

"The Senate, organized this session by a combination of Republican and Populist votes, placing the control of committees in the hands of Republicans, by its amendments to appropriation bills as they passed the House, proposed to increase the total $22,920,442.30. By conferences between the two Houses this aggregate increase was reduced to $12,283,818.24.

"The appropriations made at the second session of the Fifty-first Congress exceeded those made at the first session of the same Congress by $46,767,612.64, or nearly 10 per cent. If the same proportionate increase should be made at the next session, then the appropriations will not be less than $565,000,000."

Contracts authorized by this session he estimates as follows:

Rivers and harbors, $59,616,404; public buildings, lighthouses and revenue cutters, $1,406,000; defenses and armament, $4,195,076; new warships, $12,900,000; District of Columbia, $125,000. Total, $78,241,489.

In conclusion Mr. Sayres says:

"If the present Congress had rigidly refused authority for additional contracts and had appropriated only to meet the immediate or fiscal year requirements under existing ones, the next Congress and administration would have been in a position to largely reduce appropriations and expenditures, and the administration of the government could easily have returned to an economical method of expenditure. This, however, has not been done, and the majority in Congress must be held responsible for this grave dereliction in public duty."

MARION BUTLER.

North Carolina's Populist Senator and Father of the Pond Bill.

Marion Butler, the Populist, who is father of the bond bill passed by the Senate, is in Congress by grace of the sovereign State of North Carolina. Senator Butler is Matt W. Ransom's successor. He was made Senator in 1895, and this was a climax of a career which began on a North Carolina farm. Mr. Butler was born in 1863. His mother prepared him for college. The University of North Carolina graduated him in 1885, and then he began to be a lawyer. He studied for a short time and then was called home. He was the first born, his father had died, and he must take care of the farm. He sowed and reaped and between times he looked after the education of his brothers and sisters. In addition, he taught at a neighboring academy for three years. Then he branched out. In 1888 he joined the Farmers' Alliance and bought a newspaper—the Clinton Caucasian. His ideas suited the alliance, even in that early day, and Butler was sent to the State Senate. Here he was leader of the rural forces and introduced all their reform measures. The alliance made him its State president in 1891 and 1892. He became the principal organizer of the People's party. His greatest success was his carrying out the campaign of 1894, at which his party was triumphant and for which his reward was the toga. Senator Butler is a trustee and member of the executive board of the University of North Carolina.

CONGRESS ADJOURNS—THERE IS JOY AT HOME AND ABROAD.

THE DEMOCRATIC NOMINATION.

Three Men Who Are Candidates for the Honor.

With the Republican nomination disposed of, the attention of the country will be directed toward Chicago, where the Democratic convention will meet July 7 to place in nomination candidates for President and Vice-President and adopt a platform. Who the nominees will be is a matter of conjecture, but, a press correspondent says, there is no longer any doubt that the platform will declare for the free coinage of silver. The silver element will control the gathering and will doubtless dictate the nomination. Whether they select an out-and-out silver man for President or take a milder one—solid silver with a gold lining—will depend upon circumstances that cannot be foreseen. The present probabilities favor Horace Boies, of Iowa, but there are other strong candidates, such as William R. Morrison of Illinois, Richard Park Bland of Missouri, James E. Campbell of Ohio, Claude Matthews of Indiana, and Benjamin R. Tillman of South Carolina. All of these are too well known to require even a brief biography. Mr. Campbell is the distinguished ex-Governor of Ohio, who defeated Foraker and was himself defeated by McKinley and Bushnell. He is about 50 years of age. Claude Matthews is the farmer-statesman who since 1892 has been Governor of Indiana and has distinguished himself as an able executive. Benjamin R. Tillman first came into national prominence when as Governor of South Carolina he introduced the dispensary laws which placed the liquor traffic under the control of the State. He has since gained notoriety by his erratic course in the United States Senate.

The Old Idea of Electricity.

When people speak to-day of the "electric fluid" and the "electric juice," they are only carrying out the idea, common a generation ago, that electricity was not only a fluid, but a liquid, which flowed from point to point as water flows. That, at any rate, was the theory held by one good old lady. This story is told by an operator who now "works" one of the press wires in New York:

I learned telegraphy, as I suppose most boys do, by setting up a "sounder" at home. I had it on a shelf by the kitchen window. The battery stood in a corner under a table. The wires from the battery to the sounder were full of kinks, as they always are, to take up the slack wire without cutting it.

One day the sounder would not work at all, and I got out of patience. Then my good old grandmother, who had been watching me, said:

"John Henry, you let me get at it a minute. I'll make it go, if there's any go to it."

She put on her big silver-bowed spectacles and looked it all over. Then she crawled under the table—forgetting all about her rheumatism—and carefully straightened out all the kinks and loops in the wires. Such a satisfied smile as she wore when she got up!

"There, John Henry," she said, "I don't believe but what it will work all right now. You try it and see. You hadn't ought to expect that electric fluid to run through anything so crooked as them wires was."

The funny part of the story is that "it did work all right." In straightening the wires the old lady had probably pulled one of them a little way through the zinc in the battery, and so had made the connection; but she insisted that all that was necessary was to get the kinks out of the wires.

One on Mahany the Celt.

The other day Congressman Stone, of Pennsylvania, who is one of the practical jokers of the House, approached Mr. Mahaney, of New York, who is an authority on Celtic orthography and orthoepy.

"Mahany," said Stone, "how do you pronounce this word," and he spelled it out very carefully—"M-a-c-H-i-n-e-r-y?"

"That's easy" said Mahany; "that's the name of an old Irish dock—MacHinnery, a little bit of Danish mixed with Milesian."

"You're mistaken," said Stone, "that's pure English—machinery."

Mahany collapsed. "Don't tell anybody," he implored. "If that got out among the Irish of my district it would ruin me."

Champion Among Women Explorers.

Mrs. Theodore Bent may be said to be the champion lady explorer of the world. Together with her husband she has taken part during the last ten years in eleven extremely rough expeditions. Their first journeys were to the less-known isles of Greece. But Mrs. Bent's most perilous journeys have been taken across Arabia and South Africa, where she and her husband traveled at one time through a pathless country till they reached their goal, the Sabi River. Mrs. Bent, who is a daughter of the late Mr. Hall-Dare, of Newtownbarry, County Wexford, is full of Irish pluck and good humor.—London Tid-Bits.

Nickel Plating.

The progress of electrical science is beautifully illustrated in the various processes used in covering the coarser metals with a thin layer of those more precious. To see an article of copper, brass or other common metal laid in an electric bath and by and by come forth coated with gold or silver seems like enchantment, and a hundred years ago would have been regarded as sorcery. The process is too technical for explanation outside the pages of a scientific magazine, but the results are before the eyes of all, and, although familiarity with the operation has made most persons indifferent, it is, nevertheless, one of the marvels of even the nineteenth century.

A GLOOMY JOURNEY THAT LASTED TWO YEARS.

A Turn in the Lane at Last Brings Health and Gladness—An Interesting Narrative with a Happy Ending.

From the Gazette, Baldwinsville, N. Y.

The Gazette recently called attention in these columns to the case of Herbert Spencer, in this village, and his release from suffering after long bondage. Interested in all things pertaining to the betterment of the moral and physical welfare of our community, we had no sooner given to the readers of this paper one article for their perusal and thought when we sought information regarding more such. Our south side druggists, Gardner & Davis, reported that Mr. Frank Williams, of Warner, N. Y., a flourishing hamlet, four miles south of this village, had been greatly benefited by the use of that widely-known and highly regarded medicinal preparation known as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. To fully set forth the facts in this case at Warner, we drove to that village one pleasant July evening. Mr. Williams was not at his pleasant little home in the suburbs of the village on our arrival, but we found him just entering the store of George Burr, in the center of the town, near the N. Y. C. tracks. Mr. Williams is a tall, pleasant looking man, six feet and one-half inch in height, with a face which at once impresses you with a belief in his candor and honesty. In response to our inquiry as to whether he had ever used Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and his willingness to publish abroad his opinion of this medicine, Mr. Williams said:

"I am glad of the opportunity to let my friends and the public generally know of the results of my taking this widely advertised remedy. I want people to know there is an escape from the evils of some diseases, at least, and that there is reliability and virtue in one of the many advertised remedies now before the people."

We stepped over to a showcase near by where we could write with ease, and Mr. Williams continued:

"I have resided in Warner and vicinity for twenty-one years. Am forty-six years of age, and by occupation a carpenter and general utility man, finding employment nearly, if not quite all of the time. In January, 1891, I was attacked with a severe nervous trouble, which greatly weakened me and continued to grow gradually worse, with pains everywhere, sometimes in my fingers, again in my toes, but mostly in the heart region. For a year and a half I was unable to do a full day's work. For over three years I tried the skill of the physicians and grew worse under their care. Also tried some well-known proprietary medicines, and while, perhaps, relieved for a time, yet the nervous twitching continued, and for two years I felt that there was no help for me. One day I read in a newspaper a testimonial from a man whose case seemed to resemble mine, and he claimed to have been cured by a medicine advertised under the name of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. Before I forget it, I desire to say that there was no shaky trouble in my hands, only a quivering of the muscles, sometimes showing in my face. I resolved to try these pills and first purchased a box at the drug store of Gardner & Davis, in Baldwinsville. I felt so much better at once that I continued their use until I had taken eighteen boxes, when I felt entirely well again, and have never had a return of the disease, excepting after a period of severe, hard labor, when I feel a bit of the old nervous twitching, but no pain, and when these come on, which is very seldom, I take a few pills and I am all right again. I might also add that my daughter was troubled with palpitation of the heart, and used two boxes, which gave her instant relief. Regarding my present condition I am able to work every day, and my neighbors attribute my cure to something akin to the miraculous."

Mr. Williams was more than willing to make affidavit of the truth of his statements, and we drove to the residence of Justice of the Peace Charles T. Fowler, where the following acknowledgment was recorded:

FRANK S. WILLIAMS.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 26th day of July, 1895.

CHARLES T. FOWLER,
Justice of the Peace.

Pauper Children of London.

It is charged by responsible people that the buildings in which the 18,000 pauper children of London are taught are hotbeds of disease and forcing-houses of vice and continued pauperism. It is also said that the same thing is true of the 242,000 pauper children of England and Wales. Moreover, the technical instruction given to the boys in these schools is very poor. As for the girls, they generally leave the school with a "dislike to work and a habit of destructiveness, not wilful destructiveness so much as careless and wasteful usage of everything."

SUFFERING IN SILENCE.

Women are the real heroes of the world. Thousands on thousands of them endure the dragging torture of the ills peculiar to womankind in the silence of home. They suffer on and on—weeks to months, years. The story of weakness and torture is written in the drawn features, in the sallow skin, in the listless eyes, in the lines of care and worry on the face.

Inborn modesty seals their lips. They prefer pain to humiliation. Custom has made them believe the only hope of relief lies in the exposure of examination and "local treatment."

Take ten cases of "female weakness" and in nine of them "local treatment" is unnecessary. There is no reason why modest, sensitive women should submit to it. McELREE'S WINE OF CARDUI is a vegetable wine. It exerts a wonderfully healing, strengthening and soothing influence over the organs of womankind. It invigorates and stimulates the whole system. It is almost infallible in curing the peculiar weaknesses, irregularities and painful derangements of woman. Year after year, in the privacy of home—away from the eyes of everybody—it effects cures.

WINE OF CARDUI is sold for $1.00 a bottle. Dealers in medicine sell it. Five bottles usually cure the worst cases.

darting, cutting pains are terrible. You are hardly sick enough to keep in bed, yet you are unable to go to work. It is severe suffering in every place and all the time. This is Neuralgia. It is chiefly caused by malnutrition, overwork and nervous exhaustion. Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil, with Hypophosphites, feeds the exhausted tissues and strengthens the nerves. Opium and similar drugs may quiet pain to-day, only to have it return again, for these drugs weaken. Scott's Emulsion permanently cures because it feeds and strengthens.

SCOTT'S EMULSION has been endorsed by the medical profession for twenty years. (Ask your doctor.) This is because it is always palatable—always uniform—always contains the purest Norwegian Cod-liver Oil and Hypophosphites.

Put up in 50 cent & $1.00 sizes. The small size may be enough to cure your cough or help your baby.

A Lesson From Nature.

I love in nature's haunts to rove,
And sit a learner at her feet;
Companionship with her I crave,
I greet her oft in some retreat.

Where willows wave when winds arise,
And chase each other o'er the lea;
Where waters glimmer as they glide,
Eager to reach the far-off sea.

Where posies peep, piqued with their pride,
At prettier posies peerless there;
The dewy tear-drops in their eyes
But make the fair ones seem more fair.

Where bright winged beetles buzz and brawl,
Contending for a trifle vain—
What matters it in years to come
That this one's loss was that one's gain.

Where vain leaves vaunt their velvet green,
And view themselves in limpid brook;
Where trees bend over quiet streams
To see how fair their lithe limbs look.

Where busy bees o'er blossoms bend,
And toil to fill a honey cell;
What carking cares their lives contain
The human toiler well can tell.

Where bright-plumed birds blend song with bloom,
While building nests where branches bend;
High hope elates their happy hearts—
Will hope in full fruition end?

The spider spreading silken nets
Awaits unwary wandering flies;
Deceit devise their doleful doom,
The honest heart hates his disguise.

The snake slides through the gleaming grass,
Or sleeps his sluggish life away;
On him bright beauty beams in vain,
His sense is dead to her mild sway.

He broods o'er nameless ills and wrongs,
And brews his venom black with hate,
And foul revenge fills his fell heart—
How sad his hapless victim's fate.

The fish are sporting in the stream,
Or sunning in the noonday ray;
They know not the world of light and song
That gleams and throbs where soft airs play.

A butterfly goes hovering by,
Then glows upon a clover bloom;
Fit symbol of the immortal soul,
The chrysalis was thy well sealed tomb.

And nature ever repeats the tale
That life is neither more nor less,
The universal soul lives on,
Revealed in higher forms and dress.

His life breaks forth in blossoms there
Which ope their glad eyes to the sun,
And here a human shape and soul,
Affinity proclaims them one.

Live on, O spirit, flux and change,
Are but the proof that life remains;
In each new form thy life assumes,
In that it higher life attains.

Came To Life

Walter Hartman had a quner experience while he and Howard McCord were hunting squirrels yesterday morning. He had put into the pockets of his hunting coat a number of the squirrels he had killed, when he noticed a commotion in that part of his coat. On looking into the matter he found that one of them had "come to ife," and was making a break for liberty. In spite of him it managed to get out of the pocket and into the folds of the coat, and finally jumped away. He and Mr. McCord chased it, and struck at it frantically, and finally as it reached a tree, got in a blow that brought it down. For there are other ways of killing a squirrel besides shooting it.

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

This Way In Chcago

The janitor of the Presbyterian church of Chicago, entertained his friends in the parlor of the church one evening recently. The old man was in the habit of taking his drinks and on this occasion he had laid in a large supply. The crowd kept coming and the flat in which the old gentleman and his wife resided, became too small to accommodate all so he invited them to the church parlor. The extra beer glasses were resting on the church organ in one corner and a man who was "tired" was resting his head on a pile of Gospel Hymns No. 2, and all way joy and peace. When all were seated around the tables the old man raised a glass of beer and blew off the froth onto the carpet. He then said to his wife "Lena, bring the beer here some." But too much beer induced them too sing too loud and one of the Deacons of the church dropped in. All the explanation the old man made was that he had not room for all his friends in his flat, and had therefore invited them into the church to have their little drunk.

How Ladies Mount.

Did you ever notice the difference in the way in which a lady and gentleman mount a wheel? The former stops, adjusts her skirts, puts one foot upon a pedal, gives a little spring and away she goes. The man grabs the handle bars, stretches himself out behind the machine, puts one foot on the step, hops along on one leg like a lame ostrich, gives a jump, lands "kerplunk" in the saddle, kicks about to find the pedals, and then goes along wobbling for a rod or so before he gets his center of gravity located. Women can do most everything better than man, says an exchange.

Do You Tavel?

If so, never start on a journey without a bottle of Foley's Colic and Diarrhœa Cure, a sure preventive of bowel complaints occasioned by change of water or climate. 25c Robbins & McCord. 26

Got the Rest.

This may not be a pleasant subject, but the DAILY COURIER tries to give all the leading events. And little Waldo Shaffer probably thinks this event a very important one. Yesterday we noted the removal from him of six feet of tape worm, by Dr. Baxter, and yesterday afternoon he got the rest of it, fifteen feet making twenty-feet in all. And this is no fish story. It is a cold fact.

A Living Picture.

Mr. G. A. Stillson, a merchant of Tampico, Ill., writes, August 10th, 1891: "Clinic Kidney Cure is meeting with wonderful success. It has cured some cases here that physicians pronounced incurable. I myself am able to testify to its merits. My face to-day is a living picture of health, and suffered twenty-seven years with the disease, and to-day I feel ten years younger than I did one year ago. I can obtain some wonderful certificates of its medical qualities." 26 Robbins & McCord.

JUSTLY THE FAVORITE.

"Mothers' Friend" Cures Rising Breast.

I have been a midwife for many years, and in each case where "MOTHERS' FRIEND" was used it accomplished wonders and shortened labor and lessened pain. It is the best remedy for RISING OF THE BREAST known, and worth the price for that alone.

THAT TIERD FEELING.

About which newspaper jokers write so much is with most of us, at times, an actual condition and not to be laughed at fact. It is the result of long neglect and misuse of the stomach and bowels. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin comes in and removes this feeling and life again seems worth living. Try a 10c bottle (10 doses 10c) of Davenport the Druggist. 26

Heart Disease Kills

Suddenly; but never without warning symptoms, such as Faint, Weak or Hungry Spells, Irregular or Intermittent Pulse, Fluttering or Palpitation of the Heart, Choking Sensations, Shortness of Breath, Swelling of Feet and Ankles, etc.

Dr. Miles' Heart Cure, Cures Heart Disease.

Mr. Geo. L. Smith, of the Geo. L. Smith Mantel Co., Louisville, Ky., writes Feb. 28, 1894: "For about a year I was a terrible sufferer from heart trouble, which got so bad I was obliged to sit up in bed to get my breath. I had to abandon business and could hardly crawl around. My friend, Mr. Julius C. Voght, one of our leading pharmacists, asked me to try Dr. Miles' Heart Cure. I had used little more than a bottle when the pain ceased and palpitations entirely disappeared. I have not had the slightest trouble since, and today I am attending to business as regularly as ever."

A Large Crowd

Witnessed The K. of P. Memorial Services Yesterday.

Monday's Daily.

The K. of P. Memorial services were largely attended here yesterday. The Lake Shore special from Butler arrived at about 12 o'clock and from that on the crowd kept enlarging. At two o'clock, after a few selections by the Military and Trumpet Note bands, the crowd assembled at Henry's Opera House, where they listened to an interesting program. Chancelor Commander Geo. L. Lanning presided and first announced an anthem by the Auburn Musical club. Mr. Lanning, then in a brief but appropriate speech welcomed the audience and visiting brothers and sisters to the service. Rev J. D. Brosy then offered prayer after which the Musical Club rendered another selection. Judge W. L. Penfield gave the principal address. It was one of his usual eloqent and scholarly talks and received hearty applause by the Sir Knights present. The military Band then played a piece and the large audience repaired to the park north of the court house. But before the exercises here they formed in columns of two and headed by the band, marched down Main street and back on Jackson and then formed a triangle. Here the decorative exercises were carried out which completed the work of the day.

The crowd was very large. People came in from the country besides the visiting members from neighboring lodges. The Butler uniform ranks presented a nice appearance. The exercises thoroughout were certainly a grand success.

Mrs Hare's Funeral.

Very few funerals have been sadder, or brought out more heartfelt grief, than that of Mrs. Hare yesterday afternoon. She was always an amiable and lovable person and had in so many ways endeared herself to people of all shades of opinion and all conditions. And next after the members of her immediate family, the members of her church, and especially the ladies of that church, felt her loss. And as she lay in the open coffin with lovely flowers banked and festooned all around, and above, as well as covering the rugs on the floor beneath. it was sad to see the friends taking the farewell look of one they had known so long and loved so well. The services by Mr. Colvin were impressive, though his own deep grief, at times rendered speech and thought difficult. A large number followed to her last resting place in Evergreen, where she reposes beside her husband.

Those who were in attendance at the funeral of Mrs. E. E. Hare from abroad were J. S. Hare, ex-treasurer, of Wyandott, Co. Ohio. Mrs. Hare's only sister, Mrs. S. S. Teeters, of Fort Wayne, Mr. and Mrs. Sylvester Towne, Fort Wayne, Mr. and Mrs. Lee Weaver, of Pleasant Lake Ind., Mrs. Abright, of Peru, George Yesbera and wife, of Montpelier, Ohio, Frank Yesbera, of Bryan Ohio, C. L. Arnold, of West Unity, Ohio. and Dr. Alford, of Peru, Ind.

Early Harvest.

The Laporte Argus says:

Wheat harvest began in earnest in various parts of the county last Monday, June 15. This is fully two weeks earlier than usual and we believe the earliest wheat was ever harvested in LaPorte county. It is seldom wheat is ready for the harvest in June, and cutting is usually done about the first week in July. Some fields on barren ground were cut last week. New wheat will be in this market before the first of July.

BUTLER.

Died, at the residence of her parents in Butler, Indiana, June 19, 1896, after a lingering for many months from that fell destroyer of early life in the twenty-third year of her age, Mary I. Jackson. Mary Isador, daughter of Mary and Christopher Keller, was born in Wilmington township August 7, 1874, where she lived a number of years, afterward removing with her parents to Concord township, where on the 4th of August, 1894, she was united in marriage to Mr. Jackson with whom she lived happily in the same township. She came home to her father's house only a couple of days before her death. Her funeral took place from the M. E. church in Butler, June 20, 1896, Rev. Lineberry of the M. P. church, of St. Joe, officiating. On June 5, 1890, she became a member of the M. P. church and remained a faithful member. She leaves her aged parents, three sisters and four brothers and her sorrowing husband to mourn her early and untimely death.

—A. B. Walsworth's horse broke loose and run away Saturday evening. People will certainly appreciate his efforts.

—Walters, one of the inmates of the County Home, died this morning. His disease was not well known, and Drs. Baxter, Hines, Swarts; Ford. and Sebring went out there this afternoon and held a post-mortem examinination.

—About forty good looking and jolly ladies stormed the COURIER castle Saturday evening and would have scared the guilty editor half to death had he not seen the fun lurking in their eyes. They were Rathbone Sisters, cousins and aunts, and all in the same time proceeded to explain that the lovely silk banner they had worked so hard to get, was not a $7 affair as shadowed forth in the DAILY, but a $75 dollar banner, of which they were very proud We explained to them that a five may have dropped out, and they went off in a laughing mood, at the terror they had come near carrying into this camp. The facts are, the price was given us in a stage whisper in the crowd at the opera house, and was misunderstood. The banner is a beauty and well worth the money paid for it.

Two Killed

An Excursion Train Breaks In Twain and Two Fort Wayne Men Were Killed.

Just after the DAILY had gone to press Saturday evening we learned of a terrible accident in which two men were killed almost instantly. Perhaps one of the largest and most jolly excursions ever out of Fort Wayne was run Saturday. It was the Pennsylvania railroad employes' annual excursion and left that place in three sections. The first train consisted of eighteen cars and when it had reached a point between Avilla and Kendallville, a drawbar between two cars broke. Samuel Henderson and Geo. Miller were standing on the platform at that time, the sudden jar threw them from the platform on the track. Miller was killed instantly, his body being cut in twain in three places. Henderson was not run over but was rolled over and over by the brake beams under the cars. He lived perhaps thirty minutes. Miller's family, a wife and two small children were on the train with him. Henderson leaves a wife who was sick and unable to accompany him on the excursion. The accident cast a gloom over the entire excursion party.

Senator Cleveland, of Nevada. Several of the delegates, however, did not go out with their leaders, but still say they do not intend to vote the ticket.

Special to the DAILY COURIER.

At the republican county convention held in Angola last Saturday, with the Hon. D. R. Best, chairman, the following ticket was nominated: Representative, M. B. Butler, of Salem; sheriff, Henry Harver, of Angola (renominated); Treasurer, Prof. A. W. Long, of Steuben; surveyor, Benj. Ellis, of Scott (renominated); coroner, Jacob Staley, of Angola; assessor, Louis Griffith, of Otsego; commissioners, Sylvester McNett, of Jamestown, and Albert Omstead, of Richland. The convention passed off very enthusiastically. Some hard fighting for honors ensued, yet none of the defeated candidates were sick enough to be put to bed. The ticket is a good one and will be elected unless McKinley is defeated.

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. Caillouette, Druggist. Beaver ville, Ill., says: "To Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with Lagrippe and tried all the physicians for miles about, but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again. It is worth its weight in gold. We won't keep store or house without it." Get a free trial bottle at Robbins & McCord's drug store. 2

Always Best.

An enthusiastic Hoosier says: "When you talk about there being a better state than Indiana, every potato winks it own eye, every cabbage shakes its head, every beet gets red in its face, every onion feels stronger, every oat field is shocked, the rye shakes its head, the corn pricks up its ears and every foot of ground kicks."

For 25 Cents.

If it required an annual outlay of $100.00 to insure a family against any serious consequences from an attack of bowel complaint during the year there are many who would feel it their duty that they could not afford to risk their lives, and those of their family for such an amount. Any one can get this insurance for 25 cents, that being the price of a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. In almost every neighborhood some one has died from an attack of bowel complaint before medicine could be procured or a physician summoned. BOND ISSUES ILLEGAL.

Indiana Cities Not Authorized to Build Court Houses.

Indianapolis special: During the attempt to remove the county seat of Clark County from Charlestown to Jeffersonville, the latter city took upon itself the charge of the purchase of grounds and the cost of erection of a new jail and courthouse, and issued bonds in three series for that purpose, the last series being for $87,000. Recently it was determined to refund these bonds at a lower rate of interest, and Newton H. Myers, a citizen, brought suit to enjoin the authorities, alleging that the issue was illegal.

In a decision by Judge Hackney, the Supreme Court sustains the view taken by Myers and declares that the issue of $87,000 in bonds is illegal and uncollectable. The Court holds that there is no authority given by statute to cities to build courthouses and jails, and that bonds issued for that purpose are clearly not authorized. The expense incident to such buildings is a county and not a city expense and the authorities of Jeffersonville were acting without authority of law when the bonds were issued.

PREACHES IN HIS SLEEP.

Peculiar Freak of an Amish Farmer Residing in Indiana.

Five miles east of Goshen, Ind., lives a farmer named Caufman, a member of the Amish denomination, who has become noted throughout this section as a "sleeping preacher." For some time he has delivered sermons regularly at his home on Wednesday and Sunday evenings while in a somnolent state. All efforts to awaken him while in this state have thus far proved unsuccessful, although he has been violently shaken, and at different times pierced with needles and pins. It is a queer phenomenon and the local physicians and scientists are puzzled by it.

The Spaniards Defeated.

Havana special: The event of the week has been the splendid victory of Gen Gomez, at Najasca, Pureto Principe. The details thus far are meager, the best report received here up to the present time being from the correspondent of La Discusion, which is regarded as the best informed independent paper in Havana. He says that Gen. Jiminez Castellanos left Puerto Principe on the 8th inst. with 2,114 men, 342 horses and five mounted pieces of artillery. On the 9th they encamped at a cattle ranch called Saratoga, where about 4 o'clock p. m. the attacked commenced by a charge of 1,000 rebel cavalrymen with machetes. From that moment until the morning of the 11th the insurgents continued harrassing the troops, killing and wounding many. Report has it that the total Spanish loss in killed, wounded and missing was over 1,000. The sanitary condition of the island is getting worse every day.

All Drowned.

The disappearance from their home in Louisville, Ky., of the three boys who, it was thought, ran away from home, was cleared up when a fisherman found their clothing on the dam on the falls. After six hours' work the bodies were recovered by a crew from the Life Saving Station. The victims were: George Gibbons, 10 years, 1417 Seventh street; Patrick Charles Dugan, 10 year, 1413 Seventh street; Willie O'Brien, 11 years, 1417 Seventh street. The boys ran away from home, and no trace of them could be found. Neither could swim. It is supposed they were wading and stepped over their depth from a ledge of rock.

She Was a Miser.

Paris special: The Baroness De Valley, who is 82 years old, was found strangled at her home. She had been gagged, and robbery is thought to be the motive of the crime. The Baroness De Valley was formerly a Madamoiselle De Monbel, whose father was First Secretary of an Embassy. She was a miser, money-lender and usurer.

A Hurricane in Oklahoma.

A hurricane at Guthrie, Okla., wrecked the Central High School building and State Capitol grounds, badly damaging the Episcopal Bishop's residence and many residences, besides doing many thousand dollars damage to other property. There were no fatalities.

The Law Is Legal.

The Supreme Court at Indianapolis has rendered a decision upholding the Nicholson liquor law, passed by the last Legislature. The law has caused a great deal of political bitterness, and its provisions are similar to those of the Raines law in New York.

Courthouse Burned.

The Court-house and all its contents burned to the ground at Leitchfield, Ky. Nothing saved.

Determined to Die.

A young lady named Stella Griffin of Pomeroy, Ohio, drank a large quantity of lye, and the doctors say she must die. The other day she jumped off a high bridge into a stream of water in an attempt to drown herself. Disappointment in a love affair is said to be the cause of her actions.

Cut-Throat Arrested.

James Sallee, who cut the throat of James Mitchell, a fellow-motorman at Lexington, Ky., was arrested by officers who found him hiding in the country.

Enjoyable Time at a Dance.

At the Crystal Palace dance hall at Lake City, Colo., Jessie Landers attempted to shoot Frank McDonald, of whom she was jealous. She fired three shots, one of which killed Louis Estep, a young man. The woman then shot herself, inflicting a probably fatal wound.

Kansas Bank Safe Blown Open.

The Bank of Palmer, Kan., was broken into at 3 o'clock Friday morning, the safe blown open and entirely destroyed and the cash box robbed of $1,100, all it contained. The damage to the safe and building amounts to about $1,800. The burglars escaped, leaving no clew.

CLEVELAND TO DEMOCRACY.

Demands Adherence to Gold Standard and Exhorts His Party to Fight Silver.

In reply to a request from the New York Herald for a statement concerning the Democratic situation President Cleveland Tuesday night sent the following to that newspaper: "I refuse to believe that when the time arrives for deliberate action there will be engrafted upon our Democratic creed a demand for the free, unlimited and independent coinage of silver, because I know the Democratic party is neither unpatriotic nor foolish and because it seems so clear to me that such a course will inflict a very great injury upon every interest of our country which it has been the mission of Democracy to advance, and will result in the lasting disaster to our party organization. There is little hope that, as a means of success, this free-silver proposition, after its thorough discussion during the political campaign, will attract the majority of the voters of the country. My attachment to true Democracy is so strong that I consider its success as identical with the promotion of the country's good. This ought sufficiently to account for my anxiety that no mistake be made at our party convention. In my opinion no effort should be spared to secure such action of the delegates as will avert party demoralization. It is a place for consultation and comparison of views, and those Democrats who believe in the cause of sound money should there be heard and be constantly in evidence. A cause worth fighting for is worth fighting for to the end. If sound-money Democrats suppose there is danger of a mistake being made, such danger should stimulate their activity in averting it, instead of creating discouragement. I am very far from arrogating to myself a controlling influence upon the policy of my party, but as an unflinching Democrat, who has been honored by his party and who desires hereafter no greater political privileges than to occupy the place of private in its ranks, I hope I may not be blamed for saying this much at this time in the interest, as it seems to me, of the grand old organization, so rich in honorable traditions, so justly proud of its achievements, and always so undaunted and brave in its battles for the people's welfare."

THUNDERING AT THE GATES.

Cuban Insurgents Cause Explosions Which Create Panic in Havana.

Havana was startled Saturday night by two explosions. It was soon found that the stone bridges of Christina and Concha and the aqueduct of Fernando Septima were the points that had suffered from the dynamite. The bridges were partially destroyed, and the pipes on the aqueduct, upon which the city is dependent for its water supply, were much damaged. It cannot yet be stated how extensive is the damage done or how long it will require to remedy it. The dynamite was placed by agents of the insurgents. The greatest apprehension is felt on account of the secrecy and effectiveness with which the insurgents have been able to carry out the plan. Fever and smallpox have broken out, which, in the unwholesome state of affairs, threatens to become epidemic. Many are suffering from measles, and there is much intestinal trouble among the inhabitants owing to poor and insufficient food. The failure of the water supply under these conditions is a dire calamity.

COL. CROFTON ASSAILED.

Said to Be Physically Unfit to Longer Command Fort Sheridan.

Col. R. E. A. Crofton, in command of the Fifteenth infantry at Fort Sheridan, has been pronounced physically unfitted for active service by the post surgeon, Major Henry Lippincott, and his assistant surgeon, Captain Charles E. Woodruff. Acting upon the report of the post surgeon, Major General Merritt, commander of the Department of the Missouri, has forwarded a recommendation to the Secretary of War that the colonel be ordered before a retiring board for examination. For a long time matters at the post have not been running smoothly. Col. Crofton has been in several shooting scrapes with his subordinates. He declares he is as physically sound as ever, and says this latest move is the work of his enemies.
